SOCIETY.

I looked and saw a splendid pageantry
Of beautiful women and of lordly men
Taking their pleasure in a flowery plain
Where poppies and the red anemone
And many another leaf of cramoisy
Flickered about their feet and gave their stain
To heels of iron or satin, and the grain
Of silken garments floating far and free
As in the dance they wove themselves or strayed
By twos together or lightly smiled and bowed
Or courtsied to each other or else played
At games of mirth and pastime, unafraid
In their delight, and all so high and proud
They seemed scarce of the earth whereon they trod.

I looked again and saw that flowery space
Stirring, as if alive, beneath the tread
That rested now upon an old man's head
And now upon a baby's gasping face
Or mother's bosom or the rounding grace
Of a girl's throat, and what had seemed the red
Of flowers was blood in gouts and gushes shed
From hearts that broke under that frolic pace,
And now and then from out the dreadful floor
An arm or brow was lifted from the rest,
As if to strike in madness or implore
For mercy, and anon some suffering breast
Heaved from the mass and sank, and as before
The revelers above them thronged and pressed.

SHE WAS AFRAID.

And Took Particular Care to Outwit Those Wicked Night Doctors.

Mme. Kirkholder's servant was getting ready to go home for the night. It was about 9 o'clock in the evening. Just as her bonnet was on her head and her hand on the door to depart, Mme. Kirkholder noticed that the face was aglow with grease—a liberal coat—from ear to ear.

"Tut, tut, Katie!" remonstrated Mme. Kirkholder. "Wash your face before you go. You mustn't go home with such a looking face as that."

Katie muttered something, and taking off her bonnet turned to the sink, as if about to make the improvements suggested. It chanced that just as Katie was again about to depart Mme. Kirkholder was amazed to find her countenance even more tremendous in grease than before.

"What on earth is the matter with your face, Katie?" asked Mme. K. "Why don't you wash away that grease?"

"I'ze afeard of dem yar night doctahs," said Katie faintly.

"What's that?" queried Mme. K. "The night doctors. What in the name of goodness is a night doctor, and what have they to do with you?"

"Why de night doctahs done cotch yo'," replied Katie in a horrified whisper, "an dey takes yo' an bleeds yo' to def. 'Deed dey does. Dey cotches yo' an puts a plastah over yo' mouf so yo' can't squall, an lugs a pusson off som'res an bleeds 'em till dey's daid. An dat's why I done greases all roun my mouf. Dat's so no plastah won't stick, an ef day teches me I'll holler like a wildcat, an yo' bet dey'll done drap me an mosey off. 'Deed I'ze 'feared, Mis Kukholdah, to go onten de dark onless my mouf is greased." Mme. K. said no more, and when Katie slammed the back gate her face was like unto a pan of lard.—Washington Star.

What Cæsar Said.

A little girl lately asked her mother how to pronounce Cæsar's famous laconic utterance. "I really don't know what to tell you," was the answer. "When I studied Latin, we said 'Veni, vidi, vici,' exactly as it is spelled. A few years later they began to use what was called the continental pronunciation and said, 'Veene, veede, veeke.' Now I fancy your collegiate sister would tell us that it was Weene, weede, weeke." The collegian was appealed to accordingly and announced: "No; there is a later way still. We say, 'Wainee, weedee, weekee,' for the very latest." As Lowell complained in his old age, who can pretend to keep up with the gibberish into which the classics are being turned by modern teachers of them?—Philadelphia Press.

A Means of Disinfecting Wells.

Heavy rains are apt to contaminate wells and spread disease; hence Dr. Franck has brought under the notice of the Polytechnic society of Berlin a means of disinfecting wells, which he employs with success. It consists in suspending in the mouth of the well an earthenware dish containing 50 to 100 grams (a gram is about 15 grains) of bromine, which, being volatile in air, forms a dense vapor that fills the well, and is absorbed by the water, thus disinfecting it. The water, it is true, has a slight taste of bromine for a time, but is wholesome enough.—London Globe.

How It Was.

"And where's Sappeigh?" inquired the returned clubman, who was posting himself. "Is he still courting that bright western girl?"

"Oh, no," replied his friend. "She jollied him for six months or more and fooled him at last."

"Ah," with a sympathetic sigh, "she rejected him, did she?"

"Not much. She married him."—Detroit Free Press.

The English Soldier.

An English soldier coming on duty was heard to say to his comrade, "Well, Jim, what's the orders at this post?" Jim replied, "Why, the orders is you're never to leave it till you're killed, and if you see any other man leaving it you're to kill him."—"Recollections of a Military Life," General Sir John Adge.

AN ENGLISH CASUAL.

WHERE TRAMPS GET FOOD AND LODGING FOR WORK.

Josiah Flynt and a Companion Wind Up a Study of Tramp Life In England by a Visit to a "Spike"—Meeting With a Great Friend of Mark Twain.

Josiah Flynt, who has given interesting studies on tramp life in Germany and in this country, has extended his investigations to England. He writes a paper entitled, "Two Tramps In England" in Century. He and his companion, a German student, completed a tour through the provinces with an experience in a "casual" at Notting Hill, London. Mr. Flynt writes:

We appeared at the door of the ward about half past 7 in the evening. A little window was raised, and I stepped forward to state my business. Unconsciously I leaned against the sill of the window, which offended the inspector in charge considerably.

"What's your name?" he thundered. Still leaning on the sill, I gave him my name honestly enough. He then remarked to some person inside that we were not accustomed to such places evidently, and called out, "Stand back, will you!" Back I stood. He cried out again, "Take off your hat!" My hat came off instanter. Still again: "You come in here as if you was a meeleeonary. You're not. You're a casual." I was as meek as could well be. Ryborg was itching to grab the inspector with his long arms. The next question was as to where we had slept the night before.

"Straw stack," I replied.

"None of your impudence! You slept out. Why don't you say so? Have you got any money?"

"A hap'enny, sir."

"Hand it in." In it went. Then I had to tell my trade, which was that of a sailor, and naturally the next question was as to where I was bound.

"To Ameriky, sir, if I can ever get there."

"You're goin to tramp it, aren't you?"

"Yes, sir; that's my intention." But for the life of me I could not see how I was to reach America that way. I was so frightened that I would have told him anything he wanted.

When he was through with us, a kind hearted attendant took us in hand, gave us some gruel and bread, a bath, clean night shirts, and then a cell apiece, in which we slept very well.

As there were only four inmates that morning we were needed for the cleaning up, and so escaped stone breaking, which I dreaded exceedingly, and were put at various light occupations—or rather I was. Ryborg was the victim of his strength. Our breakfast consisted of the same dish as our supper of the night before. I was soon busy as general fireman, scrubber, knife cleaner, coal carrier, dish washer and helper of my sister sufferer, Mrs. Murphy, as she washed her task of towels and shirts. At noon we had pea soup and bread. I enjoyed it, but Ryborg did not. The poor fellow was feeling badly. He had had to scrub nearly 20 cells, and the bending over incident to such a feat had nearly broken his back. At dinner he said plaintively, "Flynt, I want to go home." "So do I," I replied, "but I fancy we're wanted here till tomorrow morning." This proved to be the case, but he felt better in the afternoon and got through comfortably, wheeling nearly a ton of stone from some of the cells to the general pile. He earned his "keep," if ever any poor prisoner did.

I fear I was more shiftless, for about the middle of the afternoon the attendant who was with me at the furnace said: "You might as well rest. Just keep your eye on the fires, that's all." It was kind of him, and as I had at least earned my pea soup and gruel I took his advice. He was kinder to me, I think, because I gave him a corncob pipe which he had had to take away from me the night before. During the day he had asked me several questions about it, and I said, "It's a very decent sort of pipe—coolinlike, you know."

"Doesn't Mark Twain always smoke one o' them pipes?" said he.

"Blest if I know," said I, "but I can well think it."

"I'm a great friend of Mark Twain," he pursued, "an I'm a-thinkin o' gettin one o' them pipes, jest out of respect for him."

"Well," said I, "permit me in the name of your respect to present you with my pipe. Besides you've got it anyhow." He thanked me profusely, and promised to keep it forever. Later in the day he reported it to be just as I had said, "sort o' coolin like." And he was a good friend to me all the rest of my stay in the Notting Hill station.

On Wednesday morning we were turned loose with our two ha'pennies. We were both so happy that we decided to get off the road that very day.

We had been tramps for three weeks, and had walked most of this time fully 15 miles a day. So we looked up my friend at the Temple, and in a few hours were respectable again. That same day I took my tramp clothes out to the casual ward and presented them to my friend the attendant. I had told him the day before that I expected to get new "togs" soon, and he had put in a plea for my old ones. Good luck to him and them.

The Reason Why.

New Parson—Which do you like best, Willie, your day school or your Sunday school?

Willie—My Sunday school.

New Parson—I am glad to hear that. Why do you like your Sunday school the best?

Willie—Because it is only once a week.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Particular.

Conductor—That's a French coin, sir. I can't take it.

Passenger—You can't? You gave it to me in change this morning.

Conductor—Well, you see, I'm more particular than you are.—London Quiver.

WHO SETS THE FASHIONS?

Evidence That the Royal Ladies of England Do Sometimes.

The late Mr. Worth, the Parisian king of dressmakers, once said that it frequently took him as long as three years to educate the public up to one of his fashions, and to have it adopted. He of course has set a great many fashions in his time, but the dressmakers are not responsible for most of the changes that take place.

It is a simpler thing for a man like the Prince of Wales, who is generally admitted to be the best dressed gentleman in Europe, to change a fashion in men's clothing than it is for a lady in society to change the fashion of the time, or to bring in a new one. But any of the recognized fashion leaders, such as the Duchess of Sutherland, the Countess of Dudley, Lady Brooke, the Countess Grosvenor or Mrs. Cornwallis West, can, if they persist long enough, bring in a fashion which will soon become generally popular.

For instance, the Duchess of Portland, after her marriage, had a strong inclination for Malmaison carnations as buttonholes, and wore them on every possible occasion. Before that time they were not much sought after, but very soon all the florists in Bond street and Regent street had a great display of them in their windows.

The Princess of Wales is not a fashion setter, but is one of those most sensible ladies who favor comfortable costumes and tailor made gowns, and who does not run to the extreme modes. She dresses, however, with excellent taste.

Another matter in which the royal family are very conservative is the way in which they wear their hair. At the time when the "bun chignon" came in not one of the young princesses adopted it, although it was extremely fashionable. Curled fringes, as is well known, are very popular with the royal family.

Sometimes the fashions are introduced quite by chance. A few years ago, when a well known beauty was married to a young nobleman, the bride decreed that her bridesmaids should wear dark velvet hats with ostrich feathers. At first every one was very much surprised, but the idea caught on, and during 1892 at two-thirds of the fashionable weddings dark velvet hats were worn with light dresses.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

SMASHED HIS BAGGAGE.

And Then the Man Who Owned the Trunk Had Something to Say.

"It's queer how people stand it," said the man with the baggy trousers as the hotel baggage wagon came up from the depot and passed the window.

"Stand what particular thing?" was asked.

"Permitting the railroad companies to smash their trunks as they do. There are two on that load which will have to go to the shop for repairs, and the owners will foot the bill and not say a word."

"Well, isn't that your way?"

"No, sir, and it hasn't been for a good many years. Last spring a baggageman threw my trunk off his wagon in front of a Boston hotel and busted it. He drove off singing as I stood looking at the wreck. Half an hour later I walked in on him at the depot and said:

" 'I want $9 of you.'

" 'What for?'

" 'For smashing my trunk in front of the Continental.'

" 'You get out! Trunks are liable to be damaged, and whoever heard of anyone having to pay for them?'

" 'I'll show you a case right off. You had no more license to bust that trunk than you had to bust my head. You either come down or I'll begin proceedings.'

"What will you do?"

" 'I'll sue you the first thing tomorrow. I'll not only sue you, but I'll garnishee your wages. I'll make it cost you at least $20 to get out of it, even if you don't pay for the trunk.'

"He blustered and defied me," said the man of the trousers, "but before 10 o'clock he came to the hotel and offered me $7 to settle. I took a written promise on his part to handle all trunks with reasonable consideration thereafter and closed the case. He admitted to me that he had probably damaged 5,000 trunks in his life, but that no one had ever kicked before. He didn't suppose a trunk owner had the slightest legal right on earth, and he probably didn't get over looking pale for a week."—Detroit Free Press.

Cheap Lodging For a Prince.

Accidentally a bill of an inn at Passeier, Tyrol, was discovered among the papers of a recently deceased member of the official household of Emperor William I, which gives an idea of the cost of living at that time. In 1851 William, then prince of Prussia, with a suit of six companions, stopped at the inn. The lodging for the company amounted to 12 kreutzer—5 cents. The breakfast coffee was more expensive, however—6 kreutzer for each cup—i. e., 2½ cents. A dish of milk was 1 cent, three eggs for 1 cent. The dinner at the inn, consisting of soup, meat, roast, fruit, preserves and wine, cost 27 kreutzer each, or less than 11 cents apiece. The total expense of lodging, breakfast and dinner for the party amounted to 2 florins and 25 kreutzer, or about 90 cents.

St. Elmo's Light.

The atmospheric delusion known as St. Elmo's fire, or St. Elmo's light, gets its name from a curious old legend of St. Adelelm, who, having started one dark and stormy night to visit the bishop of Anvergue, lighted a candle to guide him on the way. It was wholly unprotected by anything like a covering; but, notwithstanding the fact that the wind blew furiously and the rain fell in torrents, "it continued to burn with a bright and steady flame." The news of this miraculous occurrence soon spread in all Catholic countries and soon found place in the monkish manuscripts, where it was declared that the good Adelelm must have really been attended by St. Elmo and his fire.—St. Louis Republic.

WHEN SHE GOES BY.

When she goes by with head erect,
A springtide blossom fair and sweet,
I wonder if she can't suspect
How heads are turned along the street,
Or how I try to catch her eye
And win a smile when she goes by.

When she goes by with wind tossed curls
And cheeks where winter roses blow,
She quite eclipses all the girls
It's been my happiness to know.
Oh, how those fairy feet do fly,
No loitering, when she goes by.

When she goes by, gay, debonair,
With graceful swaying figure, though
To follow her I do not dare,
My heart is taken into tow,
And I can only long and sigh
And rail at fate when she goes by.

IRISH MUD CABINS.

How the Dingy Dwelling Places Are Constructed and Furnished.

The mud cabin in Ireland consists of two rooms and possibly a small semidetached outhouse which is used as a storeroom for perishable articles. There is not a chink in the walls or thatch eave a narrow chimney, which seldom if ever answers its purpose. The doorway faces the east and emits the smoke. What little light penetrates inside through the tiny window discloses the deep chocolate stain from the eternal turf reek which pervades the atmosphere of the interior, and literally paints walls, roof and furniture a uniform color. The furniture is rough and also scanty, a few stools atoning for the occasional complete absence of chairs.

The mud floor is always more or less wet from the patter of the children's bare feet or from the animals which have free access to the house. At night there is a goodly company within the walls of this spacious mansion. In the inside room there are two or three box beds or berths, where the children sleep, according to their age and sex. From 9 to 12 is not an uncommon number in a family. In the state berth in the calliogh, or recess at the side of the hearth, the father and mother repose unscreened from the live stock of the farm and breathe the same atmosphere as some eight quadrupeds besides the poultry. Pigs, cattle, dogs, cats, and probably a horse or donkey, have their bed space respectively, and jealously resent any encroachment by a bedfellow.

Astonishing as it may appear, there are hardly any disagreeable odors. The overpowering smell of the peat smoke evidently acts as a complete disinfectant, and fortunately it is innoxious to the inhabitants of the hovel. Equally astonishing is the fact that the whole community is in comparative harmony, and even the babies rarely cry. There is plenty of occupation for all the family who are able and willing to work, the mother doing little else but nurse the youngest infant.—Cornhill Magazine.

Met by Chance.

An amusing story is told of Robert Franz, the famous German song writer, and another equally celebrated composer. The incident occurred soon after the publication of Franz's famous "Open Letter to Edward Hanslick," in which he made severe criticism upon some musical work of the composer, Johannes Brahms.

Franz had occasion at that time to take a five or six hours' trip by rail. In the compartment with him was a little man with whom he fell into conversation. The fellow travelers found each other delightful and whiled the hours away in agreeable talk, which did not turn upon music.

When the train reached Franz's destination, he took out his card case, saying to his companion:

"You have made me pass a most delightful afternoon. Allow me to give you my card."

The stranger seemed highly gratified and offered Franz his card in return. Each looked at the bit of pasteboard he had received in amazement. The stranger's eyes opened wide at reading the name of his merciless critic, "Dr. Robert Franz," while Franz himself was equally astounded at reading on the card in his hand, "Johannes Brahms."

There was no time for mutual explanations, but each of the musicians had discovered that, however their ideas might differ from a musical standpoint, they were at least admirable traveling companions and had found much to enjoy in each other.—Youth's Companion.

Max O'Rell as a "Slugger."

Max O'Rell tells many stories about other people. Here is one that in Montreal he told about himself. When lecturing in an Australian bush town, he waxed eloquent on the athletic feats of Britons. "After each assertion came a deep toned 'It's a lie' from a drunken auditor. The interruptions became unbearable. 'Give me a stop of five minutes,' said Max to his audience. Off went his coat, down jumped the lecturer, and in a moment he had collared the interrupter and bundled him out. 'If I had known you meant to do that,' said the manager, 'I'd have charged double prices.' " And he could easily have got them.

Pope's Favorite.

Pope deemed the "Essay on Man" his most polished production, but was so fond of revising his poetry that the printed copy contained almost one marginal note for every line. If his wishes had been fully carried out, the second edition would have had so many changes as to be practically a new work.

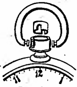
Here's the Idea

Of the Non-pull-out Bow

The great watch saver. Saves the watch from thieves and falls—cannot be pulled off the case—costs nothing extra.



The bow has a groove on each end. A collar runs down inside the pendant (stem) and fits into the grooves, firmly locking the bow to the pendant, so that it cannot be pulled or twisted off.

Can only be had with cases stamped with this trade mark.

Jas. Boss Filled Watch Cases are now fitted with this great bow (ring). They look and wear like solid gold cases. Cost only about half as much, and are guaranteed for twenty years. Sold only through watch dealers. Remember the name

SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia, wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system, as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.

Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject, long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as the thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of four hundred forty-three and 80-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Viola M. Sanders and J. H. Sanders, her husband, mortgagors, to Security Savings and Loan Association, mortgagee, bearing date the first day of March, 1892, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the eighth day of March, 1892, at 9 o'clock a. m. in book 81 of mortgages on pages 82 to 88, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: Lots twenty (20), twenty-one (21) and twenty-two (22) in block thirty-nine (39) of the original townsite of Thief River Falls, according to the plat thereof on file and of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said County of Polk and State of Minnesota, said land lying and being in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the court house, in the City of Crookston, in said county and state, on the 22nd day of July, 1895, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of four hundred forty-three and 80-100 dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five ($25.00) dollars, attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

THE RUSSIAN KNOUT.

A BRUTAL PUNISHMENT INFLICTED IN THE CZAR'S DOMAIN.

Claim That Its Use In Some Respects Has Been Abolished—The Use of the Cruel Instrument Described by a Political Exile Who Has Suffered In Siberia.

One never knows for certain how much of the knout is left in modern Russia. The telegraph wire still at times carries the horrid whiz of it from remote Siberia, and only the other day I saw mention in news from St. Petersburg of a new imperial ukase, "abolishing the use of the knout for the punishment of offenses committed by the peasantry, which has hitherto been completely at the mercy of the local judges in this respect." I was under the impression that the "local judges" had been deprived of their knout for 20 years or more, but the sender of this message adds that "statistics were submitted to the czar, showing that in ten years 3,000 persons, mostly guilty of thefts of produce, had died after punishment with the knout."

Granted the infliction of the knout, the 3,000 deaths are easily believed. The instrument itself, supposing this report to be true, evidently dies harder than its victims. But even in Russia, where the rod and its equivalents have had a more extended and bloody existence than in any other European state, the humaner spirit of the age has been felt, and one is disposed to regard as exaggerated the statements just quoted. Certainly we had been given to believe that the knout was abolished for all but the gravest offense as long ago as 1866. But Russia has never been governed wholly by its written laws, and there are regions of that empire where a ukase may be slow to reach the "local judges."

The merciful edict of 1866, however, stopped short at the confines of Siberia, and it was with the object of learning to what extent the knout is used in the Siberia of today that I sought an interview with a distinguished and very interesting exile, M. Alexander Sochaczewski, on a visit to England. M. Sochaczewski, a Pole by birth, an artist by profession, and in England to arrange for the exhibition of a picture which will move the sympathies of every friend of the victims of the czar, was a political exile in Siberia at the age of 21 and suffered 4½ years in the mines, during 2½ of which he carried, night and day, chains of which marks are permanently graven on his ankles. Twenty years in all were the days of his exile, and he counts himself happy that he did not, like so many of his comrades in oppression, perish under that cruel yoke. Indeed he speaks without bitterness and says that even in Siberia one may often forget oneself.

M. Sochaczewski could say much about the knout. He had been many times a witness of its infliction. The knout, in fact, was in use in the mines during the whole of M. Sochaczewski's exile, and those who were condemned to it suffered in public.

At the present day M. Sochaczewski believed that it was practically abolished in 1893, but the governor retains a certain discretionary power, which may mean much in Siberia. Would M. Sochaczewski describe the punishment? He took a half sheet of note paper and a pen and made a rapid sketch. "That is the knout," he said. A hand of leather, as is well known, serves the executioner for a handle, and the knout itself is a single thong of leather, rough and very hard, tapering toward the extremity, where it is weighted with a ball of lead. With this the executioner—who is generally a reprieved murderer—can inflict as great or as little suffering as he pleases.

"Thus," said M. Sochaczewski, "the prisoners would sometimes give him a ruble to prove his skill, when he would strike one of them, apparently with full force, across the palm of the hand, but the blow would scarcely be felt and would not leave a scratch. With the same instrument he could kill at a single stroke, and was occasionally bribed by a condemned prisoner to do so, breaking the ribs and almost tearing out the heart.

What number of strokes, I asked M. Sochaczewski, were ordinarily inflicted?

He replied that it was of no great consequence, inasmuch as punishment with the knout was generally regarded as a sentence of death. A man under sentence of 100 lashes might die at the third lash, in which case the remaining 97 would be given to the corpse. It was possible, if the executioner did not employ his whole art or strength, for the victim to escape death, but he would then inevitably be a cripple for the rest of his life. There were men in the hospital in his time whom the knout had maimed forever.

I asked whether the knout exhausted the resources of penal discipline in Siberia. "By no means," said M. Sochaczewski.

He took up his pen again, and scratched me a picture of a whip called the plet, which has three tails of twisted leather, with bits of metal at the tips. It is a little less deadly than the knout, but an expert flogger can kill his victim at the fifth stroke. There is a difference in flogging with the knout and with the plet. The knout, like the English "cat," is laid across the back. The three tails of the plet score the back downward, from the nape of the neck to the loins, and every stroke, properly given, carries away three strips of skin and bites well into the flesh. Yes. M. Sochaczewski had seen many comrades suffer under the plet. "Protest? To what end?" To protest was to be tied up oneself. The very flogger ran the risk of being cut to pieces with knout or plet if he failed to kill or maim his victim.—St. Paul's.

EATING AND EATERS.

IT IS NOT GOOD FORM TO DO MORE THAN TASTE AND SIP.

If Invited to a Smart Dinner, Dine Before You Go—How Dinners and Banquets of Fabulous Cost Are Got Up and Served by Caterers.

An American author and musician told a queer little story the other day that ran like this:

"Went to the opera; sat in a box with two ladies and three men; social leaders; very swell; felt out of place; heard nothing but talk and chatter; missed all the singing and music; after the opera, supper at the Waldorf; expected that, of course; went prepared—very hungry; all the dainties of the season on the table, but nobody ate; wine in abundance; all drinking; more talk and gossip; wouldn't eat alone, so starved; not polite to eat nowadays, I'm told; proper to mince along, taste a morsel and talk; don't like it; no more fashionable suppers for me!"

Another man, an habitual diner out, remarked:

"I invariably eat my dinner at home before going out to dine. Nobody thinks of eating at a public dinner nowadays. It is the height of ill breeding! At private dinners with ladies he who eats is voted a bore. He must sip and taste and talk; that's all that is expected of him. If I didn't eat at home I'd starve to death."

Perhaps something in recent years has altered the belief that the nearest way to a man's heart is down his throat. Hosts used to feed their guests to put them in good humor, to make their visits agreeable. Everybody at the table ate and drank and all went merrily.

Better dinners than those provided today the world never saw, but they are not eaten. New York dinners are superior in many respects to those of any other city in the world. The people have money and are willing to pay for the best the market affords, and there is no doubt that the New York market is unsurpassed. There are more refinements, too, at an American entertainment than elsewhere, more variety. Still it is well to dine at your own table before going to the house of a fashionable friend. At the latter you are expected to entertain, not to partake of what is set before you. Leave that to the servants or to the caterer. Rich folk used to have their own servants prepare the dinner when guests were expected, but nowadays everything is left to the caterer. It is so much less trouble, you know. Why worry for days arranging a dinner for a dozen or two of one's friends when it can be better done by the caterer? We have plenty of caterers. Some have grown rich and proud on the feasts and banquets given by the fashionable set.

When a millionaire wants to give a dinner he sends for his favorite, tells him the number of guests expected, advances a few ideas on the general style of the entertainment, names the day and hour, and says, "I leave everything to you." The menu is submitted, and, if satisfactory, both as to price and dishes, the preparation goes on.

The entire dinner is prepared at the establishment of the caterer, after which, on the day appointed, it is carefully packed in hampers and boxes and conveyed to the house where it is to be eaten. Most private houses are fitted with excellent ranges, and on them the caterer's chefs do the cooking. Positively nothing is left to the home cook.

The caterer takes entire charge of the kitchen. He could not be responsible for the dinner otherwise. The dining room also is turned over to him, for the dinner itself is scarcely more important than the arrangement of the table or tables.

Certain unwritten rules are followed in this respect. When there are less than 20 persons they are usually seated at one large table, rectangular or round; but when that number is exceeded it is the custom to use small tables, as they can be better served. Six persons to a table is the rule. The expansion of society in New York in the last 12 years has been very great, and the size of the private dinner has increased enormously. It used to be considered a big thing to have 10 or 12 guests, but now it is common enough to have from 20 to 80. Where receptions a few years ago numbered from 300 to 400 guests, they now number from 600 to 1,000.

The cost of a dinner depends on the wines and flowers. An excellent dinner can be served for, say, 20 persons at $10 a plate, the flowers will cost about $15 and the wines from $4 to $15 a head. At Mrs. Astor's famous ball, in the winter of 1889-90, the finest entertainment she ever gave, the wines on the supper table were very select. Her Steinberger Cabinet cost $15 a bottle.

The dinner to Charles O'Conor was one of the finest ever given in this city. It was managed by Sam Ward and cost over $50 a plate. The menus alone cost $6 apiece. The decorations were most elaborate, the tables being literally covered with rare flowers. The wines were the costliest that could be had. Some of Sam Ward's priceless Madeira was handed around. The guests numbered 50.

The dinner to President Andrew Johnson on the occasion of his visit to New York, in 1866, cost $100 a plate. Leland Stanford's dinner to Mrs. Grant, about five years ago, caused a great deal of talk all over the country. It was believed that the 18 guests ate from plates of gold and silver; that the tablecloth was edged with point duchess lace; that under each wineglass there was a napkin of the same costly fabric, and under each finger bowl a Japanese mat that cost $50, and that the terrapin were served in individual silver tureens.—New York Press.

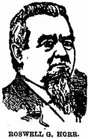
THE BIG TALK IS ON

HORR AND HARVEY BEGIN THEIR FINANCIAL DEBATE

Which Is to Last for Ten Days—Each States What He Expects to Prove "Coin's Financial School" the Basis of the Discussion.

CHICAGO, July 16.—The field of the cloth of gold, with the significance of chivalry, is outrivalled in Chicago. In elaborateness of arrangement at least and celebrity of combatants, the majority of spectators present were persuaded rightly or wrongly that the up-to-date tournament equalled, if it did not surpass, the famous occasions when the knightly champions of old had a joust that challenged the attention of Christendom.

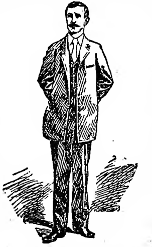


ROSWELL G. HORR.

This affair is strictly modern in every detail, and if lacking in display of tinsel and plumes seemed all the greater, to the witnesses who took it in all seriousness, that it was a contest of intellect instead of muscle. Certainly both sides displayed an earnestness and vigor worthy of an encounter that it was apparently felt by them would attract the keenest national and perhaps international interest.

Nothing Ever Like It.

No such "big talk" had ever been planned before, it was claimed, as this 10 day go-as-you-please match between the chosen representatives of the opposing sides of the money question—Roswell G. Horr and William Harvey.



WILLIAM HOPE HARVEY.

It was about 2 p. m. when the witty ex-congressman from Michigan, now a resident of New York, and the sharp Colorado newspaper man, now a citizen of Chicago, signified to the judges and the select audience present by invitation at the Illinois club, on Ashland avenue, that all was in readiness for the successive 1,000 word broadsides that with three minute rests were to last three hours a day for ten successive days. The judges were ex-Solicitor General of the United States Charles H. Aldrich and Hon. Henry Miller.

Before the debate proper was begun, Mr. Horr and Mr. Harvey, by an agreement between them, each made a statement of his position and what he expected to prove. Mr. Horr stated that he had never read a book in which he found so much of error and so little fact as was contained in "Coin's Financial School," which is taken as a basis for the discussion. He expected that when the debate ended he would have proved that this was the case. On the other hand, Mr. Harvey expected to prove that the propositions set forth in that book were substantially true, and he summarized them in 12 propositions for the purpose of showing briefly what they were:

1. That silver and gold are the money of the constitution; that the silver dollar was the unit of value in our coinage system in this country from 1792 to 1873, just as the yard stick was the measure of length. That gold was measured in this silver unit, and concurrent coinage given to it (gold); that silver and gold combined constituted the legal standard of value in this county till 1863; silver measured gold; the two together measured all other property.

2. That the act of 1873 was surreptitiously passed.

3. That during the period 1792 to 1893 the mints were open to the unlimited coinage of both metals into primary or redemption money, and that both were treated as such. That during that period people had a right to have either metal coined into full legal tender money, and that the option was with the debtor to pay in coins of either metal.

4. That this bimetallic system made an unlimited demand for both metals to be coined into money, increased the demand for these metals, and so long as this law authorizing anyone to coin 371¼ grains of silver and 23 2-10 grains of gold into a dollar, there was no one willing to sell either for less than a dollar.

5. That the option to pay in either metal caused the cheaper of the two metals to be used, and transferred the demand from the dearer to the cheaper metal, and restored its relative commercial value. We are for both silver and gold. We are called silver men because we are defending the metal that has been demonetized.

6. That it is to the interest of the United States to act independently in the remonetization of silver at the ratio to gold of 16 to 1, without waiting for the action of any other nation.

7. That monometallism consists in the use of the dearer of the two metals to the exclusion of the other, as primary or redemption money. That monometallism is an experiment on trial for the first time in the history of the world, and began with the period 1873. That it is impractical and impossible as a stable money measurement of values; is not based on scientific financial principles; is in the interest of the money lenders, and against the interest of the property owners and laborers.

8. That the gold unit, as the measure of values, with no concurrent coinage, or another metal to assist it in performing the functions of primary money, has caused the fall in prices, as compared with 1872, when the world's prices of property were measured in the money mass of both metals. That all prices of property and labor have declined accordingly as compared with 1872, except when held up relatively by increased demand or short supply, or combines and trusts, or special reasons affecting a particular service or property, That the average price of all production, except gold, will show this decline is adjusting itself to the gold standard. And that when we include in labor the unemployed and time lost by those employed, there is a fall in wages of one-half as compared with 1872. That labor is adjusting itself to the gold standard measurement of values.

9. That the decline in prices covering a period of 22 years has as a rule made all classes of productive mercantile and manufacturing business unprofitable. That a falling market covering a long period destroys the prospective profits based on cost of purchase and production and a majority of our most astute business men cannot avoid failure or loss of capital, under these conditions.

10. That it has worked a hardship and injury to debtors who, unconscious of the causes that continuously reduced the prices of their property, have contracted debts during these 22 years. That this fall in prices caused a sacrifice of property to purchase the dollars with which to liquidate these debts. That this has caused the renewal of debts, the contraction of new debts to pay old debts, and an enlarged volume of all debts. That this unjustly takes from a debtor his property and emphasizes the importance of a stable money measurement of values.

11. That in the end no one is benefited by a fall in price but the money lender, the owner of money and securities payable in money, fixed incomes.

12. That the foregoing facts and conditions produced by a change in our money measurement of values, will impoverish the masses of the people, and points by reason of the disturbances that it will produce, to the overthrow of the republic.

CORNELL BADLY BEATEN.

Finish Eight Lengths Behind Trinity, Utterly Exhausted.

HENLEY, July 11.—Cornell and Trinity Hall started in the fourth heat of the trials for the grand challenge cup at 12:30 p. m. At the half-mile Cornell was leading, but Trinity Hall won the race by eight lengths, the Cornell crew being utterly exhausted at the finish. As the Cornell boat crossed the finish line Fennell tumbled from his seat in a dead faint.

HENLEY-ON-THE-THAMES, July 12.—in the final heat for the grand challenge cup the Trinity Hall, Cambridge Rowing Club crew, which defeated Cornell, beat the New College, Oxford, boat club crew and thus captured the trophy, representing the blue ribbon of aquatics.

TEACHERS ELECTED OFFICERS.

DENVER, July 13.—At the morning session of the National Educational association, the nominating committee reported the following officers, who were unanimously elected:

President, Newton C. Dougherty, Peoria, Ills.; first vice president, Nicholas Murray Butler, New York City; secretary, Irwin Shepard, Winona, Minn.; treasurer, I. C. McNeill, Kansas City, Mo.

Eleven additional vice presidents and a director from each state were also chosen.

The general subject of the papers for the morning session was "The Duty and Opportunity of the Schools in Promoting Patriotism and Good Citizenship."

MADISON SUMMER SCHOOL.

Four Hundred Students Listen to the Opening Lecture.

MADISON, Wis., July 16.—The Columbian Catholic summer school is assured success. The first lecture at Fuller opera house by Rev. P. J. Danehy of St. Paul was attended by 400 and it is known as many more will arrive within a day or two. Father Danehy gave a brilliant address on the origin and development of the canon. At the opening of the exercises, the approval and blessing of the pope on the school was read. The Latin original was addressed to Cardinal Gibbons.

BLACK FLAGS OF FORMOSA.

Japanese Preparing an Attack Both by Land and Sea.

HONG KONG, July 16.—A force of 7,000 Japanese troops has left Tuatula to attack the black flags at Tai-Wan Fua, Island of Formosa. A battle between the opposing troops is expected to take place on Saturday next, July 20. A strong naval force will co-operate with the land force of the Japanese. Reports received here from the south part of the Island of Formosa, show that all is quiet there.

Threw Arms Overboard.

KINGSTON, July 16.—The British warship Tartar seized the schooner World Monday in these waters. A number of Cuban passengers on board the schooner on the approach of the warship began throwing overboard a large quantity of arms and ammunition which had been concealed in the hold. When the searching party from the warship boarded the World, they found only tobacco on board.

THE CONVENTION OVER.

Christian Endeavorites Finish Their Labors at Boston.

BOSTON, July 16.—The big Christian Endeavor convention closed during the evening, after a six days' session. During that time about 500 meetings have been held. Approximately 50,000 men and women have come from all corners of the North American continent as delegates. Others have come from strange and distant lands, and the most powerful nations have been represented in this vast gathering. Mr. Walsh of the hotel committee reports that the total registration of delegates present at this convention was 56,285.

Three great meetings were held last night. Consecration services were led by President Clark in Mechanics' hall, by Secretary Baer in tent Williston, and by Rev. Nehemiah Boyton, D. D., at tent Endeavor.

Resolutions were adopted at all the meetings calling on Queen Victoria to use her influence and authority to better the condition of Christians in Turkey. The petition will also be presented to President Cleveland.

Thousands of the delegates in the afternoon visited Bunker Hill, the Washington elm, the Old South meetinghouse, Faneuil hall and the Old North church. These trips were taken by the delegates in small bands, each being in charge of some local Endeavorer, familiar with the places visited and able to tell their history.

At a meeting of the trustees San Francisco was selected as the meeting place of the convention in 1897.

The report of Secretary Baer shows a gain of 7,750 societies for the year, the largest increase for any consecutive 12 months during the 14 years of the body's existence. The total number of societies is 41,229, including 2,645 in the United Kingdom, Australia 1,509, Africa 80, China 32, France 64, India 117, Japan 59, Madagascar 93, Mexico 25, Turkey 39, West India Islands 63, and so on until every country is represented save five—Italy, Russia, Iceland, Sweden and Greece. The total membership is 2,473,949.

MICHIGAN MINERS OUT.

ISHPEMING, Mich., July 16.—The demand for an advance in pay has been refused by the Negaunee mine operators and the men have gone on strike. The miners have been dissatisfied for some time past and many of them are very determined and may remain out for some time.

About 1,000 Negaunee men marched in a body to the Ishpeming mines at noon. They proposed asking the Ishpeming miners to join them and in case they refuse to force them to quit work. The Ishpeming miners are satisfied as a rule to continue work a few weeks longer in the hope of a voluntary raise on the part of the mining companies, but the trimmers and common laborers are much dissatisfied with their wages. The demand of the Negaunee men is for an increase of 10 cents a car on the contract price and about 15 per cent to trimmers and other laborers.

Gold Going Abroad.

NEW YORK, July 13.—Gold to the amount of $250,000 has been engaged for shipment to Europe by Messrs. Slage, Colgate & Co.

Chicago Aldermen Indicted.

CHICAGO, July 13.—The special grand jury, called to investigate corruption in the city council, relative to the Alderman Martin ice ordinance, voted to indict Alderman William Finkler on two charges of soliciting bribes, and Alderman Charles Martin on similar charges. These true bills are expected to be returned to Judge Tuthill at once.

IT ANNOYED HIM.

He Came From the West and Was Puzzled That New Yorkers Knew It.

His coat was a trifle too long and his trousers an inch too wide at the knee to be strictly and exactly fashionable; but, aside from these nice discriminations, he was dressed according to the dictates of the fashion autocrats.

We took the "L" together at Park place, and I noticed a puzzled expression, half amusement, half annoyance, on his face. At Thirty-third street he surrendered his seat to an elderly woman and stood in the aisle in front of where I sat. It was evident that he was anxious to tell some one of the subjects on his mind, so I was not surprised when he caught my eye and opened the conversation.

"Just now," he said, "as I was hurrying to the station, a man caught hold of my arm and stopped me. He was a respectable looking fellow, well clothed, and wore a grayish beard parted in the middle.

"'I've been on a drunk,' the man said to me, 'and I am sobering up. I live in Hackensack, and I want to get home. I haven't a cent and want a quarter.'

"I looked him over carefully," continued my chance acquaintance, "concluded he was telling the truth and gave him the money. As I hurried on, he shouted after me:

"'I knew you were from the west, and I knew you would give me the money. They are white out there!'

"Now, what I want to know," said my acquaintance, "is how did he know I was from the west? It's true, but how did he know it? Would you know it? Am I marked? Have I any tag on me to tell others that I am a westerner?"

"None that I know of," I assured him, "unless it be such little things as giving your seat up to ladies. That generally indicates that a man is not a native New Yorker."

Sunlight.

Seek the sunlight is the advice of all present day hygienists. Patients on the sunny side of the hospital ward recover soonest. The person who always walks on the sunny side of the street outlives his shade seeking brother by ten years. Sleep in rooms where the sun has shed its rays all day. Bask in the sun all you can, and your druggist's and doctor's notes will go to protest.—New York

A Rope Barometer.

In the office of the Des Moines Register is the best barometer in the state. It consists of an ordinary rope attached to the carrier box between the first and fourth floors, making it nearly 60 feet long. This rope is wonderfully sensitive to changes in the atmosphere. At least 24 hours before the average rain it begins to tighten by the absorption of moisture. Its predictions nearly always come true.

A MORMON PUZZLE.

The System of Naming Streets In Salt Lake City Is Confusing.

In Salt Lake City they name streets as nowhere else on earth. For general confusion to a newcomer no other system equals it. In the long run it has its advantages, for it not only guides you to any street with pomp and ceremony, but it sharpens your hearing and encourages mental concentration. The street system of Salt Lake originates at Temple square, wherein stand the tabernacle, the general assembly hall and the temple which was 36 years in building. A wall 10 or 12 feet high incloses the square. The streets passing it were named East Temple, South Temple, West Temple and North Temple respectively.

East Temple street is the principal business thoroughfare of the city, and its name has been changed to Main street. The first street south of and parallel to South Temple street is named First South street. East of Main street it is East First South street; west of Main street it is West First South street. The numbering of the houses begins at Main street and runs each way, every house number having an E or a W appended, as 320E. Proceeding south each street that crosses Main is numbered in rotation, Second South, Third South, and so on, all being further divided into East and West. The same plan is followed north, east and west of the temple, and at a certain crossing the streets running north and south are divided for numbering, and each wing is given its prefix of North or South. When you start out to find a number on East Fifth South street, the same number on South Fifth East won't do at all, and if you are trying to find your way from a remote place on North Twelfth West street to an indefinite number on East Sixth South, between South Eighth East and South Ninth East, you would do well to start before dark and keep perfectly sober. Boxing the compass is child's play by comparison.—Kansas City Star.

Holmes' Chicago Residence Contains Many Mysterious Apartments.

SECRET CHAMBERS FOUND.

Hangman's Bloody Noose and More Human Bones Unearthed.

CHICAGO, July 24.—Bones and articles of clothing were turned up in the basement of Holmes' house during the day. Some of the bones were from the butcher shop, but others resembled those of a human foot. In a chest holding secret belongings of Holmes the police found a vest, identified as one long worn by Holmes, upon which there are dark stains resembling blood. In a box were found a thin shirt and other articles of underwear. The shirt had the initials "J. B. D." worked in red letters. The box was found under the floor and was covered with a layer of firebrick. In the cellar near where the bones were found was a woman's shoe on the sole. As the earth near where these articles were found was not removed in laying the foundations of the house no reason for their burial can be assigned by the police except to hide murder. Close by is the bottom of the shaft which made quick connection between the top of the house and the basement, while just over the spot is the blind stairway which leads into the third floor by a trap door placed under a stationary bath tub.

A meeting of the detectives engaged in the examination of the house was held during the evening and they announced that, in their opinion, the house had been constructed for the purpose of deliberate slaughter. More care than ever will now be taken in searching the premises.

Hangman's Bloody Rope.

In a noosed rope, stained dark about the knot, the police think they have made an important discovery. The rope, which was found hidden beneath a quantity of rubbish, is of considerable length and strong. At one end is a plaited loop and the other a running, or "hangman's noose." About the knot and on the rope near the noose were found several dark spots, which the police immediately concluded were bloodstains.

The length of the rope is such that, were the plaited loop attached to the wall upstairs of Holmes' secret dumb waiter shaft, a body hanging from the noose would just clear the floor at the bottom of the shaft. This coincidence convinced some of the detectives that Holmes' alleged victims had been pushed through the upstairs door to the dumb waiter and strangled to death in the shaft below. Others of the officers, however, refused to accept the theory and the rope was submitted to an analysis to determine the nature of the stains.

A Warrant for Holmes.

H. H. Holmes will be charged with the crime of murder in the city of Chicago in the morning. A warrant for his arrest on that charge will be sworn out by A. Minier, nephew of Julia L. Conner, of Muscatine, Ia. Holmes will be charged in the warrant with having murdered Mrs. Conner some time between Aug. 1 and Nov. 1, 1892. The warrant will be placed in the hands of Inspector Fitzpatrick by Mr. Minier, and, while it cannot be served at the present time it will be acted upon the instant that he is freed from the charge pending against him in Philadelphia.

STICKS TO HIS FORMER STORY.

Holmes Makes a Further Statement Regarding the Pietzel Children.

PHILADELPHIA, July 24.—At his own request H. H. Holmes, insurance swindler and alleged murderer, was brought into the office of District Attorney Graham and allowed to make a statement. It consisted substantially of a repetition of the Hatch story, and, despite rigid cross-examination, he persisted in his previous statements.

To prove his assertion, Holmes produced the diary kept by himself and wife in Toronto, where, he alleges, he gave the Pietzel children to Hatch. The diary would have confirmed some of his statements had not his wife given additional information. She declared that while they were living together in a Toronto hotel Holmes went away for two days, saying that he was going on a fishing trip. When he returned he was tired and there was mud on his trousers.

The President Places Employes of Pension Agencies on the List.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—The president has issued an order placing employes of all pension agencies under civil service rules.

THE BOYCOTT ON BANKS.

Secretary Carlisle of the Opinion That No Serious Results Will Follow.

CHICAGO, July 20.—A special to The Daily News from Washington says: The treasury, from Secretary Carlisle down to his subordinates who have charge of banks and the currency, were discussing the threats of boycott by the Knights of Labor against national bank notes. It was about the only subject talked of, but after a careful consideration of the question in all its phases, Secretary Carlisle expressed the opinion to one of his advisors that no serious results would follow such a boycott. His conclusion was based upon the figures in regard to the circulation of national bank notes.

The amount of these outstanding June 1, 1895, was only $206,579,490, and of this amount about $20,000,000 is held by banks. National bank notes have never been made legal tender by statute, so that it is true that it would be impossible to force any person to accept them in individual transactions. They are, however, available for use by the government in the payment of all its obligations, except for interest on the public debt, and the redemption of national currency.

THE CONVENTION OVER

Baptist Young People at Baltimore Held Numerous Services.

BALTIMORE, July 22.—The services on the last day of the Baptist Young People's Union of America were numerous and impressive. The general prayer and praise service commenced at 8:30, and was led by Rev. W. E. Riley of Chicago. The topic was "Faith-Inspired Living." At 10 o'clock there was an adjournment to church services, the pulpit of every evangelical church in Baltimore being occupied by a Baptist preacher. In the afternoon there was a second praise and prayer service. Rev. B. E. Lovett of Davenport, Ia., being the leader. The evening service of prayer and praise was assisted at by a great congregation and was led by Rev. F. G. McKeever of New London, Conn. The convention wound up with a consecration service.

Officers of Baptist Young People.

Suicide or Accident.

ST. PAUL, July 24.—Police Sergeant Zirelbach, who has been missing since Friday, was doubtless drowned. Saturday afternoon he went to White Bear lake. He embarked in a rowboat, which drifted ashore later bearing the sergeant's coat and a single oar. Circumstances point to suicide or accidental drowning. The body has not been recovered.

SEVENTEEN KILLED

WHOLESALE SLAUGHTER OF INDIANS IN WYOMING.

Bannocks Said to Be Preparing to Retaliate by the Massacre of All the Whites in Jackson Hole—They Are Awaiting an Attack.

MARKET LAKE, Ida., July 23.—On July 13, 30 men left Jacksons Hole to arrest all Indians breaking the game laws of Wyoming. In Hoback canon they surprised a camp of 17 Indians and took them all prisoners and started with them for Jacksons Hole. In the canon they tried to escape and all the Indians were killed except one pappoose, who was brought into the Hole. There were 133 fresh elkskins in this camp.

John N. Carnes, a squawman, and the oldest settler in Jacksons Hole, has gone over into Idaho and says every settler in Jackson's Hole will be butchered. There were 300 Bannock warriors on Hoback river when Carnes was there, and he says all squaws have been sent away and that the bucks are daily joining the main band.

Jacksons Hole settlers are now intrenched and awaiting the attack. Unless the cavalry gets there quick every settler between Jacksons Hole and this railway station is in danger of massacre.

Militia Preparing to Move.

LARAMIE, Wy., July 23.—Colonel Foote of the Wyoming national guards has ordered Fred Hesse, Jr., captain of Company A of Laramie, to assemble his company to determine how many can be sent out against the Indians and prepare them to move when ordered. Company A is the crack militia company of the state.

Reds Missing from the Agency.

OMAHA, July 20.—A special to The Bee from Lander, Wy., says: Two hundred bucks are off the Shoshone agency and cannot be located by their agent. The chief fears are that they have gone to Jackson Hole to join the Bannocks. Signal fires are burning nightly in the Wind river country.

THE LIST GROWS.

Chicago Police Find Another Victim of Murderer Holmes.

CHICAGO, July 20.—Another appalling crime will be laid at the door of H. H. Holmes, the notorious insurance swindler and the alleged murderer of the Pietzels. That Minnie Williams of Fort Worth, Tex., met her death at the hands of Holmes there is scarcely a doubt. That she died in this city in a violent manner has been proven almost to a certainty. Late Friday night the police found in a stove in a 3-story brick building at 707 Sixty-third street, which was built by Holmes and in which both he and the Williams girl lived, a quantity of charred bones, buttons known to have been on a dress owned by Minnie Williams, and a partly melted portion of a watch chain which was as having been the property of the girl. The chain was instantly recognized by C. E. Davis, who occupies a portion of the store, formerly used by Holmes when he was in the drug business, as one that he had seen Miss Williams wear, and which he had on two separate occasions repaired for her.

The police are now of the opinion that not only Minnie Williams but her younger sister Anna and the boy Howard both met death in this house, and are of the opinion that they will find either the body of Anna Williams or that of Howard Pietzel before they have concluded their work.

DISASTER AT SEA.

GENOA, July 24.—The Italian steamers Ortigia and Maria P. collided off Isola del Pint at the entrance of the Gulf of Genoa. The latter sank and 148 people were drowned.

The Maria P. was bound from Naples to La Plata. There was a crew of 17 and the passengers numbered 173. She was entering the Gulf of Genoa at 1:30 o'clock in the morning, when she met the Ortigia, outbound. They only noticed each other when a collision was inevitable.

KENOSHA STRIKE SETTLED.

The Men Gain a Complete Victory and Will Return to Work.

MILWAUKEE, July 23.—The strike which has been in progress at Kenosha, Wis., for the past ten days, has been settled without the aid of the state board of arbitration. The men have gained a complete victory and will go back to work at once. Their demands for a return to the wages which prevailed before the panic, two years ago, have been agreed to by the manufacturers, and the men are satisfied.

STRIKE AT GLENWOOD.

Five Hundred Men Demand Increase in Wages.

MILWAUKEE, July 24.—A special to The Wisconsin from Glenwood, Wis., says: Five hundred men employed in the Glenwood Manufacturing company's plant struck for an increase in wages and a regular payday.

The Blackstone river, in Rhode Island, was named in honor of Rev. William Blackstone, an Episcopal clergyman and early settler. The Indians called it Pawtucket, "the forks."

A CRUCIAL QUESTION

FOURTH DAY OF THE HARVEY-HORR DEBATE BRINGS IT OUT.

Ought We to Again Throw Open the Mints of the United States to the Free Coinage of Gold and Silver at 16 to 1, When the Actual Ratio of Value Is Fully 30 to 1?

CHICAGO, July 22.—The crucial point has been reached in the Horr-Harvey debate. It was near the end of the fourth day when Mr. Horr, breaking from the long continued discussion of the circumstances surrounding the enactment of the law of 1873, stated compactly his version of the existing conditions of the debate and then plumped the main question: "Ought we again throw open the mints of the United States to the free coinage of silver?"

Mr. Harvey was evidently taken by surprise, but stood by his guns and insisted on proceeding with his attempt to prove that the demonetization was accomplished with a surreptitiousness that was criminal.

"There are some things about which Mr. Harvey and myself differ and some about which we agree. He thinks that our forefathers established a single measure of value; that that measure was 371¼ grains of pure silver; that gold was made a simple companion metal of silver and that its value was to be all the time measured by a silver dollar. I believe that those early patriots attempted to establish a measure of value out of two metals, gold and silver, and that they supposed they had hit upon a ratio which would secure the use of both gold dollars and silver dollars. Besides, we agree that up to 1834 the measure of value in actual use in this country was the silver dollar. I assert that in 1834 the ratio was changed, that the gold dollar was made smaller. He admits that. I insist that when the gold dollar was cheapened it became the actual measure of value in this country and remained so up to the suspension of specie payments; that the silver dollar, though still a legal measure of value, was not used in this country as the actual measure after 1834. He denies that. We both agree that from 1862 to 1879 the domestic business of this country was done by using the greenback dollar as the measure of value, which was during none of those years equal in value to either the gold or the silver dollar. He states that in his book. We both agree.

Makes It Emphatic.

"Now mark. We both agree that in 1873 the coinage of silver dollars was stopped by law, and that since 1879, since the resumption of specie payment, the domestic and international business of this country had been done on a gold basis. We agree that Great Britain has been on a gold basis since 1816; no dispute about it. I claim that Germany ceased the free coinage of silver in 1871 and he claims that it was not done until later—1873—but we both agree that since Jan. 1, 1874, Germany has been entirely upon a gold basis. We agree that the nations which compose the Latin Union—France, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy and Greece—are all of them today gold standard countries. There is no dispute between us that British America and Australia are also gold standard countries. We agree that Mexico, China and Japan and several other republics of South America are silver standard nations.

No Double Standard Nation.

"There is no nation on the face of the earth that is actually using a double standard. The actual measure of value in each of the countries of the world is either gold alone, or silver alone, except in some countries where depreciated paper money is the only circulating medium and metal money is bought and sold as a commodity, just as was the case in this country during the suspension of specie payments. Mr. Harvey claims that the law of 1873 was secretly and fraudulently passed. He won't deny that he claims that. That I have denied and still deny. I say that there is not a grain of truth in such a statement. But we both agree that the law was passed and is in force today. Now the important question before the American people at this moment, and the one we are here to discuss, is this: Ought the law to be repealed? Ought we to again throw open the mints of the United States to the free coinage of silver upon the old ratio of 16 to 1, when the actual ratio of value in the markets of the world is fully 30 to 1?"

Mr. Harvey: "When I have read the printed record of what Mr. Horr has just now said, it will be time enough for me to take up a new subject. I am not done with the present subject yet."

THE SECOND DAY.

Demonetization Act of 1873 Discussed—Mr. Harvey's Proof.

CHICAGO, July 18.—The subject of the day's debate on the silver question was demonetization, the act of 1873. After a rambling talk of considerable length regarding the previous day's debate Mr. Harvey discussed in detail the act of 1873. Mr. Horr, following on this subject, said:

"We now come to the discussion of the law which changed this nation from a bimetallic nation to a single standard nation, the law of 1873, which Brother Harvey kindly names a 'crime.' It has been called that so long that there is nothing novel in the name. I purpose to show you during this discussion that no law has ever been passed by the American congress which was more free from taint, which was more carefully examined, which was more completely understood than the law of 1873. The statement which he read to you that the scheme was concocted in London is a simple assertion upon which he cannot produce one scintilla of reputable truth, not one word."

Mr Harvey—Mr. Horr says that I have no proof that the scheme was concocted in London to demonetize silver in the United States. When I was a boy I went into a courthouse one day to hear a criminal trial and I heard a lawyer say: "When a crime is committed and you want to detect the criminal look for the man who is benefited by the crime." Reasoning by induction will more invariably locate the criminal than any uncertain human testimony. Silver was demonetized in England, and in England only prior to the [illegible] it was demonetized in this country. That was where the movement started—that is another evidence. London bankers initiated the Paris conference of 1867, at which Mr. John Sherman was present, therefore I have the right to say the conspiracy originated in London.

THE ACT OF 1873.

CHICAGO, July 20.—It was knife to the hilt the third day of the Horr-Harvey encounter. The debate opened in the auditorium of the Illinois club at 10:30 a. m., the lateness of the starting hour heretofore having been more or less inconvenient in some respects.

The subject under discussion was what Mr. Harvey had characterized in his book as the "Crime of 1873"—the demonetization of silver. After some miscellaneous sparring, Mr. Harvey charged corruption in the passage of the measure demonetizing silver. Mr. Horr, in reply, repudiated the inference that the citizens of the United States were all corrupt, and none of their women virtuous. He declared that it was not true that every man had his price. Members of congress were as honest as the average American citizen. He (the speaker) knew whereof he spoke, for he had been a member of that body himself. Mr. Horr then took up the

and proceeded to show the stages through which it had passed, and that its final enactment was not until after it had been before congress for more than three years. Mr. Harvey then returned to the attack upon the honesty of legislators throughout the country including those in Colorado and Illinois legislatures. This venality was sapping the foundations of the government as it had sapped the foundations and destroyed every republic of the past.

Mr. Horr again returned to the defense of the honesty of the American people. He said Mr. Harvey merely picked out a few corrupt men and drew from them the proposition that the people of the nation were corrupt. Why, if Mr. Harvey had lived in Job's time, he would have looked over that unfortunate man's sores and would given out and published throughout the world that all Chaldea was an immense carbuncle. Mr. Horr then, amid laughter, said he would return to the question under discussion and proceeded with the history of the demonetization act; pointing out how the bill had been read in full several times and printed separately eleven times and twice in the reports of the comptroller of the currency. The debates in the senate on it occupied 66 columns in The Congressional Record.

A Home Product.

The JOURNAL man was permitted to "cheese it" on a sample of the first batch turned out at the Gentilly factory, and being something of a Yankee ourself we ought to be a pretty good judge of cheeses. If we are, we most emphatically pronounce this sample ahead of nearly all of the imported cheese that finds a market here. The cheese that we saw had been in the store scarcely 24 hours and was two-thirds gone and the proprietor informed us that all who had sampled it were profuse in their praise of it, and that Gentilly cheese was fast becoming the leader in this market, all of which goes to prove what we have often said before, that there is a sufficient market at home for all the cheese the county can produce. Patrons of the factory have told us that they were getting good satisfactory prices for their milk, and here you have a combination that should foster and build up this industry in the county. When once our people get really in the habit of calling on the cow to help out in the payment of that mortgage—caused by the pernicious all-wheat system, (too long in vogue here,) she will get there" in great shape—and she will help you—you bank on that.

THE NEW G. A. R. HALL

Completed At Last And The First Meeting Held on Friday Evening July 19th.

Lots of Business Transacted And The Boys Have An Enjoyable Session.

GAVEL PRESENTATION.

At last the finishing touches have been put on the Post room, at least in the new Grand Army Hall, and the boys met in regular session there for the first time on Friday evening. With the exception of a few who are away on business and one or two who are on the sick list every member was in attendance. The room has been nicely painted and calsimined and the walls adorned by pictures of prominent generals of the war and of some of the most noted battles while in a large frame in the centre of the west wall are to be seen the photographs of the members of the Post of as many as it has been possible to secure of both of those who once belonged and have removed elsewhere and of those who are new members. The hall above the Post room is not quite completed yet neither is the club-room or kitchen nor the dining room but it requires very little expense now to accomplish that and when this is done Col. Cobham Post can boast of having the most complete quarters of any Post in the state outside of the large cities probably—and all its own property. The question of the proposed dedication was discussed and postponed until the next regular meeting. The charter was ordered draped for 30 days in memory of comrade Mike Jeffers, recently drowned at Red Lake Falls and a committee appointed to draft resolutions. When the business session was at an end the commander arose and in a few words announced that he had a peculiarly pleasant duty to perform, and he took up from the table a new gavel, gayly decorated with red, white and blue ribbons, which he had been using to the evident amusement of the boys who had without doubt formed the idea that their old commander had either entered his second childhood or suddenly blossomed out as a dude, and, after paying a glowing tribute to the memory of Gen. Grant, whose calm face mildly looked down upon the unusual proceedings from a picture on the wall, he said: "This gavel, which I hold in my hand and which is presented to Col. Cobham Post No. 90, by Mrs. E. J. W. Denny, of Chicago, Ills., was made from the old work bench made and formerly used by our late great commander Gen. U. S. Grant." At this point the boys got off their base and rising gave three rousing cheers for "Grant and the lady" and for a time the excitement was intense. After the smoke of battle had cleared somewhat, the commander went on to say that Mrs. Denny was the wife of one of Gen. Grant's lifelong friends to whom the general had given the work bench and he had made it up into gavels for the use of the Grand Army. That Col. Cobham Post was the second Post in Minnesota to come into possession of one of those gavels the other being the Post at Fergus Falls. Mrs. Denney is a sister of Mr. Woodham, of this city and it was upon the occasion of her visit to her brother a few weeks since that the commander came into possession of this valuable relic which will be sacredly preserved in the archives of Col. Cobham Post and most highly prized by every member of it as long as he has the breath of life in him. After the close of the session, as the old boys crowded 'round to get hold of the precious relic we noticed the eloquent tear on many a bronzed cheek and the universal verdict was "no amount of money would tempt us to part with this truly invaluable gift." A resolution of thanks to the generous donor by a rising vote was passed, during the session. After one of the most pleasant sessions in its history the members of Col. Cobham Post wended their way to their several homes reflecting upon the fine hall they have secured and the great event connected with their first meeting therein.

W. O. Wilson is doing a good deal of bragging over a fine Humbletonian colt that arrived last week. The colonel, however, sticks up his nose and says: "Umph, that's nothing to brag about! If it was a dog, like my Ben, it would be something worth talking about. But just a colt—and only a few days old! Why, I'll bet the little rat can't get his nose down to the ground, the best he can do, and I know he'll never make a pointer!"

Last week the JOURNAL mentioned a case from Warren, wherein one Dr. P. D. Winship, who was running a theatrical company in connection with his medicine business, was said to have been playing in hard luck and had left the town owing a board bill at one of the hotels. This week the doctor comes in and explains that he did leave Warren intending to return early the following week. On Saturday, July 13th on a telegram that summoned him to Perley on important business, at which time he was owing a bill at the hotel of $6. that the week for which he had engaged board would not expire before Wednesday, that he left property at the hotel worth at least $1.000, and that he had been playing to a profitable business. The doctor showed us receipted bills from parties at Warren, including one from the very hotel in question which shows that he is not on the dead beat order. He is, moreover, a reputable citizen of Park Rapids, Minn., and the fact that he is commander of the Post at that point shows how he is regarded in G. A. R. circles, for no member who is not considered an upright citizen can ever be elected to that honorable position. This unfortunate affair has cost the doctor no small amount of annoyance as well as considerable money, but he again takes the road confident that he can soon recoup his financial loss. To us it looks as though the landlady lost her head as soon as she was told that the doctor took the south-bound train and acted too hastily altogether.

Schmidt & Lean, the city painters and paper-hangers are still on deck for everything in their line. Some of the neatest jobs of paper-hanging in the city are samples of their work and their rates for doing that kind of work are cheaper than to try to do it yourself——and very much more satisfactory. All who require any work in their line would do well to call and examine their stock and get prices. Now is the best time.

Just What's Needed

Exclaims thousands of people who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla at this season of the year, and who have noted the success of the medicine in giving them relief from that tired feeling, waning appetite and extreme exhaustion after the close confinement of a long winter season, the busy time attendant upon a large and pressing business during the spring months and with vacation time yet some weeks distant. It is then that the building-up powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla are fully appreciated. It seems perfectly adapted to overcome that prostration caused by change of season, climate or life, and while it tones and sustains the system, it purifies and vitalizes the blood.

The Bank of England.

A little more than two hundred years ago, a number of moneyed persons (a syndicate we would call them now) advanced to the English government—then in a tight box for money on account of foreign wars—the sum of $6000,000, at a stipulated rate of interest. As a further reward for the loan, they were, on July 27th, 1694, formed into a corporation and permitted to issue notes to the extent of their loans to the government, such loans being considered the amount of the bank's capital. Under this arrangement this capital has grown as follows: In 1708, it was $8,700,000; in 1738, it was $36,400,000; in 1816, $58,744,000; in 1866, $60,000,000. In 1745, owing do the attempt of Charles Edward upon Scotland, there was a run upon the bank, and to gain time payments were made in shillings and sixpenses. In 1797 there was a general panic; the bank had only $6,000,000 in cash, and notes poured in for redemption from every quarter; 300 out of 350 English banks failed. In this crisis, the government ordered suspension of specie payment, and though the notes were at some discount, universal bankruptcy was averted. Bank of England stock is considered a safe investment, but the interest is low. Those looking for a good investment, with big returns, should purchase, when about to travel, a ticket via the Burlington route, and will get value received (with a premium) for every dollar expended. WHITTIER'S FIRST POETRY.

One Boyish Poem Gained Him William Lloyd Garrison's Friendship.

After he had made the acquaintance of Burns' poems, Whittier began to scribble rhymes of his own on his slate at school and in the evening about the family hearth. One of his boyish stanzas lingered in the memory of an elder sister:

And must I always swing the flail
And help to fill the milking pail?
I wish to go away to school.
I do not wish to be a fool.

With practice he began to be bolder, and he wrote copies of verses on everyday events, and also little ballads. One of these, written when he was 17, his eldest sister liked so well that she sent it to the weekly paper of Newburyport, The Free Press, then recently started by William Lloyd Garrison. She did this without telling her brother, and no one was more surprised than he when he opened the paper and found his own verses in "The Poets' Corner." He was aiding his father to mend a stone wall by the roadside as the postman passed on horseback and tossed the paper to the young man. "His heart stood still a moment when he saw his own verses," says a biographer. "Such delight as his comes only once in the lifetime of any aspirant to literary fame. His father at last called to him to put up the paper and keep at work."

The editor of The Free Press was only three years older than the poet, although far more mature. He did more for the young man than merely print these boyish verses, for he went to Whittier's father and urged the need of giving the youth a little better education. To do this was not possible then, but two years later, when Whittier was 19, an academy started at Haverhill, and here he attended, even writing a few stanzas to be sung at the opening exercises. He studied at Haverhill for two terms, and by making slippers, by keeping books and by teaching school he earned the little money needed to pay his way. At Haverhill he was able to read the works of many authors hitherto unknown to him, and he also wrote for the local papers much prose and verse.—Professor Brander Matthews in St. Nicholas.

FURNISH NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS.

The Business Has Grown to Great Proportions In New York.

There is a peculiar industry in Gotham which has grown to astonishing proportions. This is the business of furnishing newspaper clippings to individuals, firms and corporations. There are half a dozen of these concerns in New York, which supply customers not only in the United States, but in all parts of the world. One of these newspaper clipping bureaus received an order from the Hawaiian government to send President Dole all the notices, editorials, cartoons and other published matter regarding Hawaii, its government and its affairs.

Every prominent author, actor, politician and professional man is now a subscriber to one or more of the clipping bureaus, and a busy man finds the system very convenient, for he is enabled, as it were, to read his newspapers by proxy.

The manager of a New York clipping bureau in speaking of the peculiarities of his business said yesterday: "Many of our customers are folks with fads and hobbies. A man sent us an order recently for all items about two headed calves, three legged chickens and other monstrosities. A leading politician ordered 100 Memorial day addresses, from which he could compile a Fourth of July oration which he had engaged to deliver. Society belles are beginning to make scrapbooks of their newspaper notices, and the custom will doubtless become a regular social fad in time. The wives of public men are among the best patrons of the clipping bureaus. About the strangest order we have is that of a dealer in tombstones and monuments. He takes all the death notices."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Martyrs In Theater Boxes.

Speaking of theater boxes and people in them, there's not a sight in all the capital that I admire more than the heroism of the society young man in a box party. Now a box in a Washington theater will hold four persons comfortably, and of these four only two can see what's going on on the stage well.

So far as seeing the play goes, a box seat is the worst in the house. Then the average box party is made up of six or eight full grown men and women, and the women get the front seats, of course, and the men—well, the men take the background and catch rare glimpses of the leading lady's shoulder, and when the chaperon says, "Oh, Mr. Brown, I'm so afraid you're not seeing," they smile and say: "Oh, yes, I am. I can see perfectly."

It's sublime, I say; it's awe inspiring. They actually manage to look as if they were enjoying themselves. It's wonderful what an amount of broken heart and suppressed profanity a starched shirt front can cover anyway.—Washington Post.

Easily Arranged.

"I'd like to go to the races," said Willie Wishington, "but I don't know anything about them. I'm afraid I'd seem unsophisticated."

"That needn't bother you."

"Is there any particular style of costume that's appropriate?"

"Yes; you just wear a worried look and trousers that have fringe at the bottom, and everybody will think that you are an old frequenter of the place."—Washington Star.

IN THE RUINS OF POMPEII.

Evidences of the commonness of slavery in the time of Pompeii's destruction are abundant on all sides. The gladiators were a class of slaves trained for fighting, and some of the wall scribblings refer to their condition as one of slavery. Here is the translation of an advertisement painted on a wall near the amphitheater:

"Twenty pairs of gladiators, paid by Decimus Lucretius Saltius Valeus, prince in the time of Nero, the son of Cæsar Augustus, and ten pairs of gladiators, paid by Decimus Lucretius, the son of Decimus Valeus, will fight at Pompeii on the 11th, 13th and 14th of April.

"There will be a proper hunting scene and the awnings will be spread. Written by Clev-Emilius Clev, writer of inscriptions; wrote this by moonlight."

The gladiators' barracks were ample for the housing of 2,000 or 3,000 men, and it is a matter of record that at least 2,000 were engaged at one time in the life or death combats which stretched over a long festival. The actors in these murderous sports were "barbarians" from various parts of Europe or from Asia Minor and Africa.

In the Naples museum is a bronze collar which was worn about the neck of a man whose skeleton was found in a Pompeiian house cellar; on the collar is engraved, in Latin, these words: "I am a slave. Arrest me because I am running away." I could not help thinking while looking at this ingenious and cruel substitute for a convict's dress that it was possible that the poor wretch who wore it may have been one of the descendants of the blond haired Britons brought home by Julius Cæsar to grace his triumph 100 years before Pompeii disappeared beneath its pall of lava and ashes.

In the Gheezeh museum, Cairo, one may look upon the black and shriveled face of that Rameses whom we know as the Pharaoh of the Oppression. Mummies of other Egyptian kings, priests and people are common enough. These primeval men, who far antedated Pompeii and Rome, stand undecayed in our presence. But Pompeii presents the picture of an entire city resurrected from the dead, with all its appliances of life and means of pleasure, profit, comfort, luxury, vice and sustenance. The life is gone out forever, but the mummified city remains—a monument of human ingenuity and human frailty.—New York Times.

Caseneuve's Rival.

Although the French courts are conducted with more ceremony than our own, they are occasionally enlivened by amusing incidents.

Maitre Caseneuve, a famous advocate of Toulouse, now dead, had a pet dog, of which he was very fond. One day he ventured to take this dog, which was small, and named Azor, into court with him. He seated Azor at one end of the bench assigned to the counsel and began an argument.

Maitre Caseneuve had a high pitched voice, and as he warmed up with his plea he raised it to a loud tone. Azor could stand it no longer. He stood up on the bench and howled—wow! wow! wow!

Maitre Caseneuve moderated his voice and cuffed the dog "aside," whereupon Azor subsided into silence. The lawyer argued on, and by and by, forgetting himself in his earnestness, raised his voice once more to a high pitch and a loud tone.

"Wow! wow! wow!" howled the little dog once more.

This time the lawyer stopped short, turned to the dog and eyed him severely.

"See here, Azor," he said aloud, "this can't go on. If you are arguing this case, you'd better do it alone, but if I am then you've got to keep still!"

The Bible.

The Bible contains 3,566,480 letters, 810,697 words, 31,175 verses, 1,189 chapters and 66 books; longest chapter is the 119th Psalm; the shortest and middle chapter is the 117th Psalm; the middle verse is the eighth of the 118th Psalm. The longest name is in the eighth chapter of Isaiah. The word "and" occurs 46,627 times. The thirty-seventh chapter of Isaiah and the nineteenth chapter of the second book of Kings are alike. The longest verse is the ninth of the eighth chapter of Esther; the shortest the thirty-fifth of the eleventh chapter of John. The twenty-first verse of the seventh chapter of Ezra is the only one of the entire collection which contains every letter in the alphabet. The word "Lord," or its equivalent, "Jehovah," occurs 7,698 times in the Old Testament, or, to be more exact, the word "Lord" occurs 1,853 times and the word "Jehovah" 5,845 times. The word "God" does not occur in the book of Esther.—St. Louis Republic.

The Color In Irish Verse.

Of course there is no deficiency of local color in such a book. We hear much of the "Suggarth aroon," the "Tubber-na-Scorney," the "Cushla Macree" and other things pre-eminently Irish. Now, the "Suggarth aroon" is a capital fish, especially when served with "sauce Hollandaise," and all the world knows that the "Tubber-na-Scorney" is one of the most picturesque of ancient symbolic Irish customs. Still the merely Saxon reader, who is not familiar with the Irish language, is sometimes "maire bhan astorred" when he comes across a poem plentifully sprinkled with Irish expressions, with the exception, of course, of such a universally understood remark as "Begorrah," or that touching phrase of endearment, "Faugh a ballagh."—W. L. Alden in Idler.

Ten cars of hogs from Eastern Oregon were on the South St. Paul market Thursday. They were of good quality and stood the journey of five days apparently as well as hogs from a day's ride.

Bank Examiner Kenyon has made a call on the state banks for a report of their condition at the close of business July 11. The comptroller of the currency has made a call on the national banks for a statement of their condition at the same date.

Of the ten rabbits inoculated by the state board of health two died after a varying period of incubation. One was inoculated from the brain of John Barrison, who died at South Park from hydrophobia. The other was inoculated from the brain of a dog supposed to be suffering from rabies.

Police Sergeant Zirkelback of St. Paul, who has been missing since Friday, has been drowned. Saturday afternoon he went to White Bear lake. He embarked in a rowboat, which drifted ashore later bearing the sergeant's coat and a single oar. Circumstances point to suicide or accidental drowning. The body was recovered Monday.

The state board of Charities and Corrections has compiled a report which shows the total number of persons being cared for in almshouses in the state June 30 to have been 463, as compared with 443 on the same date in 1894. There has been a slight falling off in the number of indigents in the largest three cities, and a slight increase in the rural districts. The entire number of paupers in the state is less than the number supported in the almshouses of Cleveland, O. The total number of persons who became in any way public charges for the past year is shown by the report to be 2,354 for the preceding year.

Tried to Break Jail.

MASON CITY, Ia., July 23.—Two prisoners in jail here made an ineffectual attempt to escape. They threw pepper into the eyes of a deputy and jumped for the door. He hallooed and Sheriff Clark met the fellows at the door, knocking the leader down and sending both back to their cells. The men are William Scherrol, sent from Clay county, and Golden, sent from Worth county.

Order For Hearing on Claims.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, } ss. In Probate Court.
County of Polk. }

Special term June 28, 1895.

In the matter of the estate of Isaac Underhill, deceased.

Letters of administration, with the will annexed, on the estate of said deceased, being granted to Cora B. Underhill, of the county of Huron and State of Ohio,

IT IS ORDERED, That all claims and demands of all persons against said estate be presented to this Court, for examination and allowance, at the Probate office in the city of Crookston, on Thursday, the second day of January, 1896, at 10 o'clock a. m.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That six months from the date hereof be allowed to creditors to present their claims against said estate, at the expiration of which time all claims not presented to said court, or not proven to its satisfaction, shall be forever barred, unless, for cause shown, further time be allowed.

ORDERED FURTHER, That notice of the time and place of the hearing and examination of said claims and demands shall be given by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to the day appointed for such examination, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

By the Court,
C. M. BENSON,
Judge of Probate.

WHAT IS POETRY?

It Is Music In the Cathedral of the Human Heart.

Poetry is music in the cathedral of the heart. Deep in the human breast there towers a noble structure. It stands apart from the beaten paths of the mind in a silent, hidden valley. The ordinary thoughts and passions hurry past the portal and know it not. They have not learned the "open sesame." Ego himself, ruler of the kingdom of the intellect, does not know the sacred spot. It is the mission of his life to find it, and having once found it he cannot remember the route by which he journeyed. He cannot return to it at will. Fate guards the way and rarely grants an entrance, yet every man at some time of his life happens upon it, and the fortunate reach it often. Though they are blindfolded by the way, their eager feet learn to tread the labyrinth. They are the poets of mankind, whose fancy gives sight to their feet.

At some unexpected moment a fair guide points the way, the doors swing open, and man enters the cathedral of his heart. Sometimes it is a strain of music of searching, thrilling sweetness that points the way. Sometimes it is a royal sunset. Sometimes it is a rapt and self forgetting prayer. Sometimes it is the hand of love, but oftenest it is gaunt sorrow. It is a stately temple. Its dome is as broad as the heavens, toward which the many fingered spires point. Its windows make of each sunbeam a rainbow. Its aisles are silent. Its priest is peace. With hushed heart and reverential step man enters and is at rest. All that is material of him he leaves behind. Quiet and beauty possess his soul, and he floats in an inspiring dream. He listens, and now for the first time falls on his intent ear an occasional note in the harmony of the universe.

Half lost in distance, he hears the chorus of the morning stars, the birds, the waterfall, the trees. He feels a beauty and a purpose in the universe the mind cannot conceive. He feels above, about, within him a majestic kingdom to which his soul is kin. Almost he grasps the secret of creation. For one swift instant exaltation draws aside the dark, impenetrable curtain that has led skeptic man. "There is the end." He sees beyond a marvel too great for his still human mind. It passes, but it leaves with him awe, peace, hope. He feels that somewhere there is a celestial key that makes of the puzzle of life a kingdom where all is harmony, perfection, satisfaction. The great organ of his soul, tuned into speech by the master hand of beauty, bursts into melody.

An Extraordinary Freak.

A citizen of Tampa, Fla., is the owner of a wonderful curiosity in the shape of a pair of deer's horns in which one of the prongs ends in a startling malformation. Four inches from the place where it branches from the main horn this prong suddenly enlarges into a bulbous growth nearly as large as a man's fist, and it is in this excrescence that the wonder lies. The bulb is in the form of a hound's head, plainly showing ears, mouth, eyes, etc. It was "taken in the down," and were it otherwise it is impossible that it could be a work of art, owing to the enlargement necessary for the freak.—St. Louis Republic.

Appeased.

He (just introduced)—What a very ugly man that gentleman near the piano is, Mrs. Hobson.

Mrs. Hobson—Why, that is Mr. Hobson.

He (equal to the occasion)—Oh, indeed! How true it is, Mrs. Hobson, that the ugly men always get the prettiest wives.—London Answers.

MORTGAGE SALE.

(First pub. July 18, '95.)
(Last pub. Aug. 29, '95.)

DEFAULT has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Ezra L. Smith and Lucy A. Smith, his wife, mortgagors, to James H. Barnum, mortgagee, dated the sixth day of February, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Polk, in the state of Minnesota, on the 23d day of April, A. D. 1888, at 8 o'clock A. M., in book 22 of mortgages, on page 237, on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of six thousand, six hundred twenty-four and 90-100 dollars, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. That the default above described consists in the non payment when due, of ten promissory notes, each for the sum of $600.00, and interest at eight per cent. per annum, payable annually, all being dated Feb. 6, 1888, and all executed and delivered by said Ezra L. Smith to said Jas. H. Barnum and all being secured by said mortgage. Said amount above described as being due contains also the sum of $125.87 taxes for the years 1892, 1893 and 1894, which said mortgagee on the 12th day of July, A. D. 1895, paid on the Southwest quarter of the land below described.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House in the city of Crookston in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, at public auction, by the sheriff of said county or by his deputy, duly appointed as agent in said instrument for that purpose, on Friday, the 30th day of August, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and one hundred dollars attorney's fees provided by statute and stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: All of Section twenty-nine (29), in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty-seven (47), west of the fifth principal meridian, containing six hundred and forty (640) acres of land, more or less, according to the government survey.

We Are Slaves to Greed.

If to be free is to live in a country (the United States) where you are in mortal dread of the press and the police, where you are heartily ashamed of having any one connected with you engaged in politics, where corruption reigns in every department of the government and the municipalities, where the only aristocracy is that of wealth and not of honor, and where the liberal professions are all counted lower than Wall street, where, in effect, men are the veritable slaves of greed and gain, why, give me the old fashioned slavery of the old country and the domination of some recognized house which is at least the fountain of honor.

One doesn't have to apologize in England for going to court, but it seems a necessity in America if one is in any way connected with the White House. When I first came here, I thought a member of the house of representatives held a position at least analogous to the average member of parliament. I find, on the contrary, he is about as much esteemed as an outside broker on the Stock Exchange, and for much the same reasons.—Temple Bar.

Marriage of the Adriatic.

"The Marriage of the Adriatic" was instituted in commemoration of a naval victory won by Sebastian Ziavi, doge of Venice, over Otto, son of Frederick Barbarossa, 1174. In consequence of this victory Pope Alexander III, who had been driven to take refuge in Venice, gave to the doge the sovereignty of the sea, and every year the doge used to go in grand procession in his state barge and throw a gold ring into the Adriatic, saying, "With this ring I thee wed." Flowers were then thrown into the sea, and the procession returned. The sentence delivered by the doge on the occasion was literally, "Desponsamus te Mare nostrum in signum veri perpetuique domini."—Brooklyn Eagle.

DRINK WITH MEALS.

Liquid Food an Aid to Digestion, and Cold Drinks Refresh Heated Persons.

The incessant adjuration not to drink with meals we have always held the reverse of truth from theory and from experience. The latter is that dry meals cause heartburn, the former shows that splitting up the meal of solid food with liquid acts precisely like splitting logs of wood into kindling for the fire, giving the digestive fluid easy access to the small particles, instead of sizzling and making gas on the outside of a wad of thick paste. And the talk of diluting the gastric juices is nonsense, because the surplus fluid drains quickly through the stomach. Better drink too much than too little.

We are glad now to be re-enforced by an English sporting man, Mr. Horace Hayes, who says that drinking nothing during or for an hour and a half after meals is the best of ways to train down weight, but he cannot do it because it always brings on rheumatism—probably from the solid food producing overconcentrated salts in the circulation, and consequent deposits in the muscular fiber. The same writer says that the notion about animals being injured by giving them a drink when heated is a stupid and cruel piece of barbarism; that it only does them harm when the drink is very cold, by producing nervous shocks as it would to a man, while if the chill is taken off it first, it refreshes a heated horse to take a good drink just as it does a heated human being.—Travelers' Record.

Ready For the Cholera.

Some years ago there was an outbreak of cholera in France, and instructions were forwarded to the mayor of a certain village to take all necessary precautions, as the epidemic was rapidly spreading.

At first our worthy magistrate did not know what to do. After awhile, however, he reported that he was ready to receive the dread visitor. Upon inquiry being made, it was discovered that by his orders a sufficient number of graves had been dug in the local cemetery to bury the entire parish if required.—Nervion.

Handkerchiefs first came into notice in England during the reign of Elizabeth.

TO DIVA, WHO WOULD MARRY HIM.

How shall I thank thee for the bounteous grace,
The loving kindness that would make me free
To gaze forever on my Diva's face,
A citizen of heaven eternally,
In that clear paradise of thine to know
Things I but dimly surmise here below?

But surely, Diva, greatly as I long
To drink the deep delights of that abode—
Surely I have not sung my latest song,
Drained my last cup and trod the allotted road?
Why in so fierce a hurry to translate
Me from the mundane to the immortal state?

Diva, 'tis fair indeed, 'tis passing fair,
This bad, unblest, probationary time;
I know the purer joys that wait elsewhere,
Above, beyond this planet's grief and grime,
But grant me one sweet respite ere I try
Those other blisses, lest they be too high.

—Pall Mall Gazette.

A QUEER ANIMAL.

The Australian Duckbill Carries a Sting In One Leg.

Australia certainly holds the palm for queer and uncouth animals. Chief among these is the duckbill, or ornithorhynchus, which Sidney Smith described as "a kind of mole with webbed feet and the bill of a duck, which agitated Sir Joseph Banks and rendered him miserable from his utter inability to decide whether it was a bird or a beast." It was only recently that it was proved beyond a doubt that this curious animal lays eggs like a bird, though this had long been reported by travelers. Now comes the news that it has a sting on its hind leg, capable of killing by its poisonous effects. We quote from The Lancet:

"For a long time it was considered to be quite harmless and destitute of any weapon of offense, although the hind legs of the males were armed with a powerful spur, apparently connected with a gland. Then the opinion was advanced that this might be a weapon allied to the poisonous armory of snakes, scorpions and bees, all of which possess a sort of hypodermic poison syringe. Though one set of observers asserted that this was the case, another set denied it, and so Dr. Stuart determined, if possible, to solve this question. He received two independent accounts, which coincided perfectly, and from them he concludes that at certain seasons, at all events, the secretion is virulently poisonous. The mode of attack is not by scratching, but by lateral inward movements of the hind legs. Two cases are reported in dogs. One dog was 'stung' three times, the symptoms much resembling those from bee or hornet poison. The dog was evidently in great pain and very drowsy, but there were no tremors, convulsions or staggering. It is worthy of note that a certain immunity seems obtainable, for the dog suffered less on the second occasion and still less on the third. Two cases of men being wounded are reported, in both of which the animals were irritated, one by being shot and handled, the other by being handled only; the symptoms were the same as in the dog. No deaths are reported in human beings, but four in dogs."—Literary Digest.

The Right of Way.

At Park place and Broadway, New York, as a mail wagon turned into the latter thoroughfare to go up town, the horses knocked down a pedestrian who was hurrying into City Hall park. For a wonder the driver pulled up, and though the man was at the horses' feet he escaped the wheels. He came crawling out, covered with dirt and more or less hurt, and the driver looked down at him and coldly inquired:

"Do you know what you have been doing, sir?"

"I do," replied the man as he brushed away at the dirt, "but I couldn't help it. I'm not the man to interfere with the United States mails."

"Better look out in future."

"Yes, I will."

I followed him into the park, where he sat down on a bench to get his breath, and told him that a mail wagon had no more right to run over him than an ice cart.

"Is that so?" he asked in doubting tones. "Well, by gum, but this is the fourth time I've been run over by them, and next time they try it on I'll raise a fuss."—Detroit Free Press.

The Goddess of Life.

Vesta was the goddess of life and of home. Her altar stood on every hearthstone, her fire burned on the floor of every public building. Emigrants, when leaving their country, always carried with them fire from the public hearth. The vestal virgins spent 30 years in service—ten in learning their duties, ten in practicing them, ten in teaching novices. After this term had expired, they might, if they chose, leave the service of their divine mistress or marry, but few did so. Honors were showered upon them. They rode in chariots, a privilege in Rome accorded only to royalty; the best seats in the amphitheater were reserved for them; they pardoned or condemned the gladiators. If a criminal led to execution met a vestal, he was instantly released, no matter what his crime.

Drinking Fountains In London.

The first drinking fountain was erected on Snow hill 37 years ago, and today the association which caters for man and beast in this respect has erected and maintains 700 fountains for human beings and over that number of drinking troughs for cattle in the streets and open spaces of London.—London Globe.

Pursue not a victory too far. He hath conquered well that hath made his enemy fly; thou mayest beat him to a desperate resistance, which may ruin thee. —George Herbert.

Gasparin estimates that the evaporation of water from the surface of the earth is from 25 to 50 inches a year, according to location.

Walter had been on the ocean a day and night, and when land appeared he said, "Oh, mamma, I am so pleased to see dirt again."

LOADING AN OCEAN LINER.

The Storage Is Something Tremendous and Requires Careful Packing.

To watch the loading of grain, either from an elevator or a lighter, into one of the mammoth vessels engaged in its transportation, is to witness one of the chief operations in the movements of the world's commerce. It is carried in long pipes, with a funnel shaped movable appendage at the end, which is shifted by means of a rope from one part of the hold to another, according as the stream of grain fills up the spaces reserved for it. The grain flows into the vessel with the noise and velocity of a torrent and sends a dense volume of dust and chaff upward, obscuring the depths beneath and making the men attending the stowage below look like ghosts in the rising mist.

The "trimming" of the grain in the holds is an important part of its storage. After several thousand bushels have been streamed into the hold, a dozen or more men are delegated to shovel the downpouring column in between the vessel's beams, a job for which they are paid at the rate of a cent a minute. In vessels of the Cunard stripe it takes between 12,000 and 15,000 bushels to fill a hold, and these vessels average 50,000 bushels in the total cargo. Ships carrying grain alone can take as high as 125,000 bushels, and when it is considered that from 4,000 to 7,000 bushels can be stored in an hour, every 40 bushels weighing a ton, an idea can be had of the force of the torrent directed into the vessel.

Large vessels have four or five holds, and a distinction is made in storing the cargo in them. Grain, from its compact and dead weight, is reserved mostly for the center of the vessel, while cured provisions are packed as far forward and as far aft as possible, for their better preservation from the heat of the ship's fires. In some vessels, like the great Cunarders, which carry passengers as well as freight, the heaviest weight is stored in the lowest hold; in the technical parlance of the stevedore, "stiffening" the ship. It takes about 1,500 tons to "stiffen" a great Cunarder, and when this is done the lower hold is fastened and battened down and work is begun on the next.—Donahoe's Magazine.

COLERIDGE.

Indolence Capable of Energies Characteristic of His Whole Appearance.

The antivivisectionists sometimes horrify us by describing the poison which paralyzes all the active powers of the body while leaving the sensibilities untouched. Coleridge offers a study of that kind to psychologists. His will, no doubt, was congenitally feeble. "Indolence capable of energies," as he says in a remarkable passage of early self portraiture, was characteristic of his whole appearance. He could absorb enormous masses of reading and write or speak with amazing fluency, but the energy could not be co-ordinated or concentrated. It flowed hither and thither spontaneously along the channels dictated by the dominant feeling of the moment.

As psychologists phrase it, he had lost his power of "inhibition." He could not suppress or restrain his emotions. He valued metaphysical research, as he says in his pathetic ode, because was his "sole resource, his only plan." He could distract his mind from one pursuit by another, but could not force his energies to converge upon a single or distant aim. Painful emotions were evaded, instead of being met face to face. When he heard suddenly at Malta of John Wordsworth's death he tried to stagger out of a public room and before he reached the door fell to the floor in a convulsive hysteric fit, and was ill for a fortnight. He then declared that he was unable to open any letters lest they should bring news of the death of one of his children.

> Haply by abstruse research to steal
> From my own nature all the natural man

The intensity of his feelings paralyzed instead of stimulated his powers. "Vexations and preyings upon the spirit," he says, "pluck out the wing feathers of the mind." He is like a criminal upon the wheel, held down, not by chains, but by impotence of will, feeling every blow with singular intensity, but only capable of meeting it by shutting his eyes as long as possible or trying to distract his mind by puzzling over the problems most remote from practical application.—National Review.

Still Room For Research.

"What is this new substance I hear so much about?" asked the eminent scientist's wife.

"What new substance, my dear?"

"The element in the air that has just been detected."

"Oh, that, my dear," he answered, beaming over his spectacles with the good nature of superior wisdom, "is known as argon!"

"Oh!"

"Yes; its discovery is one of the most remarkable triumphs of the age. It has revolutionized some of the old theories, or at least it will revolutionize them before it gets through."

"What is it?"

"It's—er—a—did you say, 'What is it?'"

"I said that."

"Well—ahem—you see, we haven't as yet discovered much about it except its name."—Washington Star.

The Veil Butterfly.

A novelty this summer is the butterfly designed to fasten milady's veil. These butterflies are made with a patent catch and are charming to decorate the bodice as well as to fasten the veil. Many of them are enameled in all the natural colors of the butterfly. Darning needles for this purpose rival the butterflies in popularity. One darning needle more beautiful than the others is of green gold set with rose diamonds and emeralds. Very fine gold chains are worn about the neck for full dress occasions. Suspended from them are jeweled pendants or a succession of gems.

THE Horr-Harvey word contest, at Chicago is still (not so very still either perhaps) on. When they get it tied up we will give JOURNAL readers the gist of it.

WHILE the knowing ones were guessing, "Groveretta," "Naomi," and all that sort of thing, Grover quietly named the kid "Marion"—and not a mother's son of the guessers had come within the broad-side of a barn of that name. By the way, it is quite a pretty combination, when you come to think of it—"Marion Cleveland."

REV. R. H. BATTEY has consolidated his Message with the "Good Templar" the state organ of the Good Templars that has heretofore been published at Minneapolis. The new paper which is a bright healthy looking sheet, will be printed at Fargo for awhile yet. We learn that Mr. Battey will resign his pastorate at Barnesville and devote his entire time to the temperance work.

Duluth Herald: The New York Tribune sagely remarks that the future of business depends largely upon the crops. Referring to the small shipment of gold during the week, and observing that this means nothing, the Tribune says that the volume of business is larger than it ever has been at this season, daily payments through the principal clearing house being 5.8 per cent. larger than in 1892. This, it accounts for, "by heavy speculation this year and financial settlements;" but, it adds, "business in all branches is remarkably large."

IT looks as though the editor of the Prison Mirror was a good bit off his base in his attack on Horace Greeley Perry, of the St. Peter Tribune. He persistently refers to "Horace Greeley Perry" as a "him" and SHE aint—not a little bit—on the contrary she is about as good-looking a little bit of feminity as one would wish to see, and the boys in the association all like her—in an editorial way. A sharp tongue, did you say? Well, isn't that her feminine prerogative? After all, we don't know as we blame the Mirror editor so very much, as he don't go 'round much, and if the little lady will persist in wearing such a masculine name she must expect such mistakes to occur. Wonder why she don't change it? By the way, where are all our young fellows at, anyhow?

Wright County Times: The name of Senator C. K. Davis has been mentioned in connection with the republican nomination for the office of president by some of the leading papers of the country. At first many thought it a scheme to solidify the Minnesota delegation for trading purposes in the interest of some of the other candidates, but this does not seem to be so, and assurances have been received by his intimate friends from prominent men in the party throughout the country that he will have a large following and earnest support. Minnesota should be represented at the next convention by a delegation of its shrewdest strongest men, who will present the name of our distinguished senator for the high office of president of the United States. His long experience in public affairs and his great ability as a lawyer and statesman would make him one of the strongest possible candidates.

Potatoes.

ED. JOURNAL: Potatoes yield bountifully in Polk Co., but they cannot be called a profitable crop for the farmer on account of the lack of a market, yet they imported from half a dozen of the countries of Europe to supply the demand of consumers in places between Lake Erie and the Atlantic ocean. Freight, or the cost of transportation between the upper end of Lake Superior and the lower end of Lake Erie is but nominal, as demonstrated by the fact that coal has been carried the entire distance at as low a rate as ten cents per ton. East of Lake Erie is found the lowest freight rates in the United States. Now, what is needed above all things for the Red River valley is to put in the link which will make cheap transportation between the Red River valley and the fine market east of Lake Erie, viz.: a direct line from the Red River valley to Duluth. Close connection with Duluth means close connection with the markets of the whole country and double the present profits of the farmers of the Red River valley.

Robert Kerr suffered two visitations of hail, either of which was sufficient to rob farming of its pleasures and its results for Mr. Kerr.

Crookston is making big preparations to duly open the new hotel and the governor and his staff have been invited to participate in the affair.

The storm at Grafton on Sunday evening last passed north of here near A. C. Rhinehart's farm, but little damage was done in Minnesota.

Burke Corbet, an attorney of Grand Forks, where he has practiced for thirteen years, visited Crookston for the first time on Monday of this week, and took the precaution when he left his home for that city to carry his wheel with him so he could make his escape as soon as his business was done.

Hans Roinoit, a former citizen of this city, is now confined at the poor farm in Grand Forks county, laboring under a hallucination that he was a great man. Since the attendants at the poor farm have worked off the poor whiskey he has drank for the past ten years, his case is hopeful, and soon he will be made to shift for himself.

Saloons in this city are run strictly in accordance with a state law and city charter. Mayor Rhinehart has given Chief Quigley strict orders to enforce the laws.

Wm. Eichel, of Richwood, Wisconsin, came up on Sunday last to look after his property in the city, as well as a choice quarter in Grand Forks township. Old residents will remember Mr. Eichel as having been a resident here away back in the early 80's.

FOSSTON TEMS

(From the Thirteen Towns.)

J. K. Halvorson spent Friday last in Crookston.

Geo. F. Carpenter was up from Crookston last evening, returning this morning.

Miss Hattie Kaiser arrived here Tuesday afternoon and is the guest of the Misses Mark.

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Stephens, of Crookston, were the guests of friends here on Tuesday.

Ex-Sheriff Arne Grundysen was in town early this week.

Senator Henry Kellar, of Sauk Centre, was in town for a few hours last Saturday.

A. D. Stephens, of Crookston, and Marcus Johnson, of St. Paul, are in town to-day. One of the objects of their visit is the disposal of the fair grounds to the association.

The work of excavating for the foundation of the new flour mill at Erskine was commenced last Thursday morning and it is expected that the mill will be completed by October 15th.

WASHINGTON LETTE.

WASHINGTON, JULY 24, 1895.

The reason that the bond syndicate closed up the old deal by anticipating the last payment which was not due until October, has come out sooner than was expected. It will be remembered that it was stipulated in the contract that the syndicate was to have the refusal of any bonds that the administration might issue before the 15th of October, 1895, at the same price paid for the others. Well, the syndicate wants more bonds: that $10,000,000 of profits has whetted its appetite. But, will it get them? That is a question which is probably disturbing Mr. Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle very much just now. The opinion has been expressed by experts that the administration will, before the date mentioned, be compelled to choose between another issue of bonds and calling an extra session of congress, to provide the money needed to run the government in some other way, even if there is no run made on the gold reserve. Indeed, present indications are that a part of the gold reserve will have to be used to pay current expenses before congress meets.

Ex-Senator Sanders, of Montana, at present in Washington, speaking of republican probabilities, said: "In regard to the presidential nomination, I think that the fight will be between Reed, McKinley, Davis, Allison and Bob Lincoln. I do not mean, howeve, that the chances of the candidates are to be rated in the order in which I have named them. Bob Lincoln is a sort of dark horse, but the fact that he is the attorney for the Chicago gas trust and the Pullman Car Co. will work against his nomination. Were he to pick a quarrel with Pullman, he would do a very shrewd thing, and his chances for getting the nomination would be materially increased."

Ex-Senator Hiscock, of New York, came to Washington this week on private business, but, of course, he had to talk politics or appear to be rude and impolite, things he had not learned. Mr. Hiscock said the New York republicans, however much divided they might be on some other matters, are united in their desire to have Gov. Morton the next Republican president; that they will consider no second choice until the convention votes against Gov. Morton. He ended the conversation by saying: "I believe Gov. Morton can be nominated. While New York is not so much of a pivotal state as it has been in past years, still the fact that she is united upon a certain candidate will give her great prestige, and I hope it will be sufficient to give him the nomination. There is no force in the argument that Mr. Morton is too old. He was never in better health. He is a much younger man than Gladstone, and is capable of a great deal more hard work."

Col. E. E. Wood, a prominent Ohio lawyer, who is in Washington on business, was asked what he thought of the political outlook of his state. He said: "The republicans will elect their state ticket in Ohio this year by a handsome majority. Gen. Bushnell is personally one of the best liked men in the state. He is a friend of both McKinley and Foraker, and is the man who can pacify any friction that might develope between their followers. McKinley will have his home delegation behind him for the presidential nomination, but if it comes to a second choice Allison is, I think, the favorite with Ohio republicans. The best the democrats hope for in our state is to carry the legislature, which will elect a successor to Senator Brice, but this seems to me a very forlorn hope."

Heretofore the administration has confined its fight of the silver democrats to the making of appointments, but from this time on it is, unless men prominently connected with the administration are talking merely to hear the sound of their voices, to include the making of vacancies. In other words, it has been determined that every democrat who holds office through the influence of a democratic senator or representative who persists in advocating the free coinage of silver shall be dismissed; for "cause," of course, unless he can get the influence of Cleveland democrats for his retention in office. This announcement, although as yet not generally known, has created a panic among the office holders from the south and it looks as though it would bring about a regular scramble among southern democrats, to get on the Cleveland side of the financial fence. Ex-Speaker Crisp sees the writing on the wall; he's going to Europe and Hoke Smith is going to Georgia to talk single gold standard to the same men before whom he advocated free coinage and a currency based on agricultural products, before he entered the cabinet.

She—Why is Mr. Scherzo so sad when his sings?

He—I suppose he wants to be in sympathy with his audience.—New York Herald.

THIEF RIVER FALLS ITEMS

[From the Press.]

J. V. E. Wyatt and daughter, Miss Trudie, of Crookston, are in the city. Mr. Wyatt came to conduct the installation ceremonies for the Odd-Fellows' lodge which took place last evening.

The case of Jennie Rockstad against Fred Lufkin, was dismissed in Judge Proctor's court last Monday for the reason that the county attorney was not present to conduct the prosecution.

O. F. Post, P. Paradis and E. G. Holmes, of St. Hilaire, and H. L. Webster, of Chicago, returned yesterday from a trip by steamer to Red Lake. They report the trip full of exciting adventures from a prize fight at the boat landing to a storm on the lake, during which the use of life preservers was threatened, and not the least an occasional attack of mosquitos.

Harry Greenlee and wife came down from the woods last Friday and remained over until Monday, when they proceeded on their way to Crookston.

Mr. and Mrs. Robbecke entertained over Sunday Mr. and Mrs. T. Morck and two children, of Argyle, Mr. and Mrs. D. Farrell, of Warren, and Miss Augusta Quense, of New Ulm.

L. Ulstad received lumber on Wednesday for a store building 20x40, two stories high which he will erect east of the iron bridge. Upon its completion he will stock it with a stock of general merchandise.

James Brown was arrested last Tuesday on complaint of Mr. T. P. Hamre, charged with breaking into the storehouse of the steamer Viking at High Landing and stealing numerous articles. He was held for examination until Saturday next in bonds to the amount of $400.

Last Saturday morning the steamer Viking was found by its owners sunk to the bottom of the river. It had been tied to the river bank and some repairs were in progress preparatory for a trip to the lake. When workmen left the boat Friday night there was not a drop of water to be found in the hull and she was considered thoroughly water tight. After much labor the boat was raised Tuesday afternoon with but little damage being sustained. The cause for its sinking has not yet been discovered, but it is the general opinion that it was from no accidental source.

Farmers, Take Notice.

(Pioneer Press.)

Every day even in this year of a big northwestern wheat crop and a probable excellent price, comes news that gives point to the urgent appeals of the Pioneer Press to farmers to diversify their crops. The farmers of the winter wheat states have harvested their wheat, but they will not sell it, because they are not satisfied with the price, and are relieving their temporary needs by marketing other products for which there is a good demand. So independent are they that the milling demand of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois is being filled by shipments from Chicago, and the visible supply, which a year ago showed 600,000 bushels increase, is expected to show a decrease of 1,500,000 bushels.

The farmers of the middle states will make good their losses from drouth by their ability to wait for a favorable market for their poor wheat crop. What better proof could the farmers of the northwest desire of the value of diversifying their crops, so that they, too, might be masters of the market and not its slaves?

But there is still another and stronger reason for diversification presented by existing conditions, or, rather, re-affirmed by the recurrence of conditions which accompany the raising of every wheat crop. And that is the precariousness of the crop itself. There is never any certainty in any given season that the farmer who depends on wheat alone will raise enough to pay for cutting it. There has not been for many years a season when the wheat crop promised so well as this one. But at every stage a slight variation in the degrees of heat or the rain fall would have ruined it. And even now, when it is passed through the last stages of fructification, no one feels sure that some of the legion of atmospheric or other enemies that lie in ambush about it, may not leap upon it and destroy it. A system of farming whose main reliance is upon this most uncertain of crops is radically wrong. A succession of seasons of poor harvests and low prices will bankrupt all the farmers that depend upon this single, precarious staple. There are plenty of arguments for mixed farming stronger even than these, but these lie on the surface and need no scientific explanation of the value of mixed farming to be intelligible to all.

No. 1 hard wheat 54 cents.

In two weeks the farmer will be happy "bringing in the sheaves."

We are sorry to say that H. B. Herrick is very low this week.

Col. Lew Freeman was in the city yesterday.

Miss Lulu Thompson and Miss Josie Lully, of Crookston, drove over Thursday morning.

L. D. Marshall, the veteran elevator man, was looking over wheat markets in town yesterday.

Miss Maud Brewster went to Crookston Monday to attend the training school.

W. B. Dawley, the hustling rubber man, was showing up his specimens to our merchants yesterday.

On Friday last Mrs. Jas. Gilmour dislocated her right wrist. Drs. Lankester and Sorkness reduced the dislocation and the arm is doing nicely.

Public Spirited Citizens

Should take a delight in adding anything to our town or county in the educational line which is valuable, unique and is not found in other communities. Our townsman, C. E. Misner, tells us he has an opportunity to place in our city a fine three and a half inch astronomical telescope, which will be for the educational benefit of our citizens. There is not as fine a telescope anywhere in our state, except at Carlton college, Northfield, where they have a fine astronomical observatory. Mr. Misner says that Prof. Hicks' paper, Word and Works, of St. Louis, offers him this fine instrument if he will get up a club of 800 subscribers to the paper. He is willing to put in a considerable part of his time and make a great effort to secure this fine telescope. If our citizens give him proper support it will not be a very hard matter to secure it. Word and Works is a fine monthly magazine and is well worth $1 a year, the subscription price. Mr. Misner will take subscriptions to this paper and every subscriber will have the privilege of looking through the fine telescope, which will be put up at Lynne's photograph gallery, free of charge. You get your money's worth if you do not look through the telescope, for Word and Works is a splendid family monthly and cheap at $1.00, but you have the satisfaction of knowing also that you have contributed toward the addition to our county of a fine instrument, not to be equaled by anything in northwestern Minnesota. Mr. Misner, or his agent, will be around to see the people of the county within the next six weeks and we hope he will receive encouragement wherever he goes. [15-tf]

Fertile Items.

[From the Journal]

The crop of prairie chickens, it is said, will be very large this season.

The wheat market bobs up and down with monotonous uncertainty.

Mrs. H. Hennemuth, of East Grand Forks, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Kankel, this week.

W. F. Arnold was down from Crookston Monday figuring on some surveying for private parties.

Wolves are quite numerous around Fertile. Otto Kankel shot one on Tuesday near the Burdick farm that was a monster. Several more have been seen in that neighborhood.

The Fertile boys went to Gary and played the Strand and Gary boys a game of ball the first of the week. The game was too one sided to be interesting, resulting in Fertile's favor by 19 to 2.

The prospects for an enormous crop of wheat was never better than now and this is not only the case in Polk county but throughout the entire Red River valley. The acreage, however, is much smaller than usual.

M. G. Peterson has been appointed postmaster at Valley vice Mathias Gronvold, resigned.

Charley Snyder is superintending the building of the Thorpe elevator at Buffington. It will be of the same capacity as the one destroyed by fire.

Ole Hagen, editor of the Rodbuggeren, was in Fertile last week helping on the school house. Mr. Hagen besides being a pen pusher is a first-class mason, and we dare say makes more out of that work than he does out of his newspaper.

Marvin Losey, ex-deputy sheriff and of late manager of the Crookston steam laundry, left Crookston Sunday night in company with his wife under very peculiar circumstances. He had mortgaged his half interest in the laundry to his father the day before he left and there is much mystery connected with his departure. It is claimed he left several bills unpaid. His partner, Mr. Buckingham, was in the dark as to the action of Mr. Losey and knew nothing of his leaving until the following day. Losey has borne an excellent reputation heretofore.

Rudy Burkhardt received news on Saturday of the death of one of his brother Otto's children, of diphtheria, at Wabasha. Another child was very ill at the time of the same disease.

Albert Hanson's grey took a lively spin south along Main street on Sunday afternoon, hitched to a buggy. He was stopped on Loring avenue without any damage having been done.

President Simmons, of Fargo college, will preach at the Congregational church on Sabbath next at 10 a. m., and in the evening at 8 o'clock. Subject of the morning discourse: "The Relations of the Christian College to American Education."

Hay will be in good demand before another spring. Every farmer who has hay to cut will do well to put up every pound he can. It will be needed somewhere at good prices.

Tom Young has the contract for running a ditch from the E. O. Flanders place to the river which is to furnish an outlet for the water that overflows the experimental farm.

John Ryding, who some time during the summer of '94 went over to Norway, is at this writing somewhere on the big drink in a staunch steamer steaming for American shores. He is expected in Fertile soon.

One of the good results of the state experimental farm in this county is the establishing of dairy training schools, the first one of which was held at Mallory on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. These training schools will be conducted by Prof. Carlyle, an enthusiast in that work and a practical dairyman and will be held at various points in the county. They will be of great practical benefit to all who will attend.

There will be held at E. D. Childs & Co's. cheese factory a dairy school next Friday and Saturday, July 26 and 27. It will be in charge of W. L. Carlyle and Archie Haecker. The first day will be devoted to cheese making and milk testing, and second day to running of cream separator and butter making. Discussion will be had on the various subjects during the process. The school will open each day at 9 a. m. and continue until 4 p. m. Everybody cordially invited to attend.

Friday was Great Northern pay day in this city, and the boys smole a happy smile or two——on the side.

D. H. Carr arrived on Saturday morning ready to go to work in the big Walker saw-mill that commenced business on Monday morning of this week. Comrade Carr does not seem to grow older as the years roll by.

Saturday's rain-storm was a disappointment to the farmers who were anxious to get into that haying business. That sort of weather is bad for the prospects of putting up large quantities of hay this year, and with the prospects for a good price for it the average granger is getting extremely anxious to be haying.

Mrs. Joseph Laurence arrived this week from Seattle for a visit with relatives and friends.

Mark Twain is getting great crowds everywhere. Remember his date here and secure your seats early.

Wm. Todd, engineer on the Maple Lake Belle, was in the city last week. Says the lake business is lively this year.

E. D. Childs has received his new cheese-press from Ft. Atkinson, Wis. and will be right in it hereafter with the latest improved facilities for the dairy business.

John Ristow was down from Fanny to attend the Post meeting in the new hall on Friday evening. John is color-bearer for the Post and is always on deck on state occasions.

Comrade Andrist has been busy all week fixing up the hall over the new G. A. R. hall and it will be ready soon for the use of dancing parties or any social entertainment whatever. It will be an elegant hall when fully completed and can be rented at very reasonable figures.

Adolph Bydal, not unknown to fame as the publisher of the Red River Dalen, formerly of this city, is said to have purchased the Posten at Grafton and intends to take it to East Grand Forks and consolidate it with the balance of the Dalen, which has been playing in hard lines since it was taken from Crookston. Bydal is said to have more lives than a cat.

F. B. Chapin was up from Detroit, calling on friends on Friday on his way to Beltrami county where he goes to meet with the commissioners to see about laying out some roads. Mr. Chapin was for years the county superintendent of schools and could have held the position yet had he desired. He is still very much interested in school work and while in this office he saw a copy of McCrillis' Northwest Teacher in the perusal of which he became very much interested. "It is a bright, creditable paper," was his verdict when he had finished reading it. Mr. C. visited the training school in the afternoon then took the flyer for Fosston.

Prof. Lugger gives the following reason for the scarcity of potato bugs: "A knowledge of the life history of the potato beetle will explain the reason why these insects are so uncommon this year. The extreme drought of last year destroyed the foliage of the potato when the last generation was very young and most of the larva not finding food had to starve. Still quite a number managed to attain full size and attempted to enter the ground for hibernation; the ground being exceeding dry make it difficult for the soft insects to penetrate to any depth and this hardness and great heat combined to kill vast numbers of full grown larva. Still a few succeeded in forming their cells in the ground and hibernated successfully. The very warm spell in the spring coaxed them out of their warm quarters earlier than usual and the succeeding freeze killed most of the bugs which so far escaped destruction."

S. C. Bagley was in last week looking after the log drive.

Ex-policeman, John Dainard was seen upon the streets this week.

G. W. Peake returned to his home in Minneapolis Saturday night.

Duke Jewell sent his family to Valley City, N. D. on a visit this week.

Mrs. I. Fortier went up to Gentilly to visit friends and relatives last week.

R. A. Wilkinson is preparing to build a residence on his farm near this city.

Judge Ives has gone to Michigan for a visit and to take a few trout on the side.

C. G. Winchester, one of the prominent business men of Warren, was in the city last week.

Mrs. Green, sister of Mrs. A. C. Cowling arrived this week to take care of her sister, who is again very ill.

The Jolly Rovers had a pleasant time at their hop on Friday night. It is spoken of as a very enjoyable time.

C. E. Southmayd, of McIntosh, arrived last week from a visit to Connecticut, "where he was always born and raised."

Wm. Bloom hauled the first load of wood sawed at the mill this season. He hauled it to Rapin' at 10 o'clock on Monday.

Rev. Herman P. Fisher left for Amherst, Mass., on Monday evening to spend his vacation. Expects to be gone about four weeks.

M. E. Kirsch and John Oppegaard of the county board, and Henry Nolan went up to examine the county bridge near Gentilly, last week.

The head of the drive reached the Gentilly bridge on Friday morning. Those who predicted their arrival here by July 15th, were off only a few days.

Bert Duntley has resigned his position at Rap's to accept a like position at landlord Baker at the new hotel. Eli Asselyn will be assistant bar-keeper.

Rev. R. H. Battey has resigned as pastor of the Congregational church at Barnesville and will devote his entire attention to his new paper and the temperance work.

Mrs. A. J. Streeter came in from the lake on Thursday to attend the W. R. C. meeting, of which body she is president, and returned to enjoy a few more days at the lake.

Rev. L. W. Squier came up from Detroit to spend the Sabbath returning on Monday evening. The success of the assembly this year has been materially affected by rains.

The head of the drive began to arrive on Friday evening and on Saturday the river was full of great pine logs as far as the eye could reach. The big mill will have to hustle to saw all that will arrive before snow flies.

Conductor W. H. McGraw started last week for the Kootenai country where he will be superintendent on a new road now being built. His many friends here will unite with the JOURNAL in congratulations for a well-deserved promotion.

EFFECTUAL.—Charles J. Booth, Olivewood, Cal., says: "I have used Ayer's Pills in my family for several years, and have always found them most effectual in the relief of ailments arising from a disordered stomach, torpid liver, and constipated bowels."

About five o'clock on Wednesday of last week a son of H. C. Scribner had the misfortune to break his right arm while engaged in raking hay on his father's farm, a few miles southwest of the city. In attempting to get off the rake he slipped and fell on hard ground. He was brought to the city and Dr. Dunlop called to reduce the fracture, and at last accounts was doing as well as could be expected, though the accident will no doubt lay him up for the season.

Agent Fegan was caught for $900 by the Stewart shortage in Grand Forks. The company requires bonds of its agents for all possible shortages and Stewart's bonds were only for $2,000, while the shortage amounts to $2,900.

The big saw mill started in on the season's sawing on Monday morning and after getting warmed up to business struck its usual gait which it will keep up until the logs are gone or until the season ends. Everybody is happy to see the mill at work again.

"Have tried others, but like Ayer's best" is the statement made over and over again by those who testify to the benefit derived from the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Disease never had a greater enemy than this powerful blood-purifier. It makes the weak strong.

A young lady who registered her name as Annie Preston at the training shool went to a livery stable last Friday and engaged a rig for a short drive out into the country. She did not come back and later developements indicated that she had gone to Fargo to meet a lover.

Geo. Ralph has returned from the big cranberry marsh in Marshall county, last week, where he has been surveying and laying out ditches, preparatory to the setting of a number of acres of cranberry bushes. Parties in Crookston and Warren have secured a large tract of land and if the business promises well will go into the cranberry business extensively. We see no reason why it cannot be made successful there as it has been in Becker county in years past.

Inquiries for farm lands are daily on the increase and the register of deeds informs us that the transfers that are being made keeps the office force busy as bees to keep up with. During harvest hundreds of land seekers are to be here looking at the lands when in crop so that they can see what the soil will do. Real estate agents anticipate having the largest sales this fall of any year yet. Present prices for farm lands cannot remain very long but must naturally go higher.

According to the following extract from the Grand Forks Herald we should judge that E. P. Pierce had recently paid a visit to that thriving city and done some talking. The Herald says: "E. P. Pierce, of Crookston: Judge Frank Ives, an attempt to impeach whom was made in the last legislature, has finally come out on top with the numerous cases which led up to the impeachment talk. He got Judge Searle, of the adjoining district, to come over and try the cases, and the verdict of guilty, found in each instance, was followed by a fine of $200, much heavier than had been looked for, and a notice that if the delinquents appeared in court again, and Judge Searle were the Judge, they would be sent to state's prison."

W. W. Wilkins dropped down on us on Thursday looking twenty years younger than he did 15 years ago. At this rate we are wondering how soon Wilk will reach his second childhood? Wilk was a machine agent way back in the 70s, (and ever since, for that matter,) and used to have Becker, Clay, Polk and Kittson counties as his territory—fact; guess he had pretty much all of the rest of the world up this way. Everybody used to know "Wilk," in those days—and the old timers haven't forgotten him yet. He is now interested in hay presses and will make Crookston his headquarters this summer. Wilk has made four or five fortunes during the time the writer has known him—but that fact don't seem to make him feel proud a little bit

A horse was brought up from the Ruesia farm last week to Dr. M. Legnee for treament. The doctor finds his time very fully employed looking after the ailments of the equine family these days.

Atty. Ole G. Vaule went out to Fosston, last week.

Dr. Engsted was over from Grand Forks last evening.

Miss Hancock returned from Detroit on Wednesday morning.

Int. Rev. Coll. T. B. McManus, was at East Grand Forks on Saturday.

Joe Wolf, who has been in the pine woods since January arrived with the drive on Saturday.

Representative Hinckley was a passenger on Monday's down train bound for a short visit to the Twin cities.

Zeb Lusian and Louis Rivard went went up to Euclid this week to build the foundation for H. C. Misner's new house.

Lew Freeman went to St. Paul on the Great Northern on Monday evening, returning via the N. P. on Wednesday morning.

Capt. H. W. Donaldson went south on Monday's train on a flying visit to the Twin cities, returning on Wednesday morning.

Dr. M. Legnee removed a tumor from a horse that was brought to him last week from Red River for treatment. It was a delicate operation and very successfully performed.

For Sale Cheap

If you want a good farm, right adjoining the experimental farm at first price call at the JOURNAL office for particulars. This farm has good artesian well, 15 acres natural timber and balance in crop. Will sell it with or without half interest in the crop now growing thereon. A snap for somebody. [15tf]

Can't Parse It.

Fred Durand, the local writer on the Crookston Daily Times in the issue of the Times of Friday last, says:

"F. B. Chapin, who has occupied the position of Sup't. of schools for Becker county ever since this country was taken away from the Indians, is in the city on a visit to old time friends. He is under the charge of H. E. Cooke today, and the line of talk of those two are indulging in would run a wind stacker."

Now look'e here Fred, this thing is getting too numerous altogether! Awhile ago you accused us of being "good-looking" and now you jump into our mouth and kick at our chatter. Our "good looks" (such as they are) we can't help, we were built that way and we have to stand it, but when it comes to "and the line of talk OF those two ARE indulging in" we cannot parse that——and we'll bet a "cookie" that the ex-Supt. can't either.

That Tired Feeling

Is a common complaint and it is a dangerous symptom. It means that the system is debilitated because of impure blood, and in this condition it is especially liable to attacks of disease. Hood's sarsaparilla is the remedy for this condition, and also for that weakness which prevails at the change of season, climate of life.

Hood's pills act easily, yet promptly and efficiently on the bowels and liver.

It looks like the biggest crowd ever in the opera house will be on deck for Mark Twain's lecture next Monday evening. A great many will be over from Grand Forks, and telegrams from Fosston, Thief River Falls and many other places engaging seats have been received. The box sheet opened at 10, Monday, and Tom Morris' store was crowded to its utmost capacity until noon.

Fred Almy, one of the oldest and best known engineers on the Great Northern road, was in the city last week chatting, with oldtime friends. Fred was one of the first settlers in Glyndon in 1872 where he lived until he went railroading, in 1875 or '76. He now runs from Minot west. Says he sees Phil Porger, "Old Phil," whom everybody here knows, very often as he passes through the town in Montana where Phil is now located.

A. J. Clark left on Monday evening's train for Benton county, Ark., where, he informs us, he intends to make his future home. Mr. Clark is one of the old settlers in Minnesota, has practiced law and run newspapers on the side during a long business life, and now in his later years he goes to a warmer climate to spend the balance of his natural life. He started the first paper ever published at Elk River, published a paper at Little Falls, Detroit, Stephen and Jadis, and various and sundry other points in the state. Mr. Clark is an able lawyer, a good editorial writer and would easily have taken rank as one of the leading minds of the day only for the unfortunate habit he acquired of too much practice at that bar, where the greatest acquirement called for is to be a good judge of whiskey. Mr. Clark, has, however, reformed we are pleased to say, and we sincerely hope that the reformation this time is permanent.

"About a year ago, when we lived in a low, swampy locality, I commenced to feel very miserable. I had frequent sinking spells, sick headaches, and was troubled with neuralgia and also

Fluttering of the Heart

I became completely run down and could not do much of anything. At the request of a neighbor I decided to try Hood's Sarsaparilla and before the first bottle had been taken it had benefited me so much that all the rest of the family were taking it, and we are greatly pleased with the results." MRS. AUGUSTA E. GRANT, Big Bend, Wisconsin.

Hood's Pills cure all Liver Ills, Biliousness, Jaundice, Indigestion, Sick Headache. 25c.

The Western Soil Culture, published at Sioux City, Iowa, Minneapolis and Omaha, claims that the portions of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska and Kansas which are subject to such severe drouths, and form what is known as the semi-arid district, can be made, by proper soil cultivation, to yield as bountiful a harvest, even in the dryest seasons, as any part of the United States; this, too, without irrigation or any expensive machinery, and simply by the use of correct and scientific methods of farming. For the purpose of demonstrating the truth of their statements they are operating a large farm in each of the above states. The results they have obtained are both interesting. Their paper is a monthly publication, and gives a full report of these farms in each issue. Every farmer ought to read it.

COWS FOR SALE.

Having decided to rent the farm I will offer for sale the fine herd of Jersey cows now on section 9 town of Fairfax, or will rent the farm including the dairy stock. For particulars enquire of H. E. Cooke at the JOURNAL office, Crookston.

Has Got Bugs.

P. P. Bodine, the genius who presides over the destinies of the McIntosh Tribune, wildly paws the air and kicks because the JOURNAL said that there are less potato bugs this year then usual and says "It's a no such thing auther; there be bugs teither and if you don't believe it you orter look at us!" Bugs usually do prefer verdant vegetation; and it is by no means surprising that brother Bodine is afflicted; and judging from his frantic attacks upon Crookston should not be surprised if he has worms also.

Talks Agriculture.

Speaking of his experience on the farm this year Halvor Steenerson said: "I thought I had sowed all my "wild oats" long ago but come to go over that eighty I bought of Louis Gonyea I find a crop of wild oats for your whiskers! I have been told that they were mine but I am of the opinion that they are a stock Louis had left over. Talking of the wonderful productiveness of the soil of Minnesota I have an example of it that surprises me. Last winter I had 100 cords of wood cut and piled up in my woods and the other day I went through the woods to see that wood and I'll be switched if every stick of it did not have from one to a dozen large healthy young trees growing out of it, enough, if it keeps on growing, to make at least 200 cords of wood by fall! What with my oat crop and that kind of cord wood I dont see why I can't make farming pay. I believe I can."

Prof. A. B. Christy and wife, who have been in attendance at the training school left last evening for a few weeks visit to friends in Ohio. Prof. Christy said the training school now in session is the most successful one ever held in this county. Says Miss Sanford is one of the best instructors and the efforts that Prof. McCrillis has made to secure a large attendance and provide for a successful meeting have contributed in no small degree to the success of the meeting.

would be a more appropriate name for that common cause of suffering—dyspepsia—because most cases of dyspepsia can be traced to food cooked with lard. Let COTTOLENE take the place of lard in your kitchen and good health will take the place of Dyspepsia. Try it. Every tin of the genuine COTTOLENE bears this trade mark—steer's head in cotton-plant wreath.

EGGS ARE A BIG ITEM.

The magnitude of the egg product of the United States is vaguely understood by those not directly in the trade. The leading cities of the country consumed 600,000,000 dozens last year. Laying them end to end they would form a line 170,454 miles long. In other words, they would stretch around the world over seven times, and would go around it once forming a band 14 inches wide. The product handled for daily consumption last year at an average price of 17 cents a dozen makes a total of over $100,000,000, while the value of the wheat crop was less than $300,000,000.

Eggs are used in many ways that the general public seldom thinks of. If the hen should stop laying, not only would the gourmand suffer, but the arts would come in for a large share of hardship. The number of eggs used by photographers, artists, painters and paper hangers, bookbinders and chemists, and in the mechanical arts in general, is something enormous.

Even the poor, despised bad egg has come to be a necessity for certain uses other than those of the stage. A few years ago it was discovered that the yolk and decayed parts made the finest of preparations for finishing leather. When properly worked up, the bad egg is barreled and sent to France, Germany and other countries, to say nothing of large quantities used at home. It has become indispensable to morocco and kid dressers as well as to glove manufacturers. The proportion of bad eggs coming into market has been reduced to a minimum since the candling system has come into vogue. This has been reduced to almost a science. Experts are required for the work. Before being shipped to the city markets the eggs are taken into a dark room and examined in front of a candle. By this means any spots showing signs of decay are discovered and only good ones are sent to market, thus saving the freight on poor stock, while the housewife is saved annoyance.

In the early days of the commercial history of eggs farmers employed primitive methods for the preservation of eggs in store for the winter months, when the supply is almost cut off and the market price abnormally high. In January the price often used to run as high as 50 and 60 cents a dozen, while in the spring and early summer the supply was a drug and dear at from 4 to 8 cents. The eggs were packed in oats or sawdust and also in preserving fluids. This process was far from satisfactory. The preserving fluids had a tendency to weaken the shells. A process came into use by which the eggs were dried by artificial heat and ground up into the shape of meal for packing. Such egg meal found favor with bakers and was practicable for use on ocean vessels.

The cold storage system of preservation was hit upon as the most successful, and it has assumed vast proportions, millions of dollars being expended in plants. Chicago has several of the largest concerns of the kind in the country. The old method of using ice is being gradually dispensed with in view of the improved facilities of the big storage houses. Chicago has sufficient capacity to hold 230,000,000 eggs at one time. Notwithstanding alleged discoveries by which eggs can be manufactured no process has been found successful up to date. No egg has ever been manufactured except at a greater cost than the production of the natural one.

Chickens as Weather Prophets.

A grizzled and gray Montgomery county farmer, says the Philadelphia Press, formed one of a group of men who were discussing weather signs in the Terminal market. "I always know when there is to be a windstorm," he said, "by watching the turkeys and chickens go to roost each night. In calm weather the fowls always roost on their poles with their heads alternating each way—that is, one faces east, the next west and so on. But when there is going to be a high wind they always roost with their heads toward the direction from which it is coming. There are reasons for these different ways of roosting, I take it. When there is no wind to guard against, they can see other danger more readily if they are headed in both directions, but when wind is to arise they face it because they can hold their positions better. But the part I can't understand," he concluded, "is how the critters know that the wind is going to rise when we mortals lack all intimation of it."

Exchanging Eggs.

The neighbor who thinks you are a fool for buying eggs of pure breeds will come along next spring and ask you to "exchange eggs" with him. He is mean enough to discourage your attempt to improve, and also mean enough to impose on you after you make the attempt. When a man buys eggs he is buying stock. Eggs can be had at market price, but pure bred stock is not so easily procured. A man might as well ask you to exchange a Berkshire pig for a long nosed handspike, as ask you to exchange eggs from pure bred fowls for those from nondescripts. When your neighbor asks you to exchange eggs, he really does not want the eggs, for he may have plenty of eggs. What he wants is better stock. Let him pay for his share, as you did.—Poultry Keeper.

Things That Don't Pay.

Keeping more breeds than you have separate runs for and can breed in their strict purity.

Indiscriminate dosing and doctoring for slight ailments that only need care and warm quarters.

Attempting to breed to a nicety without the standard of perfection and a first class poultry paper.

Sending out inferior fowls for good ones, or, in other words, doing business on the suicidal plan, which kills the breeder's reputation and throws discredit on the fraternity.—Poultry Fancier.

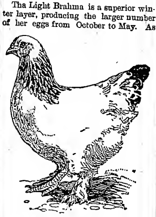
GAPES IN CHICKENS.

A Writer Who Claims It Is Nothing but a Cold.

A subscriber from Delaplana, Va., writes as follows to the Baltimore Sun: "I would like to say something about gapes in spring chickens. I say spring chickens, because summer chickens are not troubled to any extent with gapes. I am aware that my idea will be hooted, but, nevertheless, it is my experience. I am not a chicken man, but raise enough every year to have for use on my table nine months in the year and to have several dozen to dispose of. I have raised chicks on the same ground for the past 30 years, and have lost not over six chicks by gapes. It is true that my chicken run is on a hill, and I have plank floors in all my coops. I do not let chicks run out in the morning until the air is tempered with the sun. I feed on baked cornmeal seasoned with a little salt and pepper. Gapes in chickens is nothing but a bad cold (roup, if you prefer to call it so). Do everything you can as to cleanliness, keep the chicks from exposure as you would your infant child, and you will not be bothered with gapes." The above is a new theory regarding the gape question. As old fowls are much more affected with roup than chicks and never have any signs of that yawning or gaping so characteristic of the disease, it would seem the writer of the above is wrong in his conclusions.

Light Brahmas.

The Light Brahma is a superior winter layer, producing the larger number of her eggs from October to May. As poultry the chicks have to be killed quite young, say ten 10 weeks old for broilers, the most profitable time as roasters being at 8 months.



LIGHT BRAHMA PULLET.

Buff Leghorns.

Within the last few years a craze for buff colored fowls has seized the poultry fraternity. The old and deserving Buff Cochins have returned to favor, and varieties of the same color have been made up from other breeds by crossing. As a result we have Buff Wyandottes, Buff Plymouth Rocks and Buff Leghorns. This variety was first accepted by fanciers as a standard breed in 1893. They do not yet breed as true to feather and other features as varieties that have been longer established, but this difficulty will be overcome in a few years by proper handling.

Buff Leghorns have the excellence of all Leghorns—that of being famous layers. They have the reputation of excelling all the other Leghorn varieties in the size of their eggs and in the weight of their bodies.

If the breeders of this new variety wish to make it popular with farmers, they must so manipulate it as to maintain its present reputation. The color is a popular one, and a prolific laying habit is desirable, but those who keep poultry for everyday, practical purposes demand eggs of a fair size and a carcass that sells well in market and affords a good supply of meat when brought on the table. If fanciers are wise, this hint will be sufficient.

Hens That Will Lay.

Never feed all corn or cornmeal, but feed all the fowls will eat to both old and young, the year round of suitable food. I have no faith in the theory, says an expert in an exchange, that lean pullets will lay more eggs than fat ones. For laying hens, give morning and noon a feed of two parts cornmeal, three parts wheat middlings and four parts wheat bran; add a little salt, mix with hot water, feed warm in cold weather. Give green food, especially in winter, chopped apples, onions, beets, carrots, etc., mixed with the warm mash, adding a little meat, lard or suet scraps, three times a week. Keep a cabbage hung in the henhouse within reach of the fowls, give warm water two or three times a day in winter, feed wheat or corn at night. Keep ground bone, oyster shells, broken crockery and charcoal where young and old can have access to them the year round, and my experience for it—if your henhouse is reasonably warm—you will have winter layers, if your pullets are hatched by the 1st of May. Do not keep too many in a small house. Ten pullets in a house 8 by 10 will lay more eggs in proportion than 20 with the same care.

The Indispensable Hen.

Our real American bird is the turkey, and a lordly fellow he is when arrayed in all his pride. But, though he has not lacked advocates, he is not likely to take the place of the eagle in our national devices.

When it comes to merit of the highest order, the first of all birds beyond comparison is the hen. It adds to the wealth of the country every year in eggs alone $185,000,000, or about the combined value of our output of iron and wool. The hen in England is a great institution, and yet that country imported $22,000,000 worth of eggs and poultry last year. Nobody ever complains of an overproduction of eggs, and they are a cash article. But no political economist has ever thought the hen worthy of his scientific consideration.

The world could easily survive the loss of all political economists, but what a stir there would be if the hen should be threatened with extermination!

RAISING QUAIL.

The Result of Twenty Years' Careful Experiments.

Harry Rudolph, says the Philadelphia Record, has bred, hatched and raised to maturity in captivity over 100 quail at his home, on Van Pelt street, this city. To those who have ever captured a young quail and tried to make it live this will be good news, for some day there will probably be a quail farm where this most valuable game bird will be bred and raised in quantities. Recent severe winters have greatly lessened the natural supply of quail, not only in this section, but farther south as well, and game protective societies have experienced much difficulty in obtaining as many birds as they wanted for breeding purposes.

Mr. Rudolph's discovery of the food young quail require was not an accident, but the result of long study. He has kept live quail for the last 20 years, but only until recently has he succeeded in getting the young birds to live. All ordinary food, such as is given young chickens, turkeys, etc., he found to be useless with quail, the young invariably dying. He tried brood after brood and finally turned his attention to wild food, such as the birds would be likely to get in their natural state. He was successful and now says he can raise 65 per cent of all young birds hatched. Just what this wild food is Mr. Rudolph says is his secret. His success proves that it is a good one. After the birds are 10 days old they will eat anything and live.

Points About Eggs.

It is not always safe to judge an egg by its appearance. It may be apparently fresh, yet if it absorbs enough air to permit it to float in water even a little above the bottom of the dish it may not be perfectly fresh.

The white of a perfectly fresh egg cannot be beaten to a froth as easily as the white of an egg that is a day or two old, and if the egg is very cold the beating of the white will be accomplished more easily.

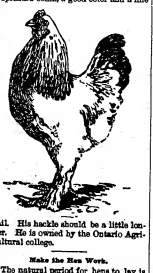
When the shell of an egg will peel off as if the egg had been hard boiled, it is not fresh, as the contents of a fresh egg adhere closely to the shell and must be removed.

When held to a strong light, a fresh egg is clear, and if shaken in the hand no jarring motion of the contents must be felt.

Many who use eggs daily are unable to judge of their quality, and indeed it is difficult to determine the freshness of an egg by any one, but the above may be of use to some who are inexperienced.

A Light Brahma Cockerel.

This is a good all round bird. He has a splendid comb, a good color and a fine tail. His hackle should be a little longer. He is owned by the Ontario Agricultural college.



Make the Hen Work.

The natural period for hens to lay is in the spring if they ever will lay. Those that do not lay are not in proper condition; they may be overfed and fat, as is the usual case, and this is more detrimental to egg production than any other cause. In the spring and summer the eggs should cost less, as it takes less food for the hens in the warm season. Make the hens hunt and scratch for their food by turning them out to forage and give them no food except at night, when a quart of grain to 25 hens is sufficient. Hens that are active and industrious should be able to find all they require during the warm season. They need not be at all hungry, for the different classes of poultry will eat alfalfa and green foods besides insects, which provide a portion of the food of the hens. When the hens are given liberty and made to work for themselves, they thrive best and lay the largest number of eggs.—Farm News.

The Best Breed.

All breeds have good points, and all possess objectionable ones, but for northern localities Wyandottes or Plymouth Rocks are good, if the chief desideratum is eggs. I have successfully raised several varieties of fowls, and my Wyandottes laid more eggs in a year than my White Leghorns or Houdans, and especially during the winter, when they brought the best prices. They consumed no more food, and the marketed fowls brought over one-half more money than Leghorns or Houdans. A neighbor raising Brown Leghorns and Plymouth Rocks found that the latter laid equally as well, consumed no more food, and brought a little more money when marketed than my Wyandottes.—Clara S. Everts in Practical Farmer.

For Young Ducks.

Young ducks thrive best on soft food. One part cornmeal, one part bran and a small proportion of animal meal, mixed with cooked potatoes or turnips, make an excellent mess for them. The drinking vessel must always contain plenty of water, so that the bills may be cleaned by the ducklings, as they are liable to die if their nostrils are clogged. They also require water to assist in swallowing their food.

AN ENGLISH CASUAL.

WHERE TRAMPS GET FOOD AND LODGING FOR WORK.

Josiah Flynt and a Companion Wind Up a Study of Tramp Life In England by a Visit to a "Spike"—Meeting With a Great Friend of Mark Twain.

Josiah Flynt, who has given interesting studies on tramp life in Germany and in this country, has extended his investigations to England. He writes a paper entitled, "Two Tramps In England" in Century. He and his companion, a German student, completed a tour through the provinces with an experience in a "casual" at Notting Hill, London. Mr. Flynt writes:

We appeared at the door of the ward about half past 7 in the evening. A little window was raised, and I stepped forward to state my business. Unconsciously I leaned against the sill of the window, which offended the inspector in charge considerably.

"What's your name?" he thundered. Still leaning on the sill, I gave him my name honestly enough. He then remarked to some person inside that we were not accustomed to such places evidently, and called out, "Stand back, will you!" Back I stood. He cried out again, "Take off your hat!" My hat came off instanter. Still again: "You come in here as if you was a meeleeonary. You're not. You're a casual." I was as meek as could well be. Ryborg was itching to grab the inspector with his long arms. The next question was as to where we had slept the night before.

"Straw stack," I replied.

"None of your impudence! You slept out. Why don't you say so? Have you got any money?"

"A hap'enny, sir."

"Hand it in." In it went. Then I had to tell my trade, which was that of a sailor, and naturally the next question was as to where I was bound.

"To Ameriky, sir, if I can ever get there."

"You're goin to tramp it, aren't you?"

"Yes, sir; that's my intention." But for the life of me I could not see how I was to reach America that way. I was so frightened that I would have told him anything he wanted.

When he was through with us, a kind hearted attendant took us in hand, gave us some gruel and bread, a bath, clean night shirts, and then a cell apiece, in which we slept very well.

As there were only four inmates that morning we were needed for the cleaning up, and so escaped stone breaking, which I dreaded exceedingly, and were put at various light occupations—or rather I was. Ryborg was the victim of his strength. Our breakfast consisted of the same dish as our supper of the night before. I was soon busy as general fireman, scrubber, knife cleaner, coal carrier, dish washer and helper of my sister sufferer, Mrs. Murphy, as she washed her task of towels and shirts. At noon we had pea soup and bread. I enjoyed it, but Ryborg did not. The poor fellow was feeling badly. He had had to scrub nearly 20 cells, and the bending over incident to such a feat had nearly broken his back. At dinner he said plaintively, "Flynt, I want to go home." "So do I," I replied, "but I fancy we're wanted here till tomorrow morning." This proved to be the case, but he felt better in the afternoon and got through comfortably, wheeling nearly a ton of stone from some of the cells to the general pile. He earned his "keep," if ever any poor prisoner did.

I fear I was more shiftless, for about the middle of the afternoon the attendant who was with me at the furnace said: "You might as well rest. Just keep your eye on the fires, that's all." It was kind of him, and as I had at least earned my pea soup and gruel I took his advice. He was kinder to me, I think, because I gave him a corncob pipe which he had had to take away from me the night before. During the day he had asked me several questions about it, and I said, "It's a very decent sort of pipe—coolinlike, you know."

"Doesn't Mark Twain always smoke one o' them pipes?" said he.

"Blest if I know," said I, "but I can well think it."

"I'm a great friend of Mark Twain," he pursued, "an I'm a-thinkin o' gettin one o' them pipes, jest out of respect for him."

"Well," said I, "permit me in the name of your respect to present you with my pipe. Besides you've got it anyhow." He thanked me profusely, and promised to keep it forever. Later in the day he reported it to be just as I had said, "sort o' coolin like." And he was a good friend to me all the rest of my stay in the Notting Hill station.

On Wednesday morning we were turned loose with our two ha'pennies. We were both so happy that we decided to get off the road that very day.

We had been tramps for three weeks, and had walked most of this time fully 15 miles a day. So we looked up my friend at the Temple, and in a few hours were respectable again. That same day I took my tramp clothes out to the casual ward and presented them to my friend the attendant. I had told him the day before that I expected to get new "togs" soon, and he had put in a plea for my old ones. Good luck to him and them.

A BALL AT THE ELYSEE.

How the Plain Dress of Our Minister There Distinguishes Him.

A modern ball at the palace of the Elysee, in Paris, where the president of France lives, is an extraordinarily brilliant and picturesque sight, for, besides the military trappings and gold braid of the army officers and the exquisite, delicately tinted toilets and elaborate coiffures of the Frenchwomen, there are the varied "habits" of the many members of the diplomatic corps. These uniforms alone are sufficient to furnish a brilliant mass of color and elaborate display. Described in detail and according to their nations, they are these:

Russia.—A green tunic, embroidered in silver and figured in lilac.

It should be remembered that the rank of a diplomat is shown by the embroideries that adorn his uniform. The higher standing he has the greater the amount of gold that is upon his person. Embassadors and ministers plenipotentiary have their collars and cuffs, their breasts and the facings of their pockets set off with golden thread. The secretaries of embassies and the various consul generals have just a shade less of adornment on their uniforms.

From an overplusage of gold lace the other extreme is reached in the conventional evening clothes of the American embassador, who appears a solemn and marked figure in the gay assemblages in his relief of somber black and white. The French presidents usually wear ordinary evening clothes, cut in the conventional style, but their white shirt fronts are broken gorgeously by the broad red band of the Legion of Honor and the great star of that order.—New York World.

Does the Eye See?

The question asked in the headline may sound odd to you if you have never taken the trouble to give the subject serious thought, but I venture the broad statement that you are not able to answer the question "offhand." It is an admitted fact, I must confess, that the eye is the "organ of vision," yet there is but little doubt, even in the minds of opticians and physiologists, that the phenomena of "seeing" is chiefly mental—in other words, that it is the mind and not the eye that "sees." How often have you seen a friend who seemingly was engaged in looking intently at some object on the table, at the opposite side of the room or at some picture, who on being aroused from his day dream would confess that he was "looking at nothing in particular." The explanation of the fact that he saw "nothing in particular" is plain enough if properly set forth. It is because his mind was busy with other times and scenes.

Faces, bits of wayside scenery, etc., were being presented to view in the panorama of the mind, and the "mind's eye"—or mental vision—was engaged in eagerly scanning pictures of impressions made thereon months, years or scores of years before. Another test of this mind vision theory is to shut your eyes tightly and then ply the brain to the task of recalling faces and forms that have not been seen by the eye for years. And, again, if you want to know whether your companion looked at his watch with his brain or his eyes, ask him the time of day after he puts the timepiece in his pocket.—St. Louis Republic.

WORKING FOR PAY.

Are We Making Progress Toward Equality of Opportunity?

Taking the whole number of persons engaged in all remunerative or gainful occupations, I find that in 1860 such persons constituted 26.19 per cent of the whole population. In 1870 this percentage had increased to 32.43, in 1880 to 34.68, while in 1890 it was 36.31, an increase of more than 10 per cent, relatively, in one generation, the period from 1860 to 1890. This, it should be borne in mind, is the percentage of the total number of persons engaged in gainful occupations of the total population. If we examine now the percentage which the total number of persons engaged in all gainful occupations is of the persons 10 years of age and over, which is the truer comparison, we find that the increase has been as regular, but a little greater, for in 1860 it was 36.72 and in 1890 47.95, an increase of over 11 per cent, relatively, in the 30 years named. This fact alone, it seems to me, answers conclusively and definitely the question we are considering. If the total number of persons engaged in gainful occupations stood still relative to the population, the argument would not be so clearly carried, but with a constant and persistent increase in the relative proportions of this class of people to the whole number of population, and to the whole number 10 years of age and over, there can be no other answer than an affirmative one.

These figures prove conclusively that we are not only making real progress toward a greater opportunity, but toward a greater equality of opportunity in social and industrial life, and they completely kill all arguments made to prove that machinery, the influence of invention, displaces labor, so far as society as a whole is concerned. It would be absurd to argue for a single moment that the introduction of machinery has not in many instances displaced individuals and reduced them not only to relative poverty but to pauperism. The answer cannot well be made to the individual, but the facts cited prove that so far as the whole body of the people is concerned there is no such displacement, and a study of the oppressive influence of machinery and invention by the statistical method further proves the value of the argument. The vast number of new openings, never before known, resulting from inventions, offers the best proof in this direction, and it offers, too, proof that no line of opportunity will be abandoned when another of a more profitable nature opens.—Carroll D. Wright in Forum.

His Thirst Was Very Precious.

Some years ago while traveling from Kansas City to St. Louis the seat in front of me was occupied by a typical cattleman and a man who looked like an eastern college man. The western man, a whole souled, genial fellow, after telling his companion all about his western ranch and about the business which called him to Chicago, reached down in his grip and drew forth a bottle of generous proportions.

"Partner," said he, "there's the best liquor west of Kansas City. Throw a hooker into you and give me your opinion."

The clerical looking man, though terribly shocked, managed to say, "Friend, I have not drunk for 40 years."

The Texan jumped from his seat and exclaimed: "Great guns! I would give $1,000 for your thirst!"—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Jolly Rovers "roved" over to Grand Forks on Tuesday, tackled a bigger club on the diamond than they could get away with and got walloped to the Queen's taste. The score? "O, that,s different!"

Mr. Carhart, who recently bought a farm in Brislet, came down on Tuesday and met two of his old neighbors who had just arrived and took them out to his farm to show them the beauties of our Polk county soil and what it can do if properly treated.

Ike Benoit's delivery horse took a bit of a spin around a block or two on Tuesday, just by way of getting limbered up He strung things pretty lively while he was in the business and Ike will have to indulge in a new delivery wagon. Wonder if the McKinnon boys haven't been feeding that horse a few extra oats?

Invitations are out for the opening event of the new Hotel Crookston, which will occur on Wednesday evening, July 31st. This will be without doubt the great event of the season, many distinguished guests from abroad being in attendance. The work of getting the hotel in readiness for the event is rapidly going forward, an army of employes being constantly on deck, and the new hotel will be shining resplendently the day on which the auspicious event occurs.

Euclid items.

James Gray, of Fergus Falls, visited with his friend, Miss Anna Hancock, Tuesday.

John Berkholtz, of Grand Forks, came over Tuesday morning and went up the line, returning in the evening.

Robert Teal drove to Crookston Tuesday evening with D. H. Turner, of the Ogden, Merrill & Green Crockery Co., of Minneapolis.

Robert Teal drove to Warren on Wednesday and was accompanied home by B. S. Chapin, who spent Thursday with relatives and friends in Euclid.

Nick Engie and wife drove to Crookston Wednesday. Nick went down to purchase lumber for his new house.

C. E. Harrington made a business trip to Crookston Thursday.

H. C. Misner, Fred Myers and Matt Blever transacted business at the county seat Friday.

Contractor August Wallentine was down from Warren Saturday and engaged Robt. Teal to furnish him with a carload of stone to be used in the construction of Warren's new school building.

At the regular annual school election, which was held at the school house, on Saturday evening, Robert Casmey was elected to succeed J. S. Chapin as treasurer for the coming year.

Kelso and Son have disposed of the east half of section 33, and the southwest quarter of section 27, to John Listow.

Mr. George Easby went to Grand Forks, Tuesday, to spend a few days.

Dr. J. S. Chapin made a business trip to Crookston, Tuesday.

Mrs. E. C. Murney and Mrs. Hugh Douglas spent Tuesday in Crookston.

Mrs. J. S. Chapin was confined to the house last week by illness, but is now able to be about again.

Mr. Brink, wife and daughter, were in town shopping, Tuesday.

Mrs. McPhee, of Lockhart, is visiting with her mother, Mrs. Wm. Davidson, at the Keystone farm.

THE RETIRED BURGLAR.

One of the Most Remarkable Incidents In His Variegated Career.

"After I had gathered in what I could find in the dining room," said the retired burglar, telling of his experience in a house in western Massachusetts, "I started for the parlor. This parlor was just in front of the dining room, and there were heavy curtains between. I pushed these curtains one side and went in carefully, so as not to mar the furniture by kicking it, feeling along for the table which I knew must be in the center, I came to it presently and found it very solid feeling, with a sort of molding or carving along the edge. I had struck it on a side apparently, and so I felt toward the dining room until I came to a corner of the table, and then I felt along the and for the next corner to get the dimensions of it. I struck the other corner so quick that it made my hair raise right up. I know there was only one thing they build of such shape, and that's a coffin.

"I turned my light on it, and it was a big oak casket, one of the kind they make now'days, square and solid, and it had three silver handles on each side. I didn't dare look in, but I felt as though I ought to have them handles. The head was toward the front of the house and the foot toward the dining room. I set my lamp down and got my screwdriver out of my bag and began on one of the handles nearest the foot. I suppose I must have felt a little easier after I'd got that one off and into the bag. I know I went around the end and then up the other side pretty prompt, getting 'em off smooth as could be, and around the head and started down the other side where I'd begun. I got the handle off by the head on that side, and then I went at the last handle, the one in the middle. In turning the last screw out of the handle I dropped my screwdriver.

"It seemed to me as though it made more noise than an iron telegraph pole dropping inside of an empty iron oil tank. I just lay down and waited. I didn't dare run. I expected a million people would come pouring down the stairs and from all around, and I just waited, lying on the floor, but there didn't anybody come. You know, the fact was that dropping that screwdriver hadn't made noise enough to wake up a mouse, but it seemed to me like the greatest racket you ever heard, and it scared me most to death. But when nobody came I picked up the screwdriver and set it in the notch of the screw again, and I'd just got that handle off when I heard somebody say:

"'Don't you think you're crowdin us here a little, my friend, carrying away them handles?' It was the dead man sitting up and looking down at me. I suppose he'd been in an epileptic trance or something of that sort, and dropping that screwdriver had made just shock enough to start him into life again.

"I was so scared I dropped the handle, but I grabbed my bag—I suppose instinct made me do that—and started out through the dining room again and down cellar and out by the window I came in by. I didn't wait to see if anybody was coming this time.

"I got $117 for those five handles. It seemed a pity to lose the other one, but it was always a great satisfaction to me to think that I'd woke the man up."—New York Sun.

She Wilted Him.

There is one patron of the North Pennsylvania street line who has the reputation of being most dreadfully disagreeable. The conductors say he is a kicker, and the neighbors say he has the dyspepsia. Anyway he generally creates a scene wherever he goes, but since a recent experience he is a little particular about his conduct on a street car. He boarded a crowded car at—well, some street between Ohio and Seventh. The aisle was filled with persons holding on to the straps. He stood for a second in the doorway and glowered at those within. The conductor placed his hand on the shoulder of the bad tempered man and said:

"Pass on, please, and don't stand in the doorway!"

The disagreeable man turned his head a bit and snapped in return:

"Don't get gay. Stop your pushing, or I'll report—"

The unfortunate man, while making this speech to the conductor, did not observe that a woman was attempting to pass out. Like many others, he thought the car had stopped for him alone. But his further remarks were cut short by an energetic shove from the lady passenger. She thought his cutting remarks were aimed at her, and in a high pitched voice she replied:

"You are insulting, sir, and very ungentlemanly. I must get out, and if you are not enough of a gentleman to allow me to pass I shall do some reporting."

The bad tempered man tried to explain and apologize, but the woman brushed past him. All the passengers heard the remarks and witnessed the incident, and the disagreeable man looked truly ashamed.—Indianapolis Journal.

A CRUCIAL QUESTION.

THE FIFTH DAY.

The Debate Getting Down to the Present Time.

CHICAGO, July 23.—"Back dates" were thrown to the dogs during the day in the debate between Horr and Harvey. It was more than ever a case of Greek meets Greek, and interest in the tug of war heightened at once when it was seen that the days of Pericles, as well as 1792, 1816, 1873 and other years, no matter how historic or important, were all barred more or less in favor of 1895. The early part of the day's debate was taken up with a discussion of some remarks of Senator Morrill and had but little bearing on the question. Mr. Harvey then defined scientific bimetallism to be the free coinage of both gold and silver at an assumed ratio; a change in the size of the gold dollar whenever the parity between the gold and silver coins should require; the option to both individuals and the government to pay in the cheaper money. He held that, under these circumstances, silver would not depreciate, because there would be an unlimited demand at the ratio fixed by law, and no man would sell his bullion below the price at which he could have it coined.

Not a Question of Ratio.

Mr. Horr said this matter of ratio had little or nothing to do with the question. The fact was that all of the civilized nations of the world refused to recognize silver and would only receive it at its bullion value, measured in gold. What might be if the other nations should join in admitting silver to free coinage was one thing; for us to attempt it along was another.

Mr. Harvey said that a dear dollar and a cheap dollar were comparative terms to be measured by a man's circumstances. If a gold dollar were worth more than a silver dollar, some more costly substance might be found out of which to make dollars. He said he did not propose to allow Mr. Horr to pose as the friend of the laboring man. The gold men had thrown some 4,000,000 workingman out of employment and had put some of them in prison because they objected to having their wages decreased.

Mr. Horr said it was in 1879 that we resumed specie payment and the only money of final redemption was gold. He asked, was distress abroad in the land from that on? The fact is the years from 1879 to 1892 found our people better employed and at better wages than in any other same number of years since this government was formed.

DEFENDER AGAIN VICTOR.

She Leads the Vigilant by Nearly 10 Minutes in a 30-Mile Race.

NEW YORK, July 23.—The yachts Defender and Vigilant sailed the second trial race in a fair breeze. The distance sailed was 30 miles, and the time of the Defender was 3:44:20. The Vigilant crossed the line 3:54:10.

MAJORITY OF 108.

English Election Returns Show More Conservative Gains.

LONDON, July 23.—The pollings thus far returned leave the state of the parties as follows: Conservatives 229, Liberal Unionists 55, total Unionists 353. Liberals 114, McCarthyites 54, Parnellites 7, Labor 2, total opposition 177. The government now has a majority of 108.

LARGE REINFORCEMENTS.

Preparations for Sending Over 20,000 Spanish Troops to Cuba.

MADRID, July 23.—Preparations are being made to dispatch large reinforcements of troops to Cuba. According to the present plans, by Aug. 15, 20,000 infantry, 1,250 cavalry, 1,200 artillery and 1,000 engineers will leave Spain for Havana. The government will ask the cortes to mobilize the first infantry without delay.

Davis Was Guilty.

PIERRE, S. D., July 23.—E. W. Davis was found guilty of the murder of Nels Carlson. The jury fixed the punishment at imprisonment for life.

Starkweather Prosecution Rests.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., July 24.—After two weeks spent in examining witnesses the prosecution in the Mayor Starkweather investigation has rested its case. A recess was taken until Thursday night, when the defense will offer testimony. But few witnesses will be called by the defense and a decision will be reached about the last of the week.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

(Last pub. Sept. 5, '95.)

NOTICE is hereby given that Charles L. Hoff and Anne Hoff, his wife, did execute and deliver to J. W. Smith their mortgage dated the 22nd day of April, 1887, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 25th day of April, 1887, at 9 o'clock A. M., in book 30 of Mortgages, on pages 471 to 475, which said mortgage and the debt thereby secured were by assignment, dated the third day of June, 1892, and duly recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds on the 29th day of June, 1895, at 8:45 o'clock A. M. in Book 67 on page 566, duly sold and transferred by said J. W. Smith to the undersigned, Olaf O. Searle, who has ever since been and now is the owner and holder thereof. And default having been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the nonpayment of the sum of Three Hundred ($300.00) Dollars, and interest thereon at 8 per cent per annum, from April 3rd, 1892, secured thereby, and the amount now actually due and claimed to be due thereon at the date of this notice is the sum of Three Hundred and seventy-six and 80-100 ($376.80); and no action at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover said debt or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFOR, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, the premises described in said mortgage, situated, lying and being in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: The East half of the Southeast quarter of Section twenty-three, and West half of the Southwest quarter of Section twenty-four, in Township one hundred and forty-seven, Range forty-two, West of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty acres, more or less, according to the government survey thereof, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, at the front door of the court house in the City of Crookston, County of Polk, State of Minnesota, at 10 o'clock A. M., on Saturday the 7th day of September 1895, to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage, and $25.00 attorney's fees provided for in said mortgage, and the costs and charges of notice and sale.

Dated July 25th 1895.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

IT ANNOYED HIM.

He Came From the West and Was Puzzled That New Yorkers Knew It.

His coat was a trifle too long and his trousers an inch too wide at the knee to be strictly and exactly fashionable; but, aside from these nice discriminations, he was dressed according to the dictates of the fashion autocrats.

We took the "L" together at Park place, and I noticed a puzzled expression, half amusement, half annoyance, on his face. At Thirty-third street he surrendered his seat to an elderly woman and stood in the aisle in front of where I sat. It was evident that he was anxious to tell some one of the subjects on his mind, so I was not surprised when he caught my eye and opened the conversation.

"Just now," he said, "as I was hurrying to the station, a man caught hold of my arm and stopped me. He was a respectable looking fellow, well clothed, and wore a grayish beard parted in the middle.

"'I've been on a drunk,' the man said to me, 'and I am sobering up. I live in Hackensack, and I want to get home. I haven't a cent and want a quarter.'

"I looked him over carefully," continued my chance acquaintance, "concluded he was telling the truth and gave him the money. As I hurried on, he shouted after me:

"'I knew you were from the west, and I knew you would give me the money. They are white out there!'

"Now, what I want to know," said my acquaintance, "is how did he know I was from the west? It's true, but how did he know it? Would you know it? Am I marked? Have I any tag on me to tell others that I am a westerner?"

"None that I know of," I assured him, "unless it be such little things as giving your seat up to ladies. That generally indicates that a man is not a native New Yorker."

Sunlight.

Seek the sunlight is the advice of all present day hygienists. Patients on the sunny side of the hospital ward recover soonest. The person who always walks on the sunny side of the street outlives his shade seeking brother by ten years. Sleep in rooms where the sun has shed its rays all day. Bask in the sun all you can, and your druggist's and doctor's notes will go to protest.—New York

A Rope Barometer.

In the office of the Des Moines Register is the best barometer in the state. It consists of an ordinary rope attached to the carrier box between the first and fourth floors, making it nearly 60 feet long. This rope is wonderfully sensitive to changes in the atmosphere. At least 24 hours before the average rain it begins to tighten by the absorption of moisture. Its predictions nearly always come true.

A MORMON PUZZLE.

In Salt Lake City they name streets as nowhere else on earth. For general confusion to a newcomer no other system equals it. In the long run it has its advantages, for it not only guides you to any street with pomp and ceremony, but it sharpens your hearing and encourages mental concentration. The street system of Salt Lake originates at Temple square, wherein stand the tabernacle, the general assembly hall and the temple which was 36 years in building. A wall 10 or 12 feet high incloses the square. The streets passing it were named East Temple, South Temple, West Temple and North Temple respectively.

East Temple street is the principal business thoroughfare of the city, and its name has been changed to Main street. The first street south of and parallel to South Temple street is named First South street. East of Main street it is East First South street; west of Main street it is West First South street. The numbering of the houses begins at Main street and runs each way, every house number having an E or a W appended, as 320E. Proceeding south each street that crosses Main is numbered in rotation, Second South, Third South, and so on, all being further divided into East and West. The same plan is followed north, east and west of the temple, and at a certain crossing the streets running north and south are divided for numbering, and each wing is given its prefix of North or South. When you start out to find a number on East Fifth South street, the same number on South Fifth East won't do at all, and if you are trying to find your way from a remote place on North Twelfth West street to an indefinite number on East Sixth South, between South Eighth East and South Ninth East, you would do well to start before dark and keep perfectly sober. Boxing the compass is child's play by comparison.—Kansas City Star.

AFTER OFFICIALS.

IT'S JUDGE MARSHALL'S MOVE.

Charges Against the Mayor Led the Court to Take the Action.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., July 31.—Judge Marshall of the circuit court of the Eleventh judicial district of Wisconsin has called a grand jury to sit at Superior Aug. 13 to investigate all irregularities in the city of Superior and county offices in the past six years. The order is understood to be the result of the investigation of Mayor Starkweather of Superior, and it has caused considerable consternation among officeholders. This is the first grand jury ever convened in this district. For the past four or five years official corruption in city affairs has been charged on all sides. The investigation of Mayor Starkweather, who is accused of receiving money from the gamblers and saloon men, has been going on for the past two weeks. The council has been divided in the affair, part of them upholding the mayor. Many witnesses have been examined before the committee, and some very sensational testimony has been introduced. Charges and countercharges have been made, and the people finally demanded that a thorough investigation be made.

THE HOLMES CASE.

Day's Developments Bring Out Nothing Sensational.

CHICAGO, July 31.—Three warrants for the arrest of H. H. Holmes and Patrick Quinlan are now hanging fire. They are not taken out solely for the reason that it is the desire of the complainants to give the police all the leeway possible before forcing them to act as to Quinlan.

Circumstantial evidence is considered as showing Quinlan to have been as guilty as Holmes. The warrants in question will not be held back longer than a day, and when sworn out will compel the bringing of Quinlan into court and his case before a grand jury.

The day's developments at the Castle simply proved that Chappell, the articulator of skeletons for Holmes, partially told the truth as to the location of secret tanks. One was uncovered but not examined. More unimportant witnesses against Holmes and Quinlan were found, and a mysterious bricklayer, who built a firebox in the Castle, which he thinks might have been used as a retort for dead bodies, turned up and told his story. Chappell is unearthing skeletons for the police which he claims came from the castle.

SAYS PIETZEL SUICIDED.

Holmes Makes a New Statement About the Death of His Accomplice.

PHILADELPHIA, July 31.—The Bulletin prints an entirely new statement just made by H. H. Holmes, the supposed murderer of the Pietzel children. In it the man of many crimes gives in detail his version of how Pietzel came by his death last September, and also states his (Holmes) connection with the tragedy. Holmes declares that Pietzel committed suicide and that he arranged the body as afterwards found, destroying all evidences of suicide, so that he might be able to get the insurance on Pietzel's life without any difficulty.

RESULT OF A SALOON ROW.

One Killed and Two Wounded at Oskaloosa.

OSKALOOSA, Ia., July 31.—Knute Jones, colored, Kirkman White and two others went into a saloon and started a row with the keeper, named Echlin. The result was that Jones was killed, Kirkman wounded and Echlin shot himself through the right foot. Echlin gave himself up.

Says Chappell Is Insane.

CHICAGO, July 31.—Charles C. Chappell, son of M. G. Chappell, the old man who claims to have been an assistant of Holmes and to have articulated skeletons for him, says that his father is insane. Young Chappell declares that the old man has been of unsound mind for several years and expresses the belief that his father knows nothing whatever of Holmes' doings.

Rod Mill Men Will Not Strike.

CLEVELAND, July 31.—The striking rod mill men gave it out during the day that a general strike of their craftsmen will probably not be ordered Aug. 1, as has been threatened. They say they have received every assurance that the mill owners will meet them at least half way. The Cleveland Rolling Mill company has granted their rod mill men an advance from 10 to 15 per cent.

Bloomer Balls.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 31.—Since a bloomer ball was given in Chicago a few days ago, preparations have been made for several functions of the kind in this city. As a result the local clergymen are considerably agitated over the subject.

THE TRIPARTITE ALLIANCE.

And it came to pass in those days that Thomas, the jaw-breaker, and Albertus the man of hardwear and William, whose surname is Lytle, were altogether with one accord in one place where checkers are wont to be played, whereupon up spoke one unto the other and said: "I think you are using altogether too much tobacco for the good of this community, and had'nt you better quit?" "Don't use any more'n you do f's much," whereupon the conversation waxed warmer and more earnest until it resulted in a general swear-off with a five dollar plug hat forfeit. This was the space of several weeks ago or so and three of them are alive yet and the balance of them are recovering as slowly as their shattered nerves will permit. Nary wan o' them has lost the hat yet and as every one is "gritty," it may result in tiring each other out—but they have our sympathy.

Discoveries of America.

Four hundred and three years ago this week, Columbus sailed from Palos, Spain, on what he supposed was a voyage to the East Indies. Two months later he unexpectedly stumbled upon a new world. Even then, however, he supposed he had reached India, and the name of Indians was bestowed upon the aboriginal inhabitants. In August 1858 the first Atlantic cable was landed on the coast of Newfoundland, and by placing the Old and New Worlds in instantaneous touch with each other, America was virtually re-discovered.

The discovery of Columbus and his successors was really of only a small strip of country along the sea-coast and the greater America—the mid-continent—was discovered, improved and developed by the building of the railroads. One has only to ask himself what would be the condition of the great Central and Western states if their only means of transportation were the stage-coach and steamboat to comprehend what the great railroads are. Fifteen millions people live in the eleven states penetrated by the lines of the Burlington Route. To visit any of their prominent cities and towns, buy your tickets from your home agent over the Burlington Route, or for any information address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Fertile Items.

[From the Journal]

Our machine dealers are doing a rushing business this week in harvesters.

Owen Nelson, of McIntosh, is here this week setting up Champion binders.

The N. P. Ry. has a large crew of men working on old freight cars at Brainard on account of the heavy harvests.

The rye harvest has commenced. J. S. Nichols and T. M. Nelson were cutting a fine crop this week. That crop is far above the average this year.

The Northern Pacific will run all of their wheat trains this fall over the Red Lake Falls branch, the road is being put in good shape for the haul.

Word was received here Monday that Mr. X. Sohler had died at his home in Alameda, California, on the 14th of this month. The letter did not state the nature of the disease from which he died but as his death was very sudden and unexpected it is thought to be heart disease, from which he was troubled considerably. Mr. Sohler was one of Fertile's first citizens having built the mill at old Fertile and later on with Mr. Kankel built the new mill west of town. About six years ago he sold out his entire interest to Mr. Kankel and with his family spent a year in Europe, returning here again for a short time when he moved to Crookston where he lived about a year and from there moved to California for his health. The deceased was 58 years old and leaves besides a loving wife four children to mourn his loss.

A HOT ROAST.

About 2 o'clock on Tuesday morning the fire alarm sounded and the department tumbled out to find that the devastating element was getting in its work on the M. & D. elevator in the Fifth ward. It was also discovered that the fire was too remote from any hydrant to be in reach, so the department had to resort to the primitive style and organize as a bucket brigade and devote its attention wholly to saving adjacent property. The flames, however, succeeded in catching on to the Corser elevator and very soon this too went down. Several box cars were already in flames when the department reached the scene and were destroyed. The fire is supposed to be work of tramps who were very much in evidence in that neighborhood before and after the fire. There was some wheat in the elevators.

Death of X. Sohler.

In our clippings from the Fertile Journal mention is made of the sudden death of X. Sohler from supposed heart disease. Later reports are to the effect that Mr. Sohler deliberately shot himself probably in a fit of despondency caused by ill health.

THIEF RIVER FALLS ITEMS

[From the Press.]

The Steamer Viking made three very pleasant excursions last Sunday.

E. D. Childs, of Crookston, was transacting business in the city, Friday.

Prof. C. W. Sage, the newly employed principal of the city schools is looking the city over.

Mrs. O. P. Johnson and Mrs. P. S. Ware left last Wednesday for a few weeks with friends in Minneapolis, St. Paul and elsewhere.

Dr. J. H. Thomas, the Crookston dentist, was ministering to his patients here the first of the week.

Messrs. Dahl & Barbuen opened another fine kiln of lime on Thursday.

Rev. Parbst, Norwegian Baptist minister, has located here and is living in the Garfield house. He will preach at different places in this part of the state with a view to establish a society of his denomination as soon as advisable.

The flouring department of roller mill O. K. is shut down for a few days while the rollers are being sharpened, ready for the incoming crop.

Testimony in the Jones-Meehan case was taken here Wednesday before Commissioner Mabey, of Minneapolis. No new developments were brought out excepting that the attorneys for the Meehans seem rather backward in going on with the case. They doubtless want to see some of the boasted "long green."

Auction!

I will offer for sale at public auction on Saturday, Aug. 3, commencing at 2 o'clock, p. m., at my barn in Crookston, Minn., twenty farm horses and mares. Come one and all and get good bargains, as they will be sold without reserve. Terms: Notes with approved security, due Nov. 1st, 1895, bearing ten per cent interest; five per cent. off for all cash down.

S. L. COLLINS.

Not Anxious for Holmes.

TORONTO, Ont., July 31.—Though Acting Attorney General Hardy has not yet given his decision, it is learned on most reliable authority that Toronto will not ask for the extradition of Holmes until all legal resources have been exhausted in the United States. The attorney general is under the impression that the police authorities here have been a little too sanguine in their belief that they have strong enough evidence to hang Holmes.

Schmidt & Lean, the city painters and paper-hangers are still on deck for everything in their line. Some of the neatest jobs of paper-hanging in the city are samples of their work and their rates for doing that kind of work are cheaper than to try to do it yourself—and very much more satisfactory. All who require any work in their line would do well to call and examine their stock and get prices. Now is the best time.

GOT OUT OF WIND.

Last week John Watts mounted his wheel for a spin out into the country. When he reached Chris. Houston's, by some means the air all escaped from the rubber rim and as he had omitted to take along his pump he was obliged to leave his wheel and hoof it into the town through the sand after the pump.

BETTER TIMES—BETTER PRICES.

(St. Paul Dispatch.)

It is wonderful to observe with what eagerness Democratic newspapers are snatching up every scrap of news that relates to the return of industrial prosperity, and attribute it to the wisdom of their own policy, and to the skill of their own party leaders in adjusting necessary economic relations and conditions. They loudly proclaim that the advance in price of nearly all our commodities are due to the mongrel tariff which was traded through congress and became a law without the signature of a Democratic president. We read almost every day, says the Wisconsin State Journal, in the exultant Democratic organs that cotton and wool, corn and wheat, meats, stock and staple articles generally have advanced greatly in price. So delighted are the heretofore stunned and despondent Democrats that they greatly exaggerate the facts and parade them before the public as a reason why their party politics should be accepted. This shows that the Democrats have had some sense pounded into them and as usual are trailing along in the rear of the Republicans, trying to steal Republican principles or appropriate to their own use Republican doctrine. For be it remembered that this advance in prices is by no means what they promised us and invited us to when they come into power. For years they had been howling that prices were too high; that the necessaries of life cost too much; that the people were being robbed by the protective tariff, which enhanced the cost of clothing, food and other things which the working people were obliged to buy, and they pledged themselves if they were given the opportunity to smash the price list and make the purchasing power of a dollar a great deal more than it was.

We told them they were wrong, that prices were not too high, because they were as low as it was possible to make them without reducing wages; that anything and everything was too cheap when it was sold for so little that the producer could not get a fair return for his work, and that it would be a sad day for the country when they were given a chance to destroy the protective tariff and reduce prices by opening our markets to foreign competition. But they kept on dinning their doctrine into the public ear until they deceived people enough to give them the power and they took possession of the government and proceeded to smash the tariff and reduce prices. They did not do all they promised and intended, for a revolt of some of their senators killed the Wilson free trade bill and substituted for it one that is highly protective in spots, but they got far enough to show that would be the result if they accomplished their purposes.

They paralyzed business, closed factories, bankrupted farmers and put it beyond the power of millions of men and women, who had never before known severe privation, to get food and clothing at any price. Everything was cheap, as cheap as they said it should be, and would be and nearly everybody was poor. Cheapness and distress walked through the country hand in hand.

It all came out exactly as the Republicans said it would. At a terrible cost the country learned how foolish and wicked, how demoralizing and destructive was the doctrine of free trade and low prices, and at the first opportunity the people rose up and by unparalleled majorities in every section of the country and repudiated the party that had so wickedly blundered and wrought such grievous wrongs. It will be a long time before they can cheat people again. Business stagnation, bankruptcy, enforced idleness, privation and starvation are hard teachers, but the lessons they teach are not quickly forgotten. This generation has had more than enough of cheapness and the party which represents it.

W. W. Houghton an old time Crookstonite was in the city last week renewing old acquaintance.

CROOKSTON FOUNDRY

That Crookston has one manufacturing plant in her midst that she may be well proud of, one has only to go to the new hotel and look over the work done there by J. E. Morrisey, to be fully convinced. This institution was established in our midst in the early day by Morrisey Brothers; not with a flourish of arms and a demand for a big bonus, but in a small way and with limited means it grew with our growth and flourished with our success until today there is no more complete plant in Minnesota, outside of such large cities as St. Paul and Minneapolis or Duluth. There is nothing you can imagine in the line of ordinary wants that cannot be supplied at this foundry and our citizens, before sending below for any casting should call at the Crookston foundry and see if it cannot be done here as well, if not better, indeed, than to send it away. And our citizens owe it to their town to have all this work that can be done here, rather than to patronize other cities. There is very little work in this line that Mr. Morrisey cannot do as cheaply and as well as it can be done, and then you save the expense of shipment both ways. The job he has done at the Hotel Crookston speaks volumes for Mr. Morrisey's skill in his line of business.

Miss Ida Hancock returned from Detroit on Thursday last.

Prof. Williams, of Argyle, was down Thursday, interviewing the school board.

H. C. Misner and wife, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Pitkin and Mrs. Haley drove over to Grand Forks Saturday last.

Miss Nella Collins, of Bellevue, Iowa, is visiting with friends here and at Keystone.

Mrs. L. S. Hancock returned Monday from an extended visit in the southern part of the state.

A number of our people took advantage of the special train Monday evening and attended the Mark Twain entertainment at Crookston.

C. Dahl is recovering nicely from the injuries he received in a runaway some time ago, and is now able to be about our streets again.

H. C. Misner and wife drove to Crookston, Monday afternoon, to attend the Mark Twain entertainment.

Lewis Cottet, of Warren, was down trading, Tuesday.

W. N. Lovell, of Grand Forks, with the Rockford Clothing Co., was in town Tuesday, interviewing our merchants.

As a result of the big crop prospect the farmers are buying very heavily of twine and many wagon loads are being hauled away daily from H. C. Misner & Co's. warehouse.

Henry Stuhr returned Tuesday from a short visit to Red Lake Falls.

Ernest Helm, of Wylie, was over Tuesday, on business.

A geography social was held at the Keystone house parlors, Wednesday evening. The proceeds were donated toward the purchase of a new organ for the church.

That Tired Feeling

Is a common complaint and it is a dangerous symptom. It means that the system is debilitated because of impure blood, and in this condition it is especially liable to attacks of disease. Hood's sarsaparilla is the remedy for this condition, and also for that weakness which prevails at the change of season, climate or life.

Hood's pills act easily, yet promptly and efficiently on the bowels and liver.

PIERRE BOTTINEAU.

One of the Oldest of the Old Settlers Passes Away at Red Lake Falls.

For some days the life of one of Polk county's oldest and best known settlers has been trembling in the balance and at last, on Friday night it was announced: "Pierre Bottineau is dead." He is said to have been over 82 years old and was for many years a trusted government employe. He was the father of the French-Canadian colony at Red Lake Falls, and very few there be who do not know Pierre Bottineau. In the early history of the state his name figures conspicuously as a faithful government scout and guide. He at one time had a quarter section claim where the heart of the city of St. Paul now is, but it is said that he traded it for a cow and a dog. He had nine children by his first wife and fourteen by his second.

Mark Twain.

Samuel L. Clemens, better known under his nom de plume, "Mark Twain," appeared before a Crookston audience for the first time on Monday evening. His style of address is peculiarly his own, slow, methodical, impressive, without a hint in his manner that he suspects that the subject he is discussing is rich in droll humor, or anything but just dry, solemn facts. After giving extracts from six of his most popular works and essays he announced that he would give a few extracts from the "diary of Adam," something new to this audience, and which in our opinion is the drollest of all his writings. This kept the audience in a continual uproar from start to finish and put them in excellent humor for "The Golden Arm," which wound up the entertainment at 10:30. At the close Mr. Clemens stepped down off the stage and was introduced to all who desired to grasp him by the hand. He, together with his wife and one daughter, is just starting on a tour around the world, which will take until May or June '96 to complete.

Public Spirited Citizens

Should take a delight in adding anything to our town or county in the educational line which is valuable, unique and is not found in other communities. Our townsman, C. E. Misner, tells us he has an opportunity to place in our city a fine three and a half inch astronomical telescope, which will be for the educational benefit of our citizens. There is not as fine a telescope anywhere in our state, except at Carlton college, Northfield, where they have a fine astronomical observatory. Mr. Misner says that Prof. Hicks' paper, Word and Works, of St. Louis, offers him this fine instrument if he will get up a club of 800 subscribers to the paper. He is willing to put in a considerable part of his time and make a great effort to secure this fine telescope. If our citizens give him proper support it will not be a very hard matter to secure it. Word and Works is a fine monthly magazine and is well worth $1 a year, the subscription price. Mr. Misner will take subscriptions to this paper and every subscriber will have the privilege of looking through the fine telescope, which will be put up at Lynne's photograph gallery, free of charge. You get your money's worth if you do not look through the telescope, for Word and Works is a splendid family monthly and cheap at $1.00, but you have the satisfaction of knowing also that you have contributed toward the addition to our county of a fine instrument, not to be equaled by anything in northwestern Minnesota. Mr. Misner, or his agent, will be around to see the people of the county within the next six weeks and we hope he will receive encouragement wherever he goes. [15-tf]

COWS FOR SALE.

Having decided to rent the farm I will offer for sale the fine herd of Jersey cows now on section 9, town of Fairfax, or will rent the farm including the dairy stock. For particulars enquire of H. E. Cooke at the JOURNAL office, Crookston.

[15-tf.] MRS. M. E. BARTLETT.

"Mamma, was that a sugar-plum you just gave me?" asked little Mabel. "No, dear, it was one of Dr. Ayer's Pills." "Please, may I have another?" "Not now, dear; one of those nice pills is all you need at present, because every dose is effective."

THE DEBATE ENDED

HORR-HARVEY SILVER DISCUSSION FINALLY CONCLUDED.

Feasibility of Independent Free Coinage at a Ratio of 16 to 1 Was the Question. Mr. Harvey Affirmed Its Practicability, and Mr. Horr Denied It.

CHICAGO, July 30.—The last day of the Harvey-Horr silver seige opened during the afternoon in the auditorium of the Illinois club. The day's attack was directed at the question of the feasibility of independent action by the United States for the remonetization of silver and its free and unlimited coinage at a ratio of 16 to 1 with gold, regardless of the action of other nations, Mr. Harvey arguing for such action, Mr. Horr against it.

The discussion was opened by Mr. Horr with a statement that the prices of corn referred to by Mr. Harvey on a former day, showed that the fluctuations for a series of years had been normal ones in view of supply and demand and showed that silver legislation had nothing to do with the matter. The fact was that it was impossible to show that silver legislation had affected the Price of Agricultural Products.

Mr. Harvey's figures, Mr. Horr declared, were made upon English, not American prices. Taking up the regular discussion Mr. Harvey presented a table showing the coinage of gold and silver from 1792 to 1873. He did this to show that gold did not seek the mints for the first 50 years of the nation, and that silver did not from that time till 1873.

Mr. Harvey then quoted from his book the total amount of gold and silver in the world and the cubic space they would respectively occupy. He went on to argue that there was not enough gold in the world for coinage uses, in view of the fact that the amount diverted from coinage for use in the arts had greatly increased within the past few years.

Congress Can't Fix Prices.

Mr. Horr, coming down to the question in hand, declared it was useless to try to fix the relative value of any two substances by legislation. Suppose congress should try to fix the relative value of a bushel of wheat and a bushel of oats. As soon as one of them had a large crop, down would go the rates, and legislation by the nations of the whole world would not maintain the ratio any more than it would make water run up hill. The law of gravity would stand in the way. It was so in the matter of the ratio between silver and gold. The law of supply and demand stepped in there and the history of the world's legislation showed that it was impossible to maintain a fixed ratio between the precious metals.

Demand for Gold Would Decrease.

Resuming his argument, Mr. Harvey said that the gold advocates feared that the debts contracted in gold would be paid in silver, and the man who had stipulated to pay gold would have to buy it at a premium. This was fallacious.

As soon as silver was remonetized no man could stipulate for payment in gold; the demand for gold would decrease; at the same time the demand for silver would increase, and soon the difference between the metals would be wiped out. He declared that it was not the stamp on the coin which gave it value, but the making of a new use and new demand for it. If, at the next general election, a bimetallic congress should be elected, the rubicon would be passed the next day, silver would at once begin to appreciate and gold to depreciate, and they before congress met, as the greenback dollar became equal in value to the gold dollar before the resumption act came into force.

Mr. Horr, resuming, enumerated the classes of people, who, he declared, would be ruined by cheapening the measure of value. They include day laborers, clerks, stenographers, railway employes, domestic servants, janitors and scrub women, skilled labor of all sorts, agricultural laborers, miners, and the like, in the aggregate 22,785,661 in number. In addition to these he spoke of the pensioners of the government, making a touching reference in doing so to the empty sleeves of the veterans and the black robed widows. It was proposed to cut down the pension rolls by destroying the value of the money in which they would be paid.

Business Would Absorb All Silver.

Taking up his argument, Mr. Harvey said that, under free coinage, gold would decline, while silver and everything would advance. He asserted that the demands of business in this country would absorb all of the silver available for coinage. If all of the gold and silver in the world were sent to our mints for coinage it would be to the benefit of the United States and the injury of the rest of the world. Money in circulation made business, he said, just as life does not make blood, but blood makes life.

Mr. Horr, resuming, said that the savings bank depositors had $1,712,000,000 on deposit, which it was Proposed to Cut in Two.

Building and loan associations had 1,725,000 depositors with an aggregate of $525,852,000 due them, and the money in the pockets of every man and woman in the United States was to be halved in value. All of this for the benefit of 20,000 silver men. Why, their output was not worth half as much as the eggs yearly laid by the hens of the United States and was about equal in value to the peanut crop.

Wheat Harvest Begins.

FARGO, N. D., July 30.—Telegrams from Ransom, La Moure, Dickey and Sargent counties announce that the wheat harvest has commenced. A yield of 12 to 15 bushels is reported.

VESSELS MISSING.

Lake Michigan Swept by a Storm and Loss of Life Is Feared.

MILWAUKEE, July 30.—At 8:30 p. m. a fierce western gale swept over the lake here. The day had been very pleasant and the blow came on so sudden it took a number of pleasure yachts unaware. Off Lake Park, Andrew Keen was washed out of his sailboat and after struggling in the water for two hours he saved himself by swimming to shore, a distance of a mile. The sand scow John Eggers, with several men aboard, is missing, and is believed to have capsized. All hands are probably lost. Joseph English of Halifax, owner of the schooner yacht Sunbeam, is in the city. During the day he telegraphed his captain to bring the yacht to Milwaukee and she was due here when the gale struck the lake

Has Nobility on Board.

Up to 2:30 o'clock nothing had been heard of the Sunbeam. Fears are entertained that she has been lost in the gale and all on board are lost. Her passengers consist of Lord Cecil Hadean, son of Lord Aberdeen of Canada, whose home is in Ottawa; Walter Kingsmille, son of Judge Kingsmille of Toronto; Thane Jones, son of a prominent merchant of St. Johns, and Captain Carl Longhrow of Quebec. The party left Toronto six weeks ago on a cruise and the yacht is on her way to Chicago, where she is entered in the regatta. She is 39 feet long. A number of schooners are out and there is little doubt that some have been wrecked.

FOREST FIRES AT GLADSTONE.

Gale Blowing and the Property Loss May Be Heavy.

GLADSTONE, Mich., July 30.—Extensive forest fires are raging northwest of this city and considerable apprehension is felt for the Soo Railroad company's roundhouse and the plant of the washboard company. A strong gale is blowing from the northwest and unless it stops soon or shifts, considerable property will be destroyed, as much of it lies beyond the reach of the city water plant. The fire at present is in the Goodman addition, northwest of the city. Another fire is raging on the peninsula east of the city and is destroying much valuable timber. It is feared that it will reach the farms, in which case much suffering will be caused. There has been no rain for many days and the swamps and slashings are dry.

CHICKAMAUGA DEDICATION.

Twenty Governors Will Attend the Exercises on Sept. 18-20.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—The Chickamauga Park association has received notice of the contemplated attendance of 20 governors of states with their staffs at the dedication Sept. 18, 19 and 20. Most of these will be accompanied besides by leading elective officers of the state governments and representatives of the legislatures. The state commissioners of 26 states are also expected. The 20 governors concerning whom this information has been received are from the following states: Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Tennessee and South Carolina.

GET NO RELIEF.

The War Department Will Probably Stick to Its Fox River Order.

OSHKOSH, Wis., July 27.—General J. B. Doe, assistant secretary of war, has returned from his tour of inspection to Appleton and elsewhere regarding the low water situation in the Fox river and Lake Winnebago and tributaries. He declined to talk, but members of the party assert that the recent order shutting down all waterpower will not be rescinded.

KICK ON CONSOLIDATION.

Montana Legislature Will Attempt to Prevent the Northern Pacific Deal.

HELENA, Mon., July 29.—A conference of prominent citizens with Governor Rickards, it has been decided to call an extra session of the legislature to pass a law forbidding consolidation of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific railroads, provided steps are taken to effect such consolidation.

Recommends Divorce for Mrs. Corbett.

NEW YORK, July 30.—Referee Jacobs, in his report in the suit for divorce brought by Mrs. Ollie Corbett against her husband, James J. Corbett, finds Mrs. Corbett entitled to a divorce and recommends that the agreement entered into by her and her husband at the time of their separation by which he agreed to pay her $100 a week for life, be continued.

Closed Down Indefinitely.

NEGAUNEE, Mich., July 30.—The strikers at the Champion mine were paid off Monday with the notification that the mine will remain closed for an indefinite period. The Champion was the first hard ore property in this region to suspend work some three years ago. It was unable to mine ore at a profit for some time before the panic struck this section in 1893.

To Recover for Cut Timber.

MILWAUKEE, July 30.—Acting Secretary of the Interior Reynolds has recommended to the attorney general that suit be brought against Laughlin & Darwin and members of the Lake Shore Lumber company, to recover the value of timber cut from public domain by George Weldon of Minocqua, Wis., and purchased by the first named parties.

Five Thousand Cholera Victims.

YOKOHAMA, July 29.—Since the outbreak of cholera in Japan 9,000 persons have been attacked with the disease and over 5,000 persons have died.

French Republicans Victorious.

PARIS, July 30.—The election of members of the councils general, have resulted in the Republicans gaining three-quarters of the seats.

THE INDIAN WAR

CAVALRY TROOPS NEARING THE SCENE OF TROUBLE.

Reds Said to Be Located in the Wildest Part of the Jackson Hole Country—They Are Not Molesting Settlers—Infantry at Market Lake.

SALT LAKE, July 29.—A special to The Herald from Market Lake, Ida., says: Advices received from the troops are to the effect that the Indians are pouring into Jacksons Hole from all directions, though they have not molested settlers. They are located in the wildest part of the valley in a position from which all the troops in this department could not drive them if they chose to remain.

CATTLE BARONS TO BLAME.

They Deliberately Provoke the Indians and Cause the Trouble.

KANSAS CITY, July 29.—J. A. Southern of Wardner, Idaho, is in the city. Speaking of the reports from Jackson Hole, he pronounced them false, and charges that irresponsible correspondents are responsible for them.

"The truth of the matter is," he said, "that cattle barons with ranges in Wyoming and Idaho are determined to secure the Bannock reservation for pasturage for their cattle. With this object in view they have systematically and deliberately provoked the Indians for the past three years. If they can cause the uprising they will strive to secure the Indians' removal to another district. Perhaps some settlers have been killed, but you will eventually learn that not one murder was done by the Lemhi's or Bannock Indians. It is a notorious fact among the people of Idaho and Wyoming that cattle barons in the Teton valley country have caused all the trouble in that section."

ORDERED TO THE FRONT.

Infantry at Market Lake to Go to Jacksons Hole.

SALT LAKE, July 30.—A special to The Herald from Market Lake, Ida., says: The five companies of infantry that arrived here Sunday night have received orders to go to the front at once and will leave in the morning for Jacksons Hole. It will take 10 days to make the trip. The cavalry went about 20 miles during the day. Every effort will be made to induce the Indians to return to their reservation peaceably. The troops have received word that when they get near enough to render hasty assistance the settlers are going to attack the Indians. A band of 800 Indians were on the trail of the troops when they struck camp and hastened toward Jacksons Hole.

EVERYTHING IS QUIET.

MARKET LAKE, Ida., July 30.—Dr. Wonhurn of Rexburg has just come from that place with information that James Simmons and Fred Cunningham, two scouts, arrived in Rexburg straight from Jackson Hole. They report that no conflict has taken place between whites and Indians so far, and that matters are quiet.

The Indians, to the number of 500, are in Hohack basin, about 50 miles from Marys Vale where the settlers are fortified and prepared to resist the savages should an attack be made.

POTTAWATAMIES ON THE PATH.

Call for Troops Made by the Sheriff of Jackson County, Kan.

TOPEKA, Kan., July 30.—Sheriff Naylor of Jackson county has arrived in Topeka and will ask for state troops to put down an uprising of Indians on the Pottawatamie reservation. The sheriff and posse accompanied, the Indian police to make an arrest and all had to flee for their lives. The sheriff says there are 50 armed redskins awaiting to resist any attempt to arrest them.

The trouble arose over a section of the reservation land which a party of white men claim to have leased from the Indian agent. Last Saturday the white men began making hay on these lands and several Indians drove them off. Warrants were put in the hands of the Indian police to be served and Sheriff Naylor and posse accompanied to lend aid. When the party arrived at the reservation they were met by about 50 followers, all heavily armed. They refused to be arrested, and the sheriff and party were obliged to speed their horses to the utmost to escape a conflict with the redskins.

WHAT SHALL WE WEAR?

Twenty Thousand New York Tailors on a Strike.

NEW YORK, July 29.—About 20,000 members of the Brotherhood of Tailors are on strike in the cities of New York and Brooklyn. There has been no disorder in connection with the strike. A monster mass meeting will be held in Cooper Union. It is expected that among others, Samuel Gompers will address the meeting.

Woodward Makes Charges.

NEW YORK, July 30.—Frank R. E. Woodward, a newspaper correspondent lately returned from Cuba, has sent a formal complaint to the state department against the United States consular agent at Gibara, Jose H. Beola. He charges that Beola holds a commission as captain in the Spanish army, that he hates the government of the United States and has made treasonable utterances against it.

Dividends from Insolvent Banks.

WASHINGTON, July 30.—The comptroller of the currency has declared dividends in favor of creditors of insolvent national banks as follows: Twenty-five per cent, the First National of Redfield, S. D.; 7 per cent, the First National, Cedar Falls, Ia.

England Abandons Trinidad.

RIO JANEIRO, July 29.—A telegram has been received by a prominent English bank, saying England has abandoned the occupation of Trinidad.

BURIED IN QUICKLIME.

Workmen Unearth a Large Quantity of Human Bones.

CHICAGO, July 27.—The men at work in the basement of the Holmes building unearthed in a bed of quicklime what is pronounced to be the skeleton of a child. The workmen, continuing their search in another portion of the basement, found a second bed of quicklime. In this, just before their labors ended for the day, they discovered one of the bones of a human body. The first body is supposed to be that of Pearl Conner, the daughter of Julia L. Conner, former wife of C. I. Conner, once of Muscatine, Ia., later of this city. Both the mother and child have been missing since the summer of 1893. The woman was betrayed by Holmes, her husband secured a divorce from her and she lived with Holmes at the castle. Some time in July or August, 1893, she and the child disappeared.

SAYS PIETZEL SUICIDED.

Holmes Makes a New Statement About the Death of His Accomplice.

PHILADELPHIA, July 30.—The Bulletin prints an entirely new statement just made by H. H. Holmes, the supposed murderer of the Pietzel children. In it the man of many crimes gives in detail his version of how Pietzel came by his death last September, and also states his (Holmes) connection with the tragedy. Holmes declares that Pietzel committed suicide and that he arranged the body as afterwards found, destroying all evidences of suicide, so that he might be able to get the insurance on Pietzel's life without any difficulty.

Claims Alleged Victims Are Alive.

CHICAGO, July 29.—A local newspaper is in receipt of an anonymous letter which says that Minnie Williams, Mrs. Conner, an unknown man and a little boy are living on Wabash avenue some where between Forty-first and Fifty-second streets. The writer says he is a friend of Holmes, and that he knows Minnie Williams and Mrs. Conner well.

Two More Vaults.

CHICAGO, July 29.—Two brick vaults 3 by 6 feet in size and filled with quick lime were found in Holmes' building, about three feet below the basement floor, and the police also found a bunch of discolored hair.

NO G. A. R. COLOR LINE.

Negro Ex-Soldiers Not to Be Shut Out at Louisville.

COLUMBUS, O., July 27.—J. H. Milliken, director general of the G. A. R. arrangements at Louisville, says in a letter to G. A. R. men here that all statements regarding the proposed drawing of a color line at the national encampment against negro ex-soldiers are absolutely false.

R. B. Langdon Dead.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 25.—R. B. Langdon, one of the foremost citizens of Minneapolis and a resident of the city since 1866, died Wednesday after a lingering illness of several months. Mr. Langdon leaves quite a fortune, built entirely by his own efforts.

Amnesty for Armenians.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 25.—An imperial irad has been issued granting amnesty to all Armenian political prisoners. Many of the latter have already been released.

THE STORY OF A PORTRAIT.

How the Painting Was Rescued From an Ignominious Fate.

Probably Chicago's first painting with a history was an excellent portrait of one of her fairest citizens—a belle of 1837. Fine work as it was, however, at one time there was imminent danger of its becoming a decorative signboard of a prominent local livery stable.

Long before the days of the iron horse a wandering artist strayed along what is now the corner of Lake and Clark streets, and there opened a studio. Among the early patrons of his brush was a dazzling creature who yearned to have her beauty perpetuated upon canvas. She was a leader in the swelldom of the town, the adored object of both secret and outspoken admiration of all the bachelors of her set. Her family had not come over in the Mayflower, but her blood was the most cerulean in the faraway down east whence it came. Hence it was with propriety that she proposed to gratify her ambition, and posed, bedecked with a wonderful "amazone" and waving numberless plumes, disporting herself with equanimity on the back of a rearing, plunging steed.

The artist had a fine subject. Needless to say he rendered it full justice. When the canvas was finished, the impressive ensemble was placed upon exhibition in the artist's studio, and everybody who was anybody dropped in and lavished his admiration upon it. After a time the novelty of the display wore off. People had seen all they wanted of it, but the fair equestrienne's portrait still hung upon its creator's walls, unclaimed, and, alas, unpaid for. The landlord of the embryonic Sir Joshua Reynolds grew unpleasant to him. He became addicted to the abominable habit of "dropping in" upon the young artist and making unnecessary remarks about "the rent" at all kinds of inopportune moments, until at last life became a burden to the child of art, and in despair he decided to return to his native east and abandon all his dreams of fame in the wild prairie town of the west.

Among the inartistic and unpretentious citizens of the town was a certain highly prosperous stable keeper who was aware of the circumstances connected with the unpaid for picture and the painter's impecuniosity. The night preceding the former's proposed departure for the city of his birth it was given out among the good people roundabout that the stable keeper had purchased the famous portrait for $500, and that henceforth it should be the attraction of his signboard over his new livery stable. The rumor spread like wildfire within a few hours, and at nightfall artist and stableman had the satisfaction of receiving a visit from the haughty relatives of the picture's original. The required sum was gladly paid by them. Two hundred fell to the lot of the shrewd liveryman, the painter received his first price, $300, and every one was serene over the historic transaction.—Chicago Tribune.

SMALL BOY AND BIG VOICE.

They Create a Commotion on a Chicago "L" Train.

The boy and his voice were not mates. That was evident the moment the former attempted to use the latter. The one was not quite a "5 foot boy," while the other would easily pass as a "7 foot voice." They both got on an Alley L train at Congress street, and the boy undertook to say something about having 5 o'clock papers to sell, whereupon the windows rattled and the car began to rock. The old man who had jumped so high that his head nearly struck the roof looked at the boy reproachfully for a moment and then attempted to be humorous.

"A little louder, please," he said.

"Huh?" returned the boy inquiringly.

"Speak a little louder. Have you lost your voice?"

The other passengers laughed, and the boy seemed somewhat discomfited.

"Paper?" he asked, going close to the man.

"No," replied the man, gratified at the success of his little joke. "I was merely wondering why you didn't speak out instead of whispering."

The boy was close to the man's ear by this time, and he let out a cry of "Evening papers!" that fairly jarred the engineer.

He got to the door first, and the book that the old man threw after him merely raised a bump on the side of the conductor's head.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Chinese Court.

The ceremonial of the Chinese court is somewhat exacting. It used to include, if it does not now, complete prostration before the throne. Last century a Persian envoy refused to go through the degrading ordeal. Directions were given to the officials to compel him by stratagem to do so. On arriving one day at the entrance to the hall of audience, the envoy found no means of going in except by a wicket, which would compel him to stoop very low. With great presence of mind and considerable audacity the embassador turned round and entered backward, thus saving the honor of his country.—London Standard.

The Pleasing Part.

Fuddy—How did you like Hammerton in "Julius Cæsar" last night?

Duddy—Well, I can't say that he was altogether satisfactory in the earlier scenes, but it was a real pleasure to see him die.—Boston Transcript.

How charming is divine philosophy! Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose, but musical, as is Apollo's lute, and a perpetual feast of nectared sweets, where no crude surfeit reigns.—Milton.

In 1870 the population of native extraction—that is, Americans or the children of Americans—was 26,000,000 and of foreign extraction 31,000,000.

The syllable "ia" as a termination to the name of a country is of Celtic origin.

ON A DUCK RANCH.

One Grower Who Sells Twelve Thousand Fowls a Year.

A writer in The Country Gentleman gives the following sketch of his visit to a duck ranch in the shadow of the Blue mountains of Pennsylvania: At the time of my visit, early in September, there were about 4,000 nearly ready for market, and such a multitude of pure white birds was a pretty sight. The variety grown is the Peking, that at maturity will weigh 14 to 20 pounds to the pair. They have rich, yellow skin and orange colored bills and legs. They bear confinement well, and it is claimed they may be reared successfully with water sufficient only for drink. However, it is found that without water in which to wash themselves their plumage is soiled by the mud, and the feathers, worth 40 to 50 cents a pound, are injured in market value.

The Pekings are prolific in eggs, laying from 125 to 150 each in the year, but many of the eggs are infertile. In fact, the proprietors of this ranch thought they did not get to exceed 50 ducks from 100 eggs. The duck naturally, or as ordinarily kept on the farm, rarely lays before springtime. Ducks reared in the approved modern style, hatched in May, will begin to lay about the holidays and continue laying all winter, and this weakens their vitality. But why is not the constitution weakened also in respect to making rapid and great growth of frame? The barnyard fowl has undergone the same revolution of habit, and I have found their eggs as fertile in winter as at any other time. Is not this lack of fertility attributable rather to the fact that the natural habit of the duck is not completely revolutionized by domestication? By nature the duck is monogamous—that is, the drake mates with one duck—and it is probable that in large flocks there are drakes that will mate each only with one duck, while other drakes will care for two or more each, and thus the fertilization proves unequal and irregular. Ducks at their best do not show the development of the polygamous habit to the same extent as barnyard fowls. The best authorities recommend in breeding only five or six ducks to one drake.

The eggs are hatched in incubators, which are set in operation as soon as there is a complement of eggs to fill a machine. On a well managed duck farm the ducklings should begin to peep about the 1st of February, and the incubators are kept running until about the 1st of July. The ducks are reared under artificial brooders in their houses and in small yards and not allowed access to water for bathing until a month old. I presume in winter they never go out of their yards until killed. From the time they are hatched until ready for market the ducklings are fed all the wholesome food they can digest, and at 10 weeks old the Pekings should dress ten pounds to the pair.

Of course such weights are obtained only by farmers who thoroughly understand the business. It is proposed to try to rear 20,000 at this ranch next year. It is estimated that Peking ducks may be reared to the age of 10 weeks for 5 cents a pound, and the price received will probably average 20 cents a pound. The earliest shipments will realize 30 cents a pound or more, and 18 cents is about the lowest figure for them at any season

There is one peculiar feature in the market for choice poultry—the breeder need not consign his stock for sale and take the chances of the market. A class of New York dealers are always in search of poultry of superior quality and will buy it outright at excellent prices.

These ducks rapidly grown are like rapidly grown lettuce or radishes—very tender. Their market was originally made on this tender, fat condition without the use of celery to add to the flavor.

The wholesome food of course changed the quality of the flesh, and now the supply is not equal to the demand. They are fed celery finely cut and mixed with their food for probably a month previous to killing. There is no distinct taste of celery on the flesh, but its union with the natural qualities of the flesh imparts a flavor that is simply delicious, little if any inferior to the canvasbacks which feed on wild celery.

Stuffing Fowls For Market.

L'engraissement or stuffing has been practiced in France for many years. Before the improved appliances were invented the operation was carried on in several ways. One of these, called engraissement aux patons, consisted of inserting little cakes of dough into the fowl's mouth and forcing them down with the finger. In another case engraissement de l'entonnoir, the food, in liquid form, was poured into the bird through a funnel. A third method, still more primitive, called gavage a la bouche, consisted in the feeder's filling his mouth with the food and blowing it down the fowl's throat. As soon after the hatching as they are able to determine the sexes are separated, and when they are 8½ months old they are put in the "pens of plenty." Fowls thus treated have been known to double in weight during their confinement in the pens. Their meat is far tenderer and sweeter than that of fowls raised in the ordinary manner and is devoid of all objectionable stringiness.

FLOOD OF THE NILE.

THE GREATEST EVENT OF ALL THE YEAR AT CAIRO.

The tourist who only comes to Egypt to shun "winter and foul weather" knows nothing of the majestic glories of the Nile flood. The ancient Nilometer at the south end of the island of Roda, just above Cairo, is one of the most interesting sights of the place. The water enters from the river by a culvert into a well about 18 feet square, with a graduated stone pillar in the center. On each side of the well is a recess about 0 feet wide and 3 feet deep, surmounted by a pointed arch, over which is carved in relief a Kufic inscription, and a similar inscription is carried all around the well, consisting of verses of the Koran. A staircase goes down the well, from the steps of which the initiated may read the height of the water on the pillar, but they are few in number, and the hereditary sheikh of the Nilometer, whose duty it is to keep the record, is a person of some importance. The Nilometer dates from A. D. 801, and I believe in the archives of Cairo may be found the daily record for 1,000 years.

I need hardly tell you that when our English engineers took the river in hand we established a number of gauges at Wadi-Halfa, Assuan, Cairo and many other points on more scientific principles than the venerable Nilometer of the Roda island.

After the river has begun to rise its height is daily chanted through the Cairo streets until it reaches 16 cubits on the gauge. At this point the Khalig el Masri, the old canal that flows through the heart of Cairo, is opened—up to this point it is dry, and full or empty it is little more than a sanitary abomination at present, but in former days it occupied an important place, and when the Nile water was high enough to flow down its bed it was looked on that the flood had fairly set in, and that the kindly fruits of the earth might be duly expected.

There is no more interesting ceremony in Egypt than the annual cutting of the khalig, as the opening ceremony is called. It takes place between Aug. 5 and 15. Days before preparations are made for the festival. Tents with innumerable lamps are placed along the wall on the one side. Frames for all manner of fireworks are erected on the sand bank on the other side. All the notables are there in full uniform or in canonicals. The khedive himself or his representative, the Sheikh ul Islam, the highest dignitary of the Mohammedan faith; the Sheikh el Bekri, the Sheikh el Sadat, all the learned scribes of the great university of the Azhar, the cabinet ministers and under secretaries, the sirder of the army and his staff, the judges and the financiers.

The Egyptian troops are turned out, salutes are fired, and about 8 o'clock in the warm summer night the classes all assemble under the gayly lighted tents, the masses crowd round the frames for the fireworks, the street is lined with harem carriages full of closely veiled figures, though it is not much that they can see from their broughams. Out in the river just opposite the canal's mouth is moored an old hulk of a certain seagoing outline, which has been towed up from Bulak during the day and is an emblem of the time when the great republic of Venice sent an envoy to witness the ceremony. This boat is full of lamps, and fireworks too. As the night deepens the excitement increases. The populace on the bridge and opposite bank are shouting, yelling and dancing wildly round the fireworks.

On the other side are the gay uniforms and lighted tents, from which we can look over the wall down on the dark water, where you see brown figures plunging in and, waist deep, digging with their hoes at the embankment that blocks the canal's mouth. Long before midnight the fireworks have gone out and left the splendid stars to themselves; the grandees have all gone to bed, but the people keep up the revelry, and in the morning, by 7:30, every one has come back. Then but little of the bank is left uncut, and a few more strokes of the big hoes will do it, and the brown skins and brown water reflect the bright sunlight from above. Then the Sheik ul Islam solemnly thanks the Almighty, Allah the all powerful, the all merciful. He implores his blessing on the flood, and at a signal the bank is cut, the waters rush in, and with them a crowd of swimmers. A bag of silver piasters is scattered among them, and the ceremony is at an end.—Nature.

Always on Time.

Washington had many admirable traits worthy of imitation, and one of them was rigid punctuality. This was well illustrated by an incident during his visit to Boston 100 years ago. Having appointed 8 o'clock in the morning as the hour at which he should set out for Salem, he mounted his horse just as the Old South clock was striking that hour. The company of cavalry which was to escort him did not arrive till after his departure and did not overtake him till he had reached Charles river bridge.—Exchange.

BOOM FOR DAVIS.

The Senator Has Some Lively Supporters in the East.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 26.—A special to The Journal from New York says: The presence here of M. J. Dowling, John Goodnow and Sam Phillips, who are all speaking earnestly for Cushman K. Davis for president, attracts much attention from politicians, who regard it as a step towards starting the Davis boom in the East. These Minnesotans say that Senator Davis can count on solid delegations from Minnesota, North and South Dakota, as well as on a part of the Wisconsin delegation. The Morning Journal prints a large portrait of the senator and says that whatever may be his presidential strength, he is undoubtedly the most formidable vice presidential candidate whose name has been mentioned. It is said that McKinley, Reed and Harrison have each been claiming the Northwest, but now find a rival in the field. It adds: "Minnesotans are a lively set of boomers, and when they say they are going to present a Senator Davis delegation at the Republican national convention it means something."

A Curious Find.

CLARKFIELD, Minn., July 26.—Louis Malkoi, a farmer living nine miles southwest of here, while working in a dried up slough, unearthed a petrified man and dog imbedded in a large rock. The man appears as if reclining on the rock with his right arm around the dog's neck. The features of both man and dog are perfect, and of a bluish color. Mr. Malkoi has refused $1,500 for his find.

THIS IS ABSOLUTELY TRUE.

THE Commercial Club would do well to take hold of the matter of a Polk county exhibit at the coming State fair. With the facilities at hand this year this county should make a better showing than she ever did before and can do it if sufficient attention is given to the matter. This would be a legitimate subject for the club to handle.

THE University experiment station calls attention to the law passed by the late session in relation to exterminating noxious weeds. In a pamphlet which quotes the essential points of the law and shows why it should be enforced and how to do it. This pamphlet can be had by addressing the experimental station and should be read pretty generally.

THE boys at Alexandria took a notion to invite the quill-drivers of the Northwest to an outing on the 8th and 9th. Now, we should like very much to go out in the woods, slip the harness off and disport ourselves for a week in the sylvan lakes that are on tap in that vicinity, but, you see, L. P. Hunt is to have a house-warming about these times, and if a fellow should go swimming in Alexandria and neglect Lem there'd be war in the camp—and besides we are too busy to go anywhere just now.

THE Commercial Club is just now considering the problem of immigration among others of great importance to our city and county and while the meetings are fairly well attended there does not seem to be quite enough interest taken in so important a matter. A little exertion at the proper time is worth more than four times the amount at other times and just now is the time for action in this important matter. If every member will take hold of the matter much good can be accomplished.

THE Democrats are beginning to crawl out of their holes, into which they were driven in mortal terror by the "prosperous" reign inaugurated by the Cleveland government, and to "point with pride" to "the beneficent results" of the Wilson tariff bill. Well, they ought to have the consolation of pointing to something, but what consolation they can find sticking their finger at the "Wilson" tariff bill we fail to see. The Wilson bill never became a law, (fortunately for the dems.) and the prosperity of the country is in spite of and not due to the substitute they did get through.

Is The Horse Doomed?

Farm Stock and Home:—At a recent agricultural fair in England was exhibited a lawn mower, of the size usually drawn by horse, run by steam. A small engine was mounted on broad, low wheels, and not only cut the grass nicely and rapidly, but improved the lawn greatly by the rolling it got. Granting the practicability of this device, and it is but a short step to the propulsion of the mower and harvester by a light steam engine, and from that the step seems still shorter to the doing of nearly all the other farm work by the same power that is now done by horses. The report comes from Paris that the storage-battery road carriage is a success there, and that that means of locomotion is likely to displace horses by the thousands. Is it possible that an annihilating Nemesis is on the trail of the noblest and best of our domestic animals?

Beware of Ointments For Catarrh That Contain Mercury.

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten-fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

(From the Bulletin.)

Mrs. D. Todd is very seriously ill.

Stephen Sprague was in town Wednesday.

Born, on Saturday, July 20th, to Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Bain, a son.

Alec Thompson and wife, of Crookston were visiting in town Thursday.

The telephone wires are strung from Crookston to Fisher and the line will be completed to the Forks next week.

Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Webster are the happy parents of a bouncing baby boy who put in appearance at their home Thursday.

We are sorry to state that Mr. H. B. Herrick's condition is not so favorable. He has been confined to his room for some time.

Wilfred DeMers of St. Paul and a son of the late Capt. F. S. DeMers formerly one of the townsite proprietors at Fisher was visiting friends in town the first of the week.

Owing to the storms of last week small grain has made small advancement and considerable damage has been done by lodging—especially to wheat. All grain is tall and getting heavy. Wheat, oats and barley are well headed out, and flax mostly out of bloom. Rust is reported in some localities, and a few complain of damage by smut. Haying has been delayed by rains, but grass has been gaining meantime. Some barley fields show a ripening color. Potatoes are doing finely.

A BIRTHDAY.

My heart is like a singing bird
  Whose nest is in a watered shoot;
My heart is like an apple tree
  Whose boughs are bent with thickset fruit;
My heart is like a rainbow shell
  That paddles in a halcyon sea;
My heart is gladder than all these
  Because my love is come to me.

Raise me a dais of silk and down;
  Hang it with vair and purple dyes;
Carve it in doves and pomegranates
  And peacocks with a hundred eyes;
Work it in gold and silver grapes,
  In leaves and silver fleurs-de-lis,
Because the birthday of my life
  Is come; my love is come to me.

A CRIME TO LAUGH.

Queer Sunday Laws of 1781 That Still Govern England's Lord's Day.

The introduction of the Sunday bill by Lord Hobhouse brings up the fact that we are governed in respect to Sunday observations by an act of the year 1781.

It seems that a Sunday lecture can always be made the subject of prosecution. Some time ago a Sunday lecturer at Leeds was actually sacrilegious enough to make his audience laugh. The proprietor of the lecture hall was thereupon prosecuted for keeping a disorderly house.

Music can now be given in the open air on Sunday, but if it is given in a room nothing must be charged for chairs. In other words, it will be possible for any body of men and women to run Sunday concerts and Sunday lectures with the view of making them pay expenses, but not for their own profit.

In the years 1200 and 1201 one Eustace, abbot of Flaye, preached throughout England the observance of the Lord's day. He enjoined that no kind of work should be done after the ninth hour on Saturday until sunrise on Monday.

According to the manner of the times his preaching was backed up by miracles. At Beverly a carpenter persisting in finishing a wedge after the ninth hour fell down in paralysis. In the same town a woman went on with her weaving after the ninth hour. Result, paralysis, with loss of voice.

At Rafferton a man made a loaf and baked it on Saturday evening. When he broke it on Sunday morning, blood started from it. At Wakefield a miller, grinding after hours, ground out blood instead of flour.

In Lincolnshire a woman made a loaf and put it in the oven. It remained dough! In the same county a pious woman, finding it was the ninth hour, set aside her loaves. Lo! On Sunday morning the loaves were beautifully baked without any fire at all.

And yet, the chronicler adds, in spite of these miracles the people have returned to the holding of markets on the Sunday!—London Queen.

"Facts are stubborn things" is an aphorism first enumerated by Le Sage in "Gil Blas." It has since become proverbial.

THE EMPTY HOUSE.

The ancient apple tree that stands
  Beside the black, decaying eaves
Once more has both her crooked hands
  Half full of Maytime flowers and leaves.
But the old gray house where the gold haired children
  Blossomed out from window and door
At the early kiss of the warm May sunshine—
  The old gray house will bloom no more.

In that old apple tree again
  Their loving nest the bluebirds fill;
They warble to the mild spring rain.
  With music soft the mornings thrill.
But the old gray house with her vacant windows,
  Where never a rosy cheek is pressed,
Where all is silence and void and shadow.
  No birds come back to her empty nest.

WHAT FIREMEN FIND.

They Pick Up Curious Articles Sometimes. A Touching Incident.

"Well, sir," said a stalwart looking fireman the other day, "we fellows don't have much time for looking about for finds when a house is burning and perhaps people's lives are at stake, yet we do come across things occasionally.

"A brother wearer of the brass helmet used to tell how he was once at a fire—and a big one, too—and in making his way through the house positively saw bank notes burning away like so many pipe lights. He picked up as many as he possibly could, stuffed them in his pockets and went on with his work. After the conflagration had ceased the man who was left in charge picked up among the embers an old fashioned pepper box—black and charred—filled with silver dollars, and a further search brought him to a number of rare old silver spoons.

"I have myself found two or three checkbooks, and once a set of false teeth, which I popped in my pocket and soon after was able to return to the owner, who proved his right to possess them without a doubt. I once brought out a genuine Stradivarius—a violin worth several hundreds of dollars—while diamonds and other jewelry have been saved in plenty.

"Indeed there are a thousand and one things a fireman finds and saves, though perhaps that which gave me the greatest satisfaction was an old rag doll. It was a touching little incident and quite true.

"It happened at a big fire, and in the midst of the excitement—which I assure you few people realize—the word went forth that a little child was 'up stairs.' I don't want to boast, but away I went. I found her on the second floor, asleep in her little crib, with this old doll by her side. I caught the child in my arms and—she awoke. She looked up in my face and seemed to understand that I was saving her from the flames.

"'Dolly! Dolly!' she cried.

"The next instant—aye, quicker than it takes to tell you—I had the old rag doll, and my pals told me that if any artist could only have painted us as we appeared—me with the youngster in my arms, and she cuddling up her treasure—why, there wouldn't have been another picture in the land to touch it!"—Boston Traveller.

Didn't Understand Twins.

A festival in the family drew homeward the scattered kindred. The boys, twins, had been long parted, and meanwhile one had married and in his widowerhood reared his little son, now 7 years old. To him, by name Bobby, newly arrived in the house, enters the uncle whom he had never seen, so perfect a corroboration of his father that Bobby runs to him at once, clings to him and hugs his knees. A moment later, when his father really came and the laughing company were on the brink of comment and explanation, the poor little man, giving him one mortally shocked glance, fell to the floor, sobbing, "Don't want—two—papas!"

The resident puppy, familiar with the bachelor brother, had almost as disturbing an experience. He stared and stared at Bobby's father, upon their introduction, sniffed at his garments, wavered and stared again. Then he leaped upon his own friend and next upon the image and echo of him bewildered, and finally backed into the corner, after making a brave stand against the supernatural, his insulted eye upon both men, barking and growling and indulging generally in the doggerel for thunder.—Chap Book.

Brummel and Byron.

Byron, while walking along Piccadilly one bright summer morning, encountered Beau Brummel, who was returning from his tailor's.

"How are you, Brummel?" said the poet.

"Pretty well, thank you," returned the beau. "I've been reading 'Don Juan.'"

"Yes?" said Byron, with a smile.

"There is some clever rhyme in it."

"So?" observed Byron, with affected surprise.

"And some pretty good versification."

"Ah?" returned the poet.

"Why don't you try your hand at poetry, Byron?" asked Brummel.

The two never spoke to each other again.

Followed Orders.

"How so?" inquired his friend.

"Why, I told him the other day that I wanted engraved on the engagement ring the letters 'from A to Z.'—'from Arthur to Zenobia,' you know—and the idiot went to work and put in the whole alphabet!"—Elmira Telegram.

WHY HE SUCCEEDED.

A SENATOR'S GOOD FORTUNE BEGAN WITH A GAME OF POKER.

A Boyish Prank That Made It Necessary For Him to Go West and Grow Up With the Country—Members of the Bar Who Tried to Beat the Pet Law of the Town.

"My seat in the senate and all I have besides had root in a game of poker."

Here the senator gazed benignantly about his small audience. He was in a reminiscent mood. He was a wise, deep sea little senator, as sapient as ever went into executive session. Now and then he liked to talk about the past.

"It sounds queerly to say it," the senator continued, "but it was a poker game which lost me to the east and gave me to the west, to become in time a senator. This is the story:

"I was born and brought up in a town in Kentucky. It was a small town. You could throw a lariat about the whole outfit and drag it with a pony. But it was a highly moral town. As a community it had a pet law. It made a specialty of enforcing the statutes against gambling. No games of chance could thrive in that community. And no matter what the position in life of an offender, were he guilty of gambling he would be dealt with. Such was the impartial boast of the town. Indeed, as one citizen observed:

"'They would admire to catch a judge or prosecuting attorney violating the law merely to demonstrate the Puritan fairness of local sentiment.'

"It was the June term of the circuit court. There was a crowd of lawyers in town. The judge himself was from down the Ohio river. During the noon hour a quiet game of poker was talked over as one of the happy methods of passing the pending evening. The town had a habit of going to bed at 9 o'clock, and it all promised to be graveyard dull to the visiting lawyers and the judge. Whispered word went about, therefore, that a game of cards, with a meek and lowly limit, would be a good way to ward off care. But there was no place to play.

"The hotel would never do. A light in any room after 10 o'clock would have provoked the most baleful surmises and investigation as well. The prosecuting attorney was one of the foremost in arranging the coming speculation. It was he who, in the fertility of his nature, suggested the flatboat. His father was proprietor of a flatboat of ample cabin accommodation. Just then it was moored, bow and stern, at the foot of the levee. A couple of games were programmed to come off that evening in the cabin of the flatboat. It would be out of sight and hearing of the testy little burg which made a specialty of punishing gambling.

"It was 10 o'clock. The night was as dark as the interior of a cow. Two games were going on in the cabin of the flatboat. The judge, the prosecuting attorney and some nine members of the bar were engaged. It made two nice tables. Everybody was bending to the game with all of the native ardor of a Kentucky gentleman. It was about this time when, in company with a friend, I strolled on the levee in the vicinity of the flatboat. I was 20 years of age and had no money. My friend was equally well fixed. Our youth and our poverty forbade anything like poker so far as we were concerned. On discovering the old folks thus charmingly engaged a taste to be humorous swept over us. We were law students; they were lawyers. That was reason enough for the joke. As the boat rose and fell on the swell and slackened the ropes we cast her loose. Silently she drifted away over the dark bosom of the river. The jovial gamesters drew and filled and straddled and raised and called, all unconscious. At 2 o'clock in the morning Colonel Stebbins had won $70. It was in Mexican money, and he had sinkered it about his honest old frame in half a dozen pockets. It was about all of the money at that table, and Colonel Stebbins concluded he might better go. He murmured something about cold feet and promising his wife to come up to the hotel early and arose to go. The rest jeered mildly and made invidious remarks after the fashion of losers at poker just as the game breaks up. But Colonel Stebbins was inflexible. He put on his hat, bid everybody good night, stepped out into the inky darkness and carefully picked his way overboard.

"The water was 20 feet deep. The silver all but drowned the colonel, however. At last he was fished out and laid across a barrel to evict the Ohio river from his system. The whoops and yells of the voyagers at last brought a sleepy little tug to their aid. They found themselves 17 miles below the town. For $30 of Colonel Stebbins' gains the tug towed the party back.

"They arrived at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and found the town sullenly lining the levee waiting for them. They were one and all promptly indicted. In the frank enthusiasm of youth my friend and I related how we had cast these poker games adrift on the Ohio. We made a grave mistake when we told this story. Publicly we were threatened with indictment; privately we were menaced with death by the gentlemen we had betrayed to the river. We took counsel of our woes and without awaiting the worst went west. This was all long ago—48 years ago. My partner in sin is now a United States judge, while I am in the senate. We often discuss our destinies and lay everything to that flatboat poker game."—Washington Post.

A Sty on the Eye.

When you feel the pricking pain on the eyelid that announces the coming of a sty, make a very strong application of black tea, or simply the tea leaves moistened with a little water put in a small bag of muslin and placed on the eyelid. As it dries moisten again, and if used before the sty gets under way it is said to be a sure cure.

THE HEART IN OLD AGE.

A Misconception That Causes Humanity Needless Anxiety.

A story told by Dr. G. W. Balfour in his book on "The Senile Heart" well deserves the double purpose of marking the practical process which scientific medicine has achieved within the past 50 years and of administering a much needed word of comfort and encouragement to those numerous workers who, as age approaches, begin to feel uncomfortable about the regions of the heart.

"Many years ago," said Dr. Balfour, "a gentleman of 77 consulted me as to severe fainting fits to which he was liable. A distinguished consultant, since dead, had told him that these attacks were due to fatty degeneration of the heart and that treatment would be of no avail. The heart's impulse was imperceptible, the sounds faint, but pure, the arteries firm, but neither hard nor tortuous. I told the patient that experience had taught me that hearts supposed to be fatty were often weak. * * * The result of treatment was a steady improvement in health and in force of heart beat, and the patient lived to be 90 and did not die of heart failure in the end, but from senile asthenia." To many people "fatty heart" is a perfect bugbear. But this is what Dr. Balfour has to say about the diagnosis of the disease: "It is absolutely impossible to diagnosticate fatty degeneration of the heart.

"We may surmise its existence, but we can only be certain of its presence when we see it post mortem." If many middle aged and old men could but have this written deep upon the tablets of their consciousness, what loads would be lifted from their minds. Yet doctors of small experience roll out a diagnosis of fatty heart with sonorous satisfaction, unheeding that to many a trembling father of a family it is like the sound of a deathknell. On the question of treatment Dr. Balfour is equally decided. "We are often told," he says, "that there is danger in treating a fatty heart. * * * Yet the result of treatment in the case recorded was a cure, proving that a heart supposed to be fatty was only weak and that a life supposed to be over only wanted the fillip of a few minims of digitalis to carry it on to almost the extreme of human longevity." So, true is it, even in scientific medicine, that a little experience and common sense outweigh many shiploads of mere abstract theorizing.—London Hospital.

DIAMOND THIEVES.

The Trick They Use to Circumvent the Ever Watchful Dealers.

A diamond dealer recently interviewed gave some of his experiences as follows: "A few weeks ago a foreigner came into my store and desired to see rings. After choosing for a long time he picked out one valued at $18. He made me a ridiculously low offer, which I naturally refused. He then desired to see two other rings—one a sapphire and the other a diamond ring—exhibited in the show window. While I reached into the window for them I observed in the mirror on one side of the window how the stranger slipped away two rings, each worth $150. I did not turn around, but went to the door, opened and then locked it. If I had turned around, the thief would have thrown pepper and sand in my eyes and ran away with his booty. A policeman was soon in the place. The thief had the pepper and sand ready for use in his hand.

"Another time a thief dropped two rings into his umbrella, and at another time another slipped one into a hole in his glove. A very common trick of diamond thieves is to ask to be shown loose stones, which are thereupon handed to him lying upon a waiter. He breathes upon them, and thereby seeks to get one or more into his mouth. Others study the rings lying in the show window and have one made exactly to pattern described. The gold is good, but the jewel is paste. They then come in twilight into the store and seek to exchange their imitation for the genuine."—Jewelers' Circular.

Light Persons Poisoned by Ivy.

Mr. I. Ten Bosch writes from Rochelle Park, N. J., to Garden and Forest, saying:

"Whenever I see a tree in the embrace of a poison ivy, I take my knife and cut the vine. On the grounds of a few friends and on my own I have cut vines from 1½ to 2½ inches thick, sometimes at the root and sometimes as far up as I could reach, and then tearing down the stems have uprooted them with my hands. I have done this at all seasons, and when my hands were torn by blackberry thorns, but I never had a trace of poisoning. A friend to whom I mentioned my immunity said, 'Of course you are not poisoned, because you are dark.' Since then I have been thinking that in the cases of poisoning which had come to my knowledge the victims had been light haired. A younger brother of mine, who is very fair, has been severely poisoned."

Population of the World.

German geographers have made a careful estimate of the population of Africa, and place the total at 163,953,000, which is 42,240,000 more than the aggregated population of North and South America. Europe and Africa combined have a population of 521,332,000, though their area is not greater than that of all America. The new world has plenty of room for many times its present population of 121,713,000. The German estimate of the population of the world now is 1,480,000,000, and one of the best authorities of the Royal Statistical society says it will be increased by the year 2517 to 83,586,000,000.

Lucky.

A reporter, in describing the murder of a man named Jorkins, said, "The murderer was evidently in quest of money, but luckily Mr. Jorkins had deposited all his funds in the bank the day before, so that he lost nothing but his life."—London Tit-Bits.

FOSSTON ITEMS

(From the Thirteen Towns.)

W. B. Dawley was in town last Saturday.

A. McArty and F. O. Sibley made a trip to Gull lake, this week.

Geo. A. and B. B. Ralph were laying out lots the first of the week in the Johnson and Stephens townsite, or West Fosston, on the west side of the business portion of the town.

Louis Lohn, Tams Bixby and Dr. Henry Hutchinson returned from Bemidji on Saturday and A. C. Clausen, W. J. Hilligoss, Harris Richardson and Fred Silver, on Sunday. Their townsite is booming and there is now quite a little village located there and more going in continually. Mr. Hilligoss and a portion of the party made a trip around the lake by boat, while there, and explored a few mounds near the shore of the lake, finding skeletons, pottery, etc., relics of the now extinct "mound builders." These mounds are claimed to have been built at least eight hundred years ago.

Deputy Marshal E. H. Funk took Mrs. H. Howe and Miss Leading Feather to Crookston this morning, to appear as witnesses against Geo. Hanna, who appears before Judge Christianson today, charged with introducing liquor on the Red Lake reservation.

Blood Poison

THE BANE OF HUMAN LIFE,

Driven Out of the System by the Use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For five years, I was a great sufferer from a most persistent blood disease, none of the various medicines I took being of any help whatever. Hoping that change of climate would benefit me, I went to Cuba, to Florida, and then to Saratoga Springs, where I remained some time drinking the waters. But all was no use. At last, being advised by several friends to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, I began taking it, and very soon favorable results were manifest. To-day I consider myself a perfectly healthy man, with a good appetite and not the least trace of my former complaint. To all my friends, and especially young men like myself, I recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla, if in need of a perfectly reliable blood-purifier."—JOSE A. Frank Gravel came in from the lake on Monday morning carrying his left hand in a sling, the result of a gun-shot wound from a knife that he was using to get supper with. Frank is liable to have a pretty sore hand before he gets through with it.

What causes bad dreams is a question that has never been satisfactorily answered; but, in nine cases out of ten, frightful dreams are the result of imperfect digestion, which a few doses of Ayer's Sarsaparilla will effectually remedy. Don't delay—try it to-day.

Attorney S. Cooke had the list of Warren's quota to Mark Twain. There were over 90 names on the list, some 10 or 12 giving up the trip at the last moment for one reason and another. There were 80 people, however, who did come. No town of its size did as well.

The Sons of Vets have secured the Cosgrove Concert Company for the evening of August 5th, at the opera house. This troupe is well spoken of by the press everywhere on the American continent. The Aitken Age says of them: "Those who attended the concert given by the Cosgrove company came away thoroughly satisfied and highly pleased. Every member of the company was well received by the audience, and deservedly so, for every number was given with a spirit and in an artistic manner."

Manager Bjoin announces that he has secured the presence of J. K. Emmet, the celebrated Irish comedian, for the evening of Aug. 13th, at the Grand opera house in this city. Mr. Emmet enjoys the distinction of having played to more money at the Fourteenth street theatre in New York during the three months "Fritz in a Mad House" was played, than any other attraction that was ever played there; and that is saying very much, for the Fourteenth street theatre is a popular play house and has, time and again, played the greatest attractions of the modern stage. The same artistic and pecuniary success has attended his performances throughout his tour through the country.

A private letter from Marvin Losey Jr., to a prominent citizen of Crookston, puts a different feature on that affair than appeared upon the surface at the time and gives us a clue to his actions that justifies the opinion we had formed of it. It seems there was something in connection with the affair that had not appeared upon the surface which worried Mr. Losey and drove him almost to the verge of distraction, and this, be it known, had nothing to do with his marriage, (as some have erroneously supposed) which was, we are led to suppose, a happy and suitable one. Mr. Losey has arranged for the settlement of all his obligations here and in time they will be settled in full. Added to the personal trouble that we have hinted at is the fact, Mr. Losey says, that the business he was engaged in here, so far from being on a good, solid financial basis, had absorbed all of his private fortune and he could see no way to get out out of it creditably if he stayed here. He seems to be inclined to do what is right and this disposition we are glad to see as it fully justifies the faith that we have always had in that boy, with whom we now deeply sympathize in this unfortunate affair.

A BACHELOR MAID.

Once there lived a bachelor maiden,
  Years and years ago (?),
And her mind with truth was laden,
  But her heart was cold as snow.
For she thought, with good old Plato,
  She could live alone,
So she smiled on many a suitor,
  But her heart was hard as stone.

Came a bachelor man a-suing
  For her friendship true.
This, alas, was her undoing,
  As it might have been with you.
For her friendship still he sued her—
  Such a simple thing—
Till before she knew he wooed her,
  Wooed her with a friendship ring.

Now, although she's fond of Plato,
  Her cold heart's grown warm,
And her theories of living
  Have imbibed a wondrous charm,
For she says: "'Tis human nature,
  Spite of Plato's pen.
Men were made for loving women,
  Women made for loving men."

BUYING SOCIAL POLISH.

An English Couple Who Instruct In the Art of Being Fine.

A new profession for "gentlefolk" has been discovered in London by two impecunious members of the class. They have discovered that there is a livelihood to be obtained by "polishing off" the nouveaux riches and others whose manners "have not that repose which stamps the caste of Vere de Vere." They are a well born, well bred married couple who are still sufficiently young to be adaptable. They have been used to the ways of the leisure class, and they are clever enough to teach them. Anything from the cure of the cockney accent to the proper way to entertain a duke is taught for a "consideration."

The wife describes her share of the work thus: "I generally," she says, "undertake to engage the services of all specialists, such as superior maids, who know what is what and can give judicious and useful hints to their mistress; also manicurists, teachers of deportment and sometimes teachers of elocution. I have cured one very bad case of mere outward vulgarity in three weeks for 10 guineas, and I have corrected a cockney accent in three mornings for 3 guineas, while, on the other hand, a certain city man, who never aspired to anything better than heavy British dinners, Fridays to Mondays at Brighton, and Mansion House balls until he married the daughter of a west end restaurant manager—she knew nothing of life beyond her own narrow sphere—gave us carte blanche to make 'fine folks' of them.

"Not much could be done for him beyond keeping him quiet, but she lent herself to our process. Now they have a very pretty place in Hampshire and entertain some rather nice people in the summer. We ourselves received 100 guineas for our advice, but the husband must have spent over 25,000 in adopting our hints as to mode of living, and he tells us that what he has got for it is worth double as much."—Philadelphia Press.

BATTLE OF RIVOLI.

NAPOLEON SAID THAT HIS LIFE REALLY BEGAN THERE.

The Short Campaign Was the Turning Point of the War and Shaped the History of Europe For Twenty Years—The Austrians Five Minutes Late.

Professor Sloane's "Life of Napoleon" in The Century describes the masterly Italian campaign, in which Napoleon's military genius first won worldwide recognition. Professor Sloane thus describes the battle of Rivoli:

At early dawn began the conflict which was to settle the fate of Mantua. The first fierce contest was between the Austrian left and the French right at St. Mark, but it quickly spread along the whole line as far as Caprino. For some time the Austrians had the advantage, and the result was in suspense, since the French left, at Caprino, yielded for an instant before the onslaught of the main Austrian army made in accordance with Alvinczy's first plan, and, as he supposed, upon an inferior force by one vastly superior in numbers. Berthier, who by his calm courage was fast rising high in his commander's favor, came to the rescue, and Massena, following with a judgment which has inseparably linked his name with that famous spot, finally restored order to the French ranks. Every successive charge of the Austrians was repulsed with a violence which threw their right and center back toward Monte Baldo in ever growing confusion.

The battle waged for nearly three hours before Alvinczy understood that it was not Joubert's division, but Bonaparte's army, which was above him. In his zeal he then pressed forward on the plateau beneath the height to bring more of his troops into action, and Joubert somewhat rashly advanced to check the movement, leaving the road to St. Mark unprotected. The Austrians, prompt to take advantage of his blunder, charged up the hill, and seized the commanding position, but simultaneously there rushed from the opposite side three French battalions, clambering up to retrieve the mistake. Their physical strength and nervous activity brought them first to the top, and again the storming columns were thrown back in disorder.

At that instant appeared in Bonaparte's rear an Austrian corps estimated by him as 4,000 strong, which, having come down the valley on the left bank, had now crossed the river to take the French right at Rivoli in its rear. Had they arrived but a minute sooner the hill of Rivoli would have been lost to the French. As it was, instead of making an attack, they had to await one. Bonaparte directed a galling artillery fire against them, and thus gained time both to reform his ranks and hold the newcomers in check until his own reserve, coming in from the next hamlet westward, cut them entirely off from the retreating columns of Alvinczy, and compelled them to lay down their arms.

Thus ended the worst defeat and most complete rout which the Austrian arms had so far sustained. Such was the utter demoralization of the flying and disintegrated columns that a young French officer named Rene, who was in command of 50 men at a hamlet on Lake Garda, successfully imitated Bonaparte's ruse at Lonato, and displayed such an imposing confidence to a flying troop of 1,500 Austrians that they surrendered to what they believed to be a force superior to their own. Next morning at dawn Murat, who had marched all night to gain the point, appeared on the slopes of Monte Baldo above the pass of Corona, and united with Massena and Joubert to drive the Austrians from their last foothold. The pursuit was continued as far as Trent. Thirteen thousand prisoners were captured in those two days.

This short campaign of Rivoli was the turning point of the war, and may be said to have shaped the history of Europe for 20 years. Chroniclers dwell upon those few moments at the hill above the plateau of Rivoli, and wonder what the result would have been if the last Austrian corps had arrived five minutes sooner. But an accurate and dispassionate criticism must decide that every step in Bonaparte's success was won by careful forethought and the most effective disposition of the forces at his command. So sure was he of success that even in the crises when Massena seemed to save the day on the left and when the Austrians seemed destined to wrest victory from defeat at the last moment on the right, he was self reliant and cheerful. The new system of field operations had a triumphant vindication at the hands of its author.

The conquering general meted out unstinted praise to his invincible squadrons and their leaders, but said nothing of himself, leaving the world to judge whether this was man or demon who, still a youth, and within a public career of but one season, had humiliated the proudest empire on the continent, had subdued Italy and on her soil had created states unknown before without the consent of any great power, not excepting his own. It is not wonderful that this personage should sometimes have said of himself, "Say that my life began at Rivoli," as at other times he dated his military career from Toulon.

Whom?

"Yes," said the practical politician, "it is true that I have made $200,000 in the last ten years, but I worked for it."

"Of course you did," replied the epigrammatical, if ungrammatical, lawyer, "but the question the people are asking each other now is, 'Who did you work?'"—Somerville (Mass.) Journal.

LUCY WAS DEMURE.

But the Sedate Young Minister Feared High Kicking Girls.

A sedate young minister recently took up quarters in a boarding house in the Tenderloin district. He was delighted to find himself the only gentleman at a table where six young women lent charm even to murky coffee and hashed and rehashed hash. He took them to church with him on the first Sunday morning, and in the evening they sang gospel hymns for him. He retired early that night, and the sound of their voices lulled him to sleep, but it did not seem to him that the song was exactly gospel. However, he had forgotten the occurrence by breakfast time.

The next day some marks on the door of the back parlor attracted his attention. There were just as many of them—although he did not notice that—as there were young women, varying in altitude from 4½ to 5¾ feet. Over each mark was a capital letter, but it did not occur to him that these capitals were the initials of the young women. Underneath the lowest line and around all of the lines except the two upper ones—which represented progress—was a smudge as if former lines had been rubbed out in order to make later and higher ones.

The sedate theologue became very curious about these marks. He asked many questions, but the young women only teased him by way of answer, exciting his curiosity and fascinating him all the more. It had seemed to him that young women of the city had more charming ways than those of the country. One of the six in particular, by name Lucy, had won his admiration. She was the demurest of all, and she it was whom he took to church alone and for whom he bought ice cream and candy wrapped up in boxes bearing gold labels. Yet even she was proof against his most subtle queries about the meaning of those marks.

What might have been the future relations between himself and Lucy if he had not returned unexpectedly one evening from prayer meeting no one can tell. The door of the back parlor was partly open, and he heard a whisk of skirts and saw near the topmost mark on the door the toe of a little boot—Lucy's boot.

His baggage was packed before he went to bed.—New York Press.

THE HONEST FINNS.

Life and Property Are Both Thoroughly Secure Among These People.

Life and property are thoroughly secure in Finland. Trunks and parcels are left for hours in the street, to be found when wanted by their rightful owners. In the country districts the houses are never barred and bolted, even in the absence of their owners. Then, again, it is no uncommon thing for a blooming girl of 17 or a young married woman to drive alone in her cart a distance of 50 or 60 miles through dense forests and by the shores of gloomy lakes, conveying the family's butter, cheese and eggs to market in town, and then to return home alone with the proceeds. In trade the Finns are not only scrupulously honest, they are heroically, quixotically so.

A tradesman will tell you the whole truth about his wares, even when he knows perfectly well that by so doing he loses a customer whom the partial truth would have secured. "This seems exactly the kind of apparatus I am looking for," I said to a merchant in Helsingfors some months ago in reference to an article that costs $75, "and I will buy it at once if, knowing what I want it for, you can honestly recommend me to take it." "No, sir; I do not recommend you to take it, nor have I anything in stock just now that would suit you." And I left the shop and purchased what I wanted elsewhere.

"Here's your fare," I said to a peasant in the interior who had driven me for three hours through the woods on his drosky, handing him $1. "No, sir; that's double my fare," he replied, returning one-half the money. And when I told him he might keep it for his honesty he slightly nodded his thanks, with the dignity of one of nature's gentlemen.—Scottish American.

MORTGAGE SALE.

(Last pub. Aug. 29, '95.)

DEFAULT has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Ezra L. Smith and Lucy A. Smith, his wife, mortgagors, to James H. Barnum, mortgagee, dated the sixth day of February, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Polk, in the state of Minnesota, on the 23d day of April, A. D. 1888, at 8 o'clock A. M., in book 22 of mortgages, on page 237, on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of six thousand, six hundred twenty-four and 90-100 dollars, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. That the default above described consists in the non payment when due, of ten promissory notes, each for the sum of $500.00, and interest at eight per cent. per annum, payable annually, all being dated Feb. 6, 1888, and all executed and delivered by said Ezra L. Smith to said Jas. H. Barnum and all being secured by said mortgage. Said amount above described as being due contains also the sum of $125.87 taxes for the years 1892, 1893 and 1894, which said mortgagee on the 12th day of July, A. D. 1895, paid on the Southwest quarter of the land below described.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, at public auction, by the sheriff of said county or by his deputy, duly appointed as agent in said instrument for that purpose, on Friday, the 30th day of August, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and one hundred dollars attorney's fees, provided by statute and stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: All of Section twenty-nine (29), in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty-seven (47), west of the fifth principal meridian, containing six hundred and forty (640) acres of land, more or less, according to the government survey.

Dated at Moorhead, State of Minnesota, this 16th day of July, 1895.

A WORD FOR THOROUGHBREDS.

The Mongrel Variety an Eyesore and a Delusion.

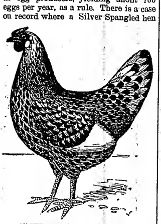
When I started in the poultry business, says a writer in Farm Poultry, I had four Barred Plymouth Rocks, a trio of Black Minorcas and six mongrel hens. Finding my room too small for two breeds, I disposed of the Minorca cock and put them all in one pen. The mongrels contained a preponderance of Leghorn blood and laid a small white egg, the Minorcas a large white egg and the Plymouth Rocks a brown egg, so that I had no trouble in distinguishing them. For the year the percentage of eggs laid by each was as follows: Two Minorcas, 21½ per cent; four B. P. Rocks, 40 per cent; six mongrels, 38½ per cent.

Through the months of April and May the mongrels laid more eggs than the other six, but at no other time did they equal either the Minorcas or Plymouth Rocks.

I have no doubt that a few years breeding would have raised the standard of the mongrels, but I shall never spend my time that way. They were an eyesore to me while I had them, and so long as I can get better, or even if I could only get their equals as egg producers and have a certain amount of beauty combined with utility, I shall keep a pure breed.

Silver Spangled Hamburgs.

The Hamburg family is one of merit as egg producers, yielding about 165 eggs per year, as a rule. There is a case on record where a Silver Spangled hen laid 151 eggs in six months. They are not so much desired by market men as many other breeds, owing to the dark color of the meat and bone. The race is likewise somewhat delicate when young, and hard to rear, but when 6 or 8 months old they seem to have become quite hardy.



SILVER SPANGLED HAMBURG HEN.

Improved Breeds.

The common dunghill fowl cannot compete in the markets now as table fowls with the fine, large, plump birds of the improved breeds, and if eggs are wanted the improved breeds are more essential. There are special breeds for laying and special breeds for the table, and some breeds well adapted for both on the farm. The professional breeder takes up a special breed and supplies the general poultry breeders with pure bred stock. Poultry breeds up so rapidly that all who raise poultry at all should grade up as in stock breeding with pure bred males or breed pure bred stock altogether.

Poultry Points.

Experience is a great teacher in poultry raising, and the mistakes are guideposts to keep every one in line. Get all the experience you can and avoid making the same mistake twice, and then you will be on the road to a profitable success.

Do not let the chicks roost on small roosts while they are young. If they roost before their breasts become firm and hardened, they will be sure to have crooked breast bones.

No food will make hens lay like a liberal supply of wheat in some shape and a regular ration of green cut bone.

Remember that milk in any form is good for laying hens. It contains all the elements of egg food in almost the proper proportions.

Spade up the ground in the chicken yard two or three times a week for a dusting bath for the fowls. A space 8 or 10 feet square will be enough. The fowls will enjoy it, and the spading will help purify the ground by turning under the top stratum of earth, which has become contaminated with droppings.

Sometimes hens are found dead under the perches while seemingly fat and in good condition. Often the trouble is that they are too fat and die of apoplexy.

Regularity in feeding is what causes rapid growth in chicks. They can be given more of the same kind of food at long and irregular intervals, but they will not attain the vigor or size that regular feeding time methods secure.

The intelligent poultryman of the day furnishes his growing chickens with raw bone, ground or cut.

Let the young chicks have a run in the gardens and fruit orchards. They will help keep down destructive insects. A double good will be secured if this plan is followed.

Where large numbers of chickens are compelled to range on limited inclosures air slaked lime should be used liberally. Scatter it late in the evening, after all the chickens have gone to roost.

With nearly all breeds, except the Asiatics, June hatched chicks will pay and come to maturity in time enough to produce eggs in winter.

Keep the broods after the hen has weaned them in the coops at night. Let them make it their home until cold weather makes it necessary to take them to permanent winter quarters. If they should outgrow their coops, furnish them a larger one in the same place. The coops should be cleaned and aired every day, also limed a little occasionally.

THE POULTRY BUSINESS.

It Is the Largest Agricultural Industry In the Country.

During the last quarter of a century the poultry industry has developed into the largest agricultural industry of this country. The value of the poultry industry is underestimated by the American people, and it has not been until recently that attention has been called to the vast wealth which lies at our very door.

Careful inquiry reveals the astounding fact that the United States, instead of producing more eggs than are required for home consumption, imports annually over $2,000,000 worth of eggs. New York state and city consume about $45,000,000 worth of eggs and poultry annually, and the population of both state and city is about 5,800,000.

The United States, with a population of 63,000,000, will consume proportionately about $495,000,000 worth of eggs and poultry a year. In order that the full value of the industry may be determined correctly, we must add to the above $03,000,000 for the value of fowls retained for breeding and laying stock and about $600,000 for fancy stock and eggs.

This shows a sum total of the industry to be over $500,000,000. The following figures show the cash value of products in the United States: Cotton, $410,000,000; hay, $430,000,000; dairy products, $254,000,000; poultry and eggs, $560,000,000. While the poultry industry is larger than any of the others, it is the only agricultural product that we do not export. Our entire yield, which is vastly insufficient to meet the demand, is all consumed at home, and, besides, statistics show we import from foreign countries over 13,000,000 dozen eggs annually.

Here, where we have so many natural advantages as compared with other countries, our profit should far exceed them in proportionate value. These facts also show that the value of poultry and eggs exceeds even wheat, the greatest agricultural product of our land, by over $72,000,000.

The general impression is that this vast industry is controlled by the farmer on his acres of land. Such is not the case. The farmer does not supply 40 per cent of the eggs raised in the country. The majority of eggs and poultry are raised by city and suburban residents and those who have a small number of acres and make a specialty of poultry raising.

It is an industry in which any citizen may engage with pleasure to himself and profit to his income. Not only is it not confined to the male sex, but is eminently adapted as a lucrative employment for the fair sex.

Besides being a paying enterprise, it is also a peculiar one—peculiar from the fact that practical experience is a most essential requisite. Without experience and a thorough knowledge of the habits and nature of the birds one would be like a pilot at sea without a compass.

The safest, surest and only practical method of acquiring a poultry education is by actual observation and careful attention to a few hens at first, gradually increasing the flocks in accordance with the experience gained. When this is mastered and an understanding is formed between the keeper and flocks the work will be routine and a business established that will net a larger income for the capital invested than anything else of its kind.

To obtain the best results from poultry the fowls must be kept under the control—that is, in small flocks and in small runs. A city resident can obtain better results from a small flock in the back yard than the farmer with the same flock on his unlimited range.

A house 12 feet square, with a run or yard having 500 square feet, will accommodate to a nicety about 20 fowls. Twenty hens, properly kept, should lay on an average of 200 dozen eggs a year. At 20 cents per dozen, these would bring at a low market price $40.

Three pounds of grain, or its equivalent, will feed 20 fowls a day. The feed will cost about $13 a year, which deducted from the value of the eggs gives a profit of $27, or about $1.35 profit per hen.

There should be no difficulty in selecting a breed of fowls to suit the fancy of the most fastidious person. There are 85 distinct varieties of poultry, six varieties of turkeys, ten varieties of ducks and seven varieties of geese recognized by the American Poultry association. These varieties are subdivided into 13 classes.

The Asiatic class includes the heaviest fowls, such as the Brahmas, Buff Cochins and Black Langshans. The standard weights of these birds are 12 pounds for cocks and 9¼ pounds for hens.

For those who have a small yard this class would best suit them. They are easily bred in confinement and are fairly good layers. They are especially good winter layers. For table purposes they are good.

The American class are the Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Javas and Dominiques. This class gives us middleweight poultry. The cocks weigh 9¼ pounds and hens 7¼ pounds. They are rated as better layers than the Asiatics, and for table purposes are considered very fine in quality. Like the Asiatic class, they will suit the city or suburban resident, being easily kept in yard by a fence 5 or 6 feet high.

The Mediterranean, Polish and Hamburg classes are the egg producing breeds. The Mediterranean class is made up of Leghorn, Minorca, Andalusia and Spanish. The Polish class has only the different varieties of the Polish family, and the Hamburg class is composed of the Hamburgs, Red Caps and Campines.

These three classes are the smallest of domestic poultry, excepting Bantams.

For table purposes they are not rated as high as the American class. They are not so well suited to confinement, owing to their persistency in scaling a 7 foot fence with ease. On a range they do well and are small eaters.—George E. Howard.

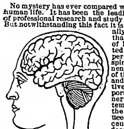
MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.



No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.

Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

ONE CAT WORTH $12,500.

Did You Ever See a Pure Tortoise Shell Tom?—Cats That Look Like Bulldogs.

It is estimated that there are 360,000 cats in England and 69 varieties. With the greater number of these varieties the average reader is probably quite unfamiliar.

Tortoise shell and white toms are very common, says an English writer, but a pure tortoise shell tom is so extremely scarce that many people declare that they exist only in the imagination.

Any one who happens to possess a female red tabby without any white spots could obtain a price which would keep him in comfort for at least a couple of years without work. Female red tabbies are as rare as tortoise shell toms.

The taste in Persian cats just now runs on the deep blue with orange colored eyes. Edward Lloyd, the tenor, had one for which he repeatedly refused $150. The bright slate or blue is a favorite variety of the Persian, the price sometimes going as high as $125.

White cats of really herculean proportions readily fetch $500. The Marquis of Dufferin is extremely partial to white cats, upward of a dozen of these splendid creatures being comfortably domiciled at the British embassy in Paris.

Russian cats fetch high prices. The Duchess of Bedford owns several of a species extremely rare—a very curious tint of blue. Russian white cats are also highly prized, but the white variety is seldom long haired.

Mr. Sam Woodiwiss is the owner of a smooth haired tom, Xenophon, of such gigantic proportions that when the writer, after an introduction, induced the cat to approach by calling in seductive accents, he experienced a feeling akin to dismay as the mammoth jumped on his knee, which in the course of a few moments began to exhibit unmistakable signs of fatigue, and no wonder—for 25 pounds is a fair weight. Xenophon is valued by its owner at $12,500.

Lady de Trafford has cats of such remarkable ugliness that the writer for a moment took them for a hairy sort of bulldog.

The value of cats is much enhanced if they possess the black markings on the chest known as the "Lord Mayor's chain." The writer has seen a cat of this sort for which the owner would not take $2,500.

Some cats are actually vegetarians, and a curious variety from Burma will only drink water.

FEARLESS OF DANGER.

How One of the Du Ponts Died In a Powder Mill Explosion.

Thus far no Du Pont of the famous gunpowder making family of Delaware has ever been false to the family law of bravery, while more than one has given his life in obeying it. One Saturday evening in the summer of 1857 Alexis I. Du Pont, son of Eleuthere, was in one of the mixing rooms with some of his men, trying to shift a heavy yellow pine box. As they slid the box along the floor, the friction caused a spark to strike, and instantly the room was ablaze. Fortunately most of the gunpowder had been taken out, it being the end of the week, but the walls and floor were sufficiently sprinkled with it to cause a sharp puff, which set the men's clothes on fire. Alexis, realizing the danger instantly, and being himself in flames, called to the men to follow him, and running out of the building threw himself into the mill race. The others did likewise, and thus, for the moment, all were safe. But Alexis, turning toward the mills as he swam, saw that sparks from the burning mixing room were falling in showers on the roof of the press and cutting mill, which contained, as he knew, several tons of powder. In spite of the appeals of the men, he rushed back to the point of danger, calling out as he ran, "Now, boys, pass me baskets of water."

Then he climbed fearlessly upon the roof, which was now nearly burned through—for in those days the roofs were made of pitch and cement—and began fighting the flames as best he could. Inspired by his courage, the workmen rallied with a will at the bucket line, but before they had got fairly started the explosion came, blowing Alexis Du Pont with fearful force against one of the drying stands, crushing his ribs into his lungs, and injuring him so that he died in great agony a few hours later.—Cleveland Moffett in McClure's Magazine.

Puff Balls Good to Eat.

Probably you have all noticed the little white puff balls in spring and "shot off" the same in autumn, when they are dry and full of dark powder. This is one of our choicest eatable mushrooms. One admirer says he cut a slice from a giant puff ball, which grew near his home, every day for a week and had so many fresh fritters, whereas, if he had cut it all down the first day, it would not have made nearly so many meals. One giant puff ball, when young and creamy, if well cooked, will satisfy the appetites of 12 people. In olden times slices of this mushroom were used to bind up cuts and were said to insure their speedy healing. In the days of flint and steel, before matches were invented, the powder of the dried puff balls was often used to catch and hold the sparks. Another strange use to which it was put was to burn it before a beehive. The fumes made the bees drowsy, and the honey could be removed without difficulty.—Margaret W. Leighton in St. Nicholas.

The Bicycle Demand.

It is doubtful if such a condition of affairs as exists at present in the bicycle business has ever before been witnessed by our naturally wide awake dealers. Scarcely a leading manufacturer of wheels but has found his sales—through agents greater in number than he ever supposed it was within his ability to gather—so far surpass his most sanguine expectations that he is today unable to supply to any appreciable extent the constant, steady and increasing demand for high grade wheels apparent on every hand.—Hardware.

ALASKA'S BIG BEARS.

GOOD FISHERMEN, ROADMAKERS AND FIERCE FIGHTERS.

What Hunters Who Have Met the Grizzly Have to Say of His Alaska Cousin—They Do Not Fear Man and Will Fight While Mortally Wounded.

A traveler who recently returned from Alaska says: "The Alaskan brown bear is a huge, shaggy animal, varying in length from 6 to 12 feet and weighing from 800 to 1,500 pounds. I found him to be an expert fisher, and during the salmon season he frequents all the rivers emptying into the Bering sea and the north Pacific and their tributaries as far as the fish go. After the salmon run is over the animal retreats into the recesses of the hills, where berries and small game are plentiful. Among other things he does besides fishing and occasionally chewing up a hunter, he is a great roadmaker for this part of Alaska. Nor only are the banks of the streams trodden into good trails by these huge lumbering beasts, but the swampy plains are crossed in every direction by paths leading to the hills. The traveler will do well to follow them in journeying across the country, as they invariably lead to the best feeding places along the stream and form the best routes to the hills."

A hunter who has spent some time there recently chasing brown bears writes several of his experiences to the Seattle Telegraph.

"My first encounter," he says, "with one of these brown bears was a startling experience for me, and I have always thought equally so for the bear. We had been working up against a strong current of the Koowak river all day, and toward nightfall pitched our tent at the base of a high bluff forming the right bank of the stream. While supper was being prepared I climbed the bluff to get a look at the country and was walking along with my gun carelessly held in my left hand. The top of the bluff was densely covered almost to the edge with spruce and alders, and the undergrowth was so thick that it was impossible to see more than a few feet through it. Ahead of me a cluster of rocks offered a temporary place to sit down and enjoy the view, and I made for it. Just as I reached the nearest rock a tremendous shaggy animal arose apparently from under my feet, and I immediately recognized in him the brown bear of whose fierceness the natives had been telling me for weeks. My first instinct was to shoot, and I probably would have done so had my gun been in my right hand, but the first motion I made the bear reared on his haunches and was so formidable looking that I concluded to wait and see what he intended doing. After a moment's hesitation, during which he turned his head from side to side and licked his chops in a most suggestive fashion, he dropped on all fours, and with wonderful quickness turned and sprang out of sight in the dense undergrowth. When I returned to camp and related my experience, Tah-tah-rok, my native guide, assured me that the bear must recently have concluded a heavy meal, or otherwise he would have attacked me.

"Some officers from some of the vessels of the Bering sea fleet went ashore at Herendeen bay during the summer of 1891 on a deer hunt, and one of the party saw a bear about 100 yards distant eating berries. Without thought of the consequences, he raised his gun and fired at the animal.

"The shot went wide of the mark, but at the report of the gun the bear started for the hunter on a dead run. His charge was met with a shower of bullets from the officer's repeater; but, although badly wounded, the infuriated animal did not hesitate an instant and rushed straight at his enemy. When within about 10 feet of the hunter, the bear rose on his haunches and prepared to close. Blood was pouring in streams down his body. One bullet had shattered his upper jaw, but he was so full of fight that the final outcome of the struggle would have been extremely doubtful had not another of the party arrived and ended the fight by shooting the brute through the brain. An examination of the bear's body showed that he had been struck six times. Three of the shots were in parts of the body ordinarily considered vital and would doubtless have caused death, but the vitality of these animals is almost incredible. Instances are cited of their running over 100 yards after being shot through the heart.

"Last summer, while I was at Sand Point, two hunters came in, after an absence of over a month in the vicinity of Portage bay, and reported having killed 33 bears. One day they killed seven. In order to show that they were not spinning hunters' yarns they brought the skins with them, and sold them at a trading post at Sand Point. During the summer of 1891 two prospectors were looking for coal lands near Port Moller, and about a mile from the shore they came upon an immense brown bear engaged in catching salmon in a small stream. One of the prospectors immediately opened fire, and evidently wounded the brute badly, but he got out of sight in the thick brush. Being anxious to secure the skin the two men started to follow the wounded animal. They had not gone a dozen steps before the enraged and wounded brute turned on them, and before either one could fire a shot he seized one man by the leg and bit it nearly off, and then sprang upon his companion and knocked him senseless with the blow of his terrible paw. Having, as he thought, finished his enemies, the bear quietly ambled off, and was subsequently found dead a few hundred yards from the scene of battle."

With Tears In Her Eyes.

She was thrown on the world.

"Merciful heaven!" she gasped.

Considerable turf was knocked off the world where she struck it.

Before anybody could reach her she had risen and was swiftly leading her bicycle away.—Town Topics.

East Grand Forks Items

[From The Courier.]

People are again becoming crazed with the base ball fever, especially is such the case in Grand Forks city, where men neglect their business to watch a couple of kid nines play.

The cold and rainy weather of the past few weeks will tend to delay harvesting operations, but people competent to judge say they never saw the wheat filling out better.

No truth in the story that the city authorities again contemplate drilling an artesian well. The hole which the city did puncture into the earth cost the taxpayers some $400, and the only satisfaction accruing from the expenditure was the knowledge that the city was built upon a firm foundation.

William Huggins, of Esther township, has without doubt the finest barley crop in Polk county. It is about ready to harvest, being two weeks earlier than the general run.

The Duluth sisters, three in number, have returned and are negotiating for a block of land in Traill's addition for the erection of a convent school. The work of transforming the Acme house into a hospital is progressing nicely, and the sisters will soon be in possession of that property.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Kelly are the happy possessors of twin sons who arrived at their home Wednesday morning.

Miss Alice Mullally returned from Crookston Saturday, remaining at home over Sunday. Monday evening she took her departure via Great Northern for Barnesville, where she will spend the balance of her vacation.

Beggars and tramps are becoming entirely too numerous. Men who willingly work every day to feed and clothe themselves and families should not be made to support the able-bodied tramps and beggars who are abroad in the land.

Mr. J. Dangerfield while in the city on Tuesday was interviewed on the harvest question. He expects to begin wheat harvest about Aug. 5th. He reports grain heavy and lodged in some places, but on the whole expects a bountiful harvest.

There are so many pieces of fine wheat this year that it is difficult to tell which is best. Mr. W. C. Sproat left a sample at our office the other day that we consider hard to beat, and although he is a man well advanced in years, he says he never grew such wheat before. With favorable weather it will be ready for harvest about August 5th and will probably yield 60 bushel to the acre.

Just What's Needed

Exclaims thousands of people who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla at this season of the year, and who have noted the success of the medicine in giving them relief from that tired feeling, waning appetite and extreme exhaustion after the close confinement of a long winter season, the busy time attendant upon a large and pressing business during the spring months and with vacation time yet some weeks distant. It is then that the building-up powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla are fully appreciated. It seems perfectly adapted to overcome that prostration caused by change of season, climate or life, and while it tones and sustains the system, it purifies and vitalizes the blood.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, JULY 30, 1895.

The Cleveland democrats are having a time dodging that third term question which is being fired at them from all directions. A few of them, secretaries Carlisle and Lamont, for instance, know, and dodge for reasons of their own, while the rest of them are afraid of committing themselves to the wrong side of question. To the latter class belongs ex-Senator Wade Hampton, who performs the lighter duties and draws the heavy salary of Railroad Commissioner. In trying to escape responsibility for an interview with him printed in a North Carolina paper, which quoted him as saying that he had personal knowledge of Mr. Cleveland's intention to be a candidate again, the old gentleman has got himself hopelessly tangled up. He acknowledges having expressed the opinion that if the financial question should result in party splits the gold democrats would insist upon running Mr. Cleveland again. But why this dodging? If Mr. Cleveland is not scheming to capture the democratic nomination again, why do such close friends of his as Secretaries Carlisle and Lamont neglect such good opportunities as they have both recently had to stop the discussion by an authoritative announcement that Mr. Cleveland is not a candidate for the nomination? And why does Mr. Cleveland himself not say something on the subject? He has found it easy to lay aside Presidential dignity and say other things which would better have been left unsaid. There is but one explanation of this dodging. Mr. Cleveland is a candidate, but is not ready to avow his candidacy, believing that he can so manipulate things as to make it appear that his party forces him to run again. Mistaken judgment, both in belief and in being willing to be a candidate to certain defeat.

By a patient search of musty documents relating to the early years of the government it was discovered that the comptroller had in certain instances assumed the authority without question to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of congress carrying appropriations. For weeks the administration has been trying to find an excuse to keep the more than five and a quarter million dollars appropriated at the last session of congress to pay sugar bounties in the treasury. This discovery furnished the excuse. Comptroller Bowler, a little man with a head easily swelled, required no persuasion to attempt to follow in the autocratic foot steps of some of the earlier comptrollers. He notified the parties in whose favor the first voucher against that sugar bounty appropriation was drawn that he had doubts about the constitutionality of the sugar bounty, forgetting the millions paid out for that purpose with his approval, and would, next month, hear arguments as to why the money should not be held up. The arguing the question will be useless, unless Bowler gets frightened and refuses to play the part assigned him. There is likely to be music in the air on this subject. In fact, there is already. The Louisiana senators and one or two of the representatives are now in Washington—the greater part of that appropriation would go to their constituents—and they tried to read the riot act to Secretary Carlisle, but he sneaked out by telling them he had no authority over the comptroller. The Louisianians think they have been buncoed, and when Bowler decides that appropriation to be unconstitutional, as he will if he doesn't weaken, they may have something interesting to say to the public. The administration doesn't care whether Bowler's decision shall afterwards be upset by the courts or not; all it wants is to hold onto that money for a time.

Senator Blackburn, of Kentucky, who has been in Washington, gave the newspaper men a shock they will not recover from for some time by refusing to talk. Think of Joe Blackburn's refusing to talk. If Senator Stewart should refuse to be interviewed on the silver question it would not be more surprising. It is known, however, that Blackburn is very bitter towards the administration and especially towards Secretary Carlisle and from an offer to wager money made by one of his friends who is a sort of a sporting character it seems that he talked to somebody, if not to the newspaper men. This man said he was prepared to bet from $100 to $1000 that the next Senator from Kentucky would either be Joe Blackburn or a republican, and several of Blackburn's other Washington friends have intimated that he would rather be succeeded in the Senate by a republican than by an administration democrat. Mind you, I do not say that Blackburn is responsible for what his friends say or do, but it is fair to infer that they are more or less influenced by what he has told them about the situation in Kentucky. Republican advises from that state are decidedly encouraging.

Bullet Marks In a Church Door.

An interesting discovery has been made at the Church of St. Mary, with St. Andrew, Tenyham, in Kent. The western door recently underwent renovation, and the removal of all superficial covering disclosed that the portal was of fine massive oak, which, on examination, was found to be scarred in several places with bullet marks. There are eight distinct punctures, in some of which the leaden bullets still remain imbedded. It is supposed that they were fired into the door by some of Cromwell's soldiers when engaged in the spoliation and desecration of the Kentish churches.—London Letter.

THE MAYA WOMEN.

THEY ARE INTELLIGENT, SWEET TEMPERED AND BEAUTIFUL.

In the Olden Times These Wives of the First Owners of America Were the Mothers of a Courageous Race, and They Never Looked Into a Mirror.

An unfamiliar word, but as old as the hills almost, is this word Maya. Among the Brahmans it means illusion and is the name of the earth, the material world, which, according to the Brahmanical doctrine, is nonexistent—an illusion. Maya Devi was the name of the beautiful mother of Buddha. Maya in the feminine energy of Brahma and the mother of all the gods, even of Brahma himself. Any Greek dictionary informs us that Maya is the good mother of all gods and men. In Japan the goddess Maya is still worshiped. The beautiful Indian poem "Ramayana" tells us about a great navigator named Maya, who in ages long gone by took forcible possession of the countries at the south of the Hindoostanee peninsula and settled there.

The Maya people of America were in olden times a great nation, occupying the territory comprised between the isthmus of Tehuantepec and that of Darien. We know that they were navigators, their boats being depicted in very ancient books and paintings. In 1502, when Columbus came to America for the fourth time, he met on the high seas a large boat, in which were men, women and children. It also had a cargo of merchandise, consisting of weapons, tools, products of the earth and ready made garments. The travelers called themselves Mayas. They were in the habit of traveling to Cuba and other islands to trade with their inhabitants. The Mayas were neatly clothed in white cotton raiment. They were self possessed and courteous. Fifteen years later their land, today called Yucatan, was invaded by the Spaniards, but it cost the white men 25 years of warfare to get control of that country, for every Maya fought like a hero. They were sons of fearless mothers.

In reading the works left by the Spanish chroniclers—priests who accompanied the soldiers—we learn that the Maya women were very good looking, as many are at the present day; that they were charitable, sweet tempered, industrious, modest and so free from vanity that they never consulted the mirror, although their husbands did. In physique these women were large and beautifully shaped.

Their complexion was a light brown, and their silky black hair very abundant. Father Cogollndo, a Spanish priest, wrote, "These women are more beautiful and better tempered than those of Spain." They always dressed themselves, as they do at the present time, in flowing white garments, and in their happier days were greatly addicted to the use of perfumes and flowers. They were industrious, devoted wives and fond mothers, but exacted great deference from their children. Their ideas of modesty were so strict that they did not permit their daughters to look boldly into the face of a man, and if a girl showed a want of shyness the indignant matron would pinch her arms. After the Spaniards were in possession of the land they subjected these women to indignities and cruelty. Among many other things it is recorded that in one village they found two young women of remarkable beauty, one a bride, the other a maiden, and they hanged both, so that there should be no trouble about them. Many young mothers were hung from trees and their infants suspended from their feet. Those who escaped death were enslaved with their husbands and children.

Long ago, as far back as our studies enable us to know anything about that nation, the Maya women seem to have enjoyed the same privileges as the men, to have had equal power in politics and equal authority.

Today, when business is to be transacted, the wife takes the active part, her husband nodding his head affirmatively. It is not that she desires to domineer, but because he looks up to her, relying on her judgment. She complies with admirable moderation and modesty. She is eloquent and forceful without being loquacious, and she never scolds. When her husband gets himself into trouble, she pleads for him, being a more able reasoner than he is. If he gets intoxicated, she guides him home. If he strikes her, she says, "He does not know what he is doing," regarding him with angelic forbearance, so that domestic brawls are quite unknown. It is her pleasure to give him the best of what they have, keeping for herself the worst.

This woman's home has a thatched roof and earthen floor. She has no pretty objects around her. Hammocks serve as seats by day as well as beds by night. There is one low chair or stool on which she sits while her busy fingers make the garments of the family. In one corner stands a bench and grinding stones. Her hands grind all the corn used in that humble abode. The fire is built on the floor between three stones, on which rests the clay pot or the disk for baking tortillas. Outside at the back of the hut there is a long dugout, serving as a washtub, resting on trestles. There she stands for some hours every day, her small feet bare, soapsuds up to her elbows, yet her hands are small and pretty, her voice is sweet and low, her language never rude, and if you approach her hut she welcomes you with such perfect grace and self possession, mingled with cordiality, that you ask yourself if she is not a princess in disguise. She may be, but, alas! the palaces of her sires are crumbling away in the forests where her husband cuts timber for his master, the white man, now owner of the soil. The dying race must bear its fate, and the Maya woman meets it nobly, with resignation and grace.—Washington Post.

THE "DEVIL'S MOOSE."

A Gigantic Flesh Eating Plant That Is Found In Nicaragua.

Carnivorous plants are certainly among the curiosities of the vegetable world. The poetical and religious Linnæus, who had occasion to study the fly catching peony, found, in his astonishment, no other name to bestow upon it than this—Miraculum naturæ (prodigy of nature). Since the illustrious Swedish botanist, the mechanism of carnivorous plants has been well studied, and particularly by Darwin, who has devoted to these plants a remarkable work. They are usually of small dimensions, and do not attain the size of one described in the "Bolletino del Naturalisti."

M. Fabiano Carlo tells there of a gigantic carnivorous plant that has been discovered on the shores of Lake Nicaragua by a naturalist named Dunstan. He discovered this curious plant in the following manner: Traveling with his dog, he heard the animal give vent to cries of pain. He advanced and found his dog held by three black, sticky hands, under which the skin was chafed till it bled. These bands were the branches of a new carnivorous plant, which Dunstan calls the "land octopus." The branches are flexible, polished, black, without leaves, secreting a viscous fluid and furnished with a great number of suckers by which they attach themselves to their victims. It might almost be believed to be an octopus transformed into a plant.

To extricate his dog Dunstan tried to cut the branches, and succeeded, though not without difficulty, and after having his hands severely injured by the tentacles of the "land octopus." As may be realized, observations under these conditions were not convenient to make, and the naturalist was able to get few facts concerning this odd plant. He proved the presence of numerous suckers, and found that the fetid odor of the black sticky fluid that covers the branches serves to attract prey to the plant. He also was able to note similarity of character with other carnivorous plants. For instance, the "land octopus" abandons its prey after having sucked out the nutritive elements. The natives of Central America call this singular plant by the appropriate name of "the devil's noose."—Paris Cosmos.

A MONSTER FACTORY.

One of the sights of Seville which no tourist misses is the cigarette factory, in which the government employs nearly 2,000 women and girls. The showing about of visitors is accordingly looked upon as a regular source of income by the porter and matrons. After getting permission to enter you are placed in charge of a matron, who shows you through her own department and then passes you on to another, and so on, until your stock of pesetas and half pesetas, put aside for fees, is exhausted.

These matrons accompany the visitors, not in order to prevent the girls from flirting with them—nothing could do that—but to see that no tobacco, picadura or cigarettes may disappear. Before entering each room a bell is rung to warn the girls, who are in great dishabille on account of the sun, to put on their wrappers, and as the door opens scores of round arms and pretty shoulders are seen disappearing, while several hundred pairs of coal black eyes are fastened on you.

The passages are lined with cradles, and the young girl mothers to whom they belong implore you with eyes and hands for a penny for the Murillos of the future lying in them. These girls are more frank than subtle in their flirtations. There is not one in the crowd who will not be immediately conscious of a man's gaze fixed on her, nor will she be the first to turn her eyes away. Some will wink and even throw a kiss from a distant corner at the rich Inglese—all foreigners are supposed to be wealthy Englishmen.

They are a merry lot on the whole, these poor girls, the quickest of whom make only 2 shillings a day, for which they have to toil 10 to 12 hours. They are allowed to smoke if they wish, and they make use of this privilege. They are remarkably deft at rolling the cigarettes, but not all seem eager to make as many as possible, for some are idling and others are asleep, but no one cares, as each one is paid according to the number she twists up, aided only by a piece of specially made cartridge paper and a small tin affair on her little finger.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

English Tramps and Their Babies.

On arriving at York we went at once to Warmgate, the kiphouse district, and picked out the filthiest one we could find. The inmates were principally in pairs. Each moocher had his July (wife), and each little kid had his little Moll (sister). These children are the very offspring of the road, and they remind me very much of monkeys. Yet one has to feel sorry for them, since they did not ask for life and yet are compelled to see its meanest and dirtiest side. Their mothers love them, when they are not drunk, and when they are their fathers have to play mothers, if they are not drunk themselves. Never in my life have I seen a more serio comic situation than in that York kiphouse, where two tramps were rocking their babies to sleep. Moochers—bohemians of the bohemians—fondling their babies! I should far sooner have looked for a New York hobo in clergyman's robes. But tramping with children and babies is a fad in English vagabondage.—Josiah Flynt in June Century.

Famous Living Pictures.

"Living pictures" cannot be called an invention of "these modern days" since it is claimed that they were first employed by Mme. de Genlis for the purpose of educating the Duc d'Orleans' children, whose governess she was. With the help of several famous artists she arranged pictures of historic scenes which ladies of the French court posed for.—Ladies' Home Journal.

NOT APPRECIATED.

JOHN BULL'S MEANNESS TOWARD A FOREMOST INVENTOR.

All Things British Tried Hard to Crush the Discoverer of the "Bessemer Process"—The Great Change Wrought by the Invention—Bessemer's Safety Stamp.

The inventor of the celebrated "Bessemer process" is the most modest of men, shunning rather than courting observation. A few years since he was sometimes to be seen taking a "constitutional" in the neighborhood of his unpretentious abode at Denmark Hill, in England, but the venerable gentleman with the benevolent face, in the old fashioned frock coat and voluminous, many folded choker neckcloth, is now rarely seen even by his immediate neighbors.

The British public, the British government and British manufacturers did their very best at one time to crush one of the most useful men ever born in Britain, and failed ignominiously. Sheffield laughed at him, and Woolwich gave him the official cold shoulder, but Sheffield and Woolwich would be crippled indeed at the present time were it not for "Bessemer steel." Yet, even now, although foreign potentates have showered crosses and stars upon him, the English government has not conferred upon him any honor more important than an ordinary knighthood, and this in spite of the fact that he has created one of the largest and most important industries in the world.

Some fascinating calculations, made by Sir Henry himself, prove that one year's production of Bessemer steel might be represented by a solid column 16½ times the height of St. Paul's cathedral, and as thick through as an ordinary gasometer—about 100 feet.

Henry Bessemer, son of the late Mr. Anthony Bessemer, was born in Hertfordshire in the year 1813. His earlier years were devoted to art, and we find that he was an exhibitor at the Royal academy at the age of 20. At this early age he had discovered a means by which impressions of the designs on coins, medals and other reliefs could be reproduced in any numbers on cardboard. Some of his work in this line is still extant, and when specimens come into the market they bring high prices.

This led him indirectly to a more important invention. He discovered that the government of the time was robbed to the tune of £100,000 per annum by unscrupulous persons, who were in the habit of removing the embossed duty stamps on legal and other documents and using the same again. Young Bessemer invented the useful little contrivance by which the stamp is embossed on the paper or parchment of the document itself, and submitted it to the then chief of the stamp department at Somerset House.

The potentate in question saw the advantage of this system at a glance, and soon afterward the authorities expressed their willingness to make use of it. A pretty little story is connected with this invention. When his model was completed, Bessemer showed it to the young lady to whom he was then engaged. Her first comment upon it showed that she was well fitted to become the wife of an inventor. She said:

"Yes, I understand this, but surely, if all stamps had a date put upon them, they could not at a future time be used again without detection."

This proved a very valuable suggestion, for Bessemer soon hit upon the idea of a steel die with a space for a movable date, and in that form his invention was adopted by the authorities. Will it be credited that he never received a solitary farthing from the government for his services or the use of his invention?

Such is nevertheless the fact, and when he hinted mildly at legal remedies he was told by the solicitor to the stamp department that he was entitled to no compensation, inasmuch as he had presented his invention to the government gratis! This was at a time, too, when he was by no means well off, when indeed he lacked the necessary money to set up housekeeping with the clever young lady whose brilliant suggestion had resulted in a perfect stamping machine! He received many generous promises from various ministers, of course, but one government went out of power after another, and to this day he has never been compensated in any shape or form.

A man of vast wealth now, Sir Henry Bessemer can afford to regard the troubles of that period of his life with comparative indifference, though he has since had more ample reason to cherish a dislike for all British governments and politicians. But his disappointment in this instance taught him a very salutary lesson. When he made the great discovery of his life—that by which it is possible to convert pig iron into steel by a simple and inexpensive process—he kept his discovery a secret. To some extent it is a secret to this day. The importance of the discovery can hardly be overestimated.

Before the Bessemer process came into use steel could not be bought under £50 a ton, and its price prohibited its use in numberless departments of industry where it is now considered essential. At that time, too, only 51,000 tons of cast steel were produced in Sheffield in a year. In 1892, 33,546 tons of steel were manufactured in the world every day according to the Bessemer process, the selling price per ton averaging £8 perhaps. It is chiefly due to Sir Henry Bessemer that one is almost as safe on a modern ocean steamship as on land, and that the modern structure of steel is nearly as imperishable as the Pyramids.

Such a discovery, it might be supposed, would be hailed with enthusiasm by those interested in the iron trade of Great Britain. Not a bit of it. Bessemer met with every possible discouragement. The steel manufacturers of Sheffield were dead against him from the first, and the government ignored him.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

The Birds' Service to Men.

Before many years have passed the legislatures of our states and nation will be forced to some action on the needless destruction of birds. The robins and bluebirds and wrens and the hundreds of glad little singers of the woods and fields have been driven away not merely from the cities, which they used to inhabit, but from the villages on the outskirts, and in some cases from even the isolated hamlets. The increase in insect pests within two or three years betokens a grave danger, and the cheapest and surest way to meet it is to stop killing the birds and let them return and dine upon the moths and caterpillars and the rest of the evil tribe that strip our trees and gardens. It will take many years, at best, to restore them in such numbers as they could be reckoned by a dozen or 20 years ago, but people by ceasing to be sportsmen, or at least by ceasing to kill the birds that are of no use as food, can bring good times back.—Exchange.

The Ad. Brought the Cat Back.

SIR—I lost a valuable cat—lost, strayed or stolen. I advertised for it in a prominent newspaper, but didn't get the cat back. Then I tried The News. You told me, as you put the cash for the advertisement in your money drawer, that you had no doubt the cat would see the ad. in The News and come back of herself. Within 36 hours from the appearance of the advertisement the cat appeared at my window and scratched to come in. I am not prepared to say whether the cat saw the ad. herself and acted on it or whether some one found her, picked her up and dropped her in my yard after seeing the ad. At any rate the cat came back, and I feel grateful to The News.—Letter in Providence News.

LONG ISLAND LOSING ITS TAIL.

Long Island, which looks on the map like a big fish about to swallow New York city, is apparently being slowly swallowed by the ocean. Portions of its shores have disappeared beneath the waves, and now the northern fork of its huge tail is vanishing. About two miles of Orient point, that formed a sandy beach two years ago, is now under 15 feet of water. The lighthouse on the point was six rods from the sea a few years ago. It has since been toppled over by the sea, and only a small part of the surrounding beach is visible.

The bluffs on both the sound and the bay side of Orient point have been sinking at the rate of about 10 or 12 feet a year. The same state of affairs is true of Montauk point, but there the bluffs jut up so abruptly and so high above the sea that the rising of the water is not so noticeable. A rise of a foot or two on the low shores near Peconic bay will submerge acres of land. Much of the threatened land on Orient point forms fertile farms, and the steady advance of the shore line is causing no small concern to the owners. The water has in several places found its way across a low spot on the point from the sound to the bay. The result will be to ultimately divide the peninsula into a series of small islands, similar to Plum, Little Gull and Great Gull islands, all of which were doubtless once a part of the mainland and were cut off by the rise of the sea. The village of Orient is situated in a particularly narrow and low portion of the peninsula, and the next serious inroad of the ocean will probably occur there. In that case 2,000 acres of land and a village of 1,000 people will have to be abandoned.—New York Sun.

From Every Clime.

Twenty-nine nationalities are represented in a New York public grammar school. There are in the primary and grammar departments of this school 1,300 children, and at the last census there were represented among them Hebrews, Italians, Germans, Irish, Greeks, Russians, Poles, French, Scotch, English, Walsh, Swiss, Chinese, Silesians, Assyrians, Tunisians (North Africa), Javanese, Kongo West Indians, Cubans, Norwegians, Swedes, Austrians, Hungarians, Herzegovinians, Wallachians Moldavians, Egyptians, Danes and Armenians. Not over 10 per cent of these children speak English in their homes, the proportion in the primary being under and that in the grammar department over this estimate.

BLACKS WARLIKE.

Chicago Negroes Threaten to Send an Armed Force to Spring Valley.

CALL TO ARMS CIRCULATED.

Time Has Come to Put an End to Murders and Lynchings.

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Some of the colored residents of Chicago have been wrought up in a dangerous condition by the report of the outrages committed against their brethren at Spring Valley. Some of the more radical have openly threatened to march against the foreigners there with an armed force. Late last night the following call to arms was circulated in the colored community of the South Side:

"To the colored people of Chicago: There will be a mass meeting at 500 State street at 9 a. m., and we want all ablebodied men to come.

"The time has come for us to raise our arms in defense of our race. They are killing our people all over the country. Every day we read of the lynching, murdering and outraging of our people. We must remember that this is our country, and unless we the foreigners will run us out, as the government has not protected and will not protect us as we protected it in the time of need.

"We ask all ablebodied colored men to respond to this call as they must have our aid at Spring Valley. We have got to do this and we may as well die now as to die a year from now."

A mass meeting was held earlier in the night at which speeches were made by Mrs. Ida B. Wells-Barnett and others. A telegram was sent to Governor Altgeld asking him to see that the colored miners are protected. Several members of a colored military organization who were present declared that if the state would not protect the colored men at Spring Valley they would go there and give the Italians all the fight they wanted.

RIOTERS COOLED DOWN.

Situation Quiet at Spring Valley, Ills. Negroes Remain Away.

SPRING VALLEY, Ills., Aug. 7.—The situation is very quiet in this city. During the afternoon a few negro women were allowed to pack up their goods and depart from Location. The negroes run out of the city are all at Seatonville, most of them having spent the night in the woods. The man Role, who was shot and robbed by the colored men, is still alive but cannot live long. The coal company officials begin to feel alarmed as a dynamite bomb has been found near the residence of Manager Dalzell.

EXPERT COUNTERFEITERS.

Gang of Five Rounded Up by Officers at Jersey City.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—The World says: The expert counterfeiters who for two years past have been engraving and printing $500 and $100 United States gold certificates and flooding Canada with notes of smaller denominations, have been discovered by secret service detectives and four of the gang are now locked up in Jersey City. The fifth member, the backer of the plant, was arrested, but escaped from the officers. Brockway, the most expert forger and counterfeiter in this country, is probably the principal of the gang. He is now 73 years old. When caught he had in his possession a $500 gold certificate and $390 in Canadian money, supposed to be counterfeit.

KILLED ONE, WOUNDED ANOTHER.

Newton Lane, Friend of Breckinridge, Shoots Two Men.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Aug. 7.—Newton Lane of Mount Sterling, who figured in several fights in Lexington last fall as a partisan of Colonel Breckinridge, killed James Rodenhaugh and fatally wounded Henry Clay Rodenhaugh, owners of the Hotel Woodford, Versailles, Ky., in the rotunda of their hotel. The parties are all prominent.

Natural Gas in Iowa.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., Aug. 7.—While digging a well on his farm near Estherville, a small town in this vicinity, George Weir struck a tremendous flow of gas at a depth of 141 feet. The force was sufficient to hurl sand and small stones 40 or 50 feet in the air. The pressure is placed at 150 pounds to the square inch.

Desperado Wyatt Dying.

SOUTH ENID, O. T., Aug. 7.—Zeph Wyatt, alias Dick Yeoger, the notorious bandit, is still alive but fast sinking. He has three 45-caliber Winchester bullets in his body. When told that he could not live he made a partial statement, admitting his identity, and requested that his father be sent for.

Young Desperadoes Captured.

SALT LAKE, Aug. 7.—Coughlin and George, the slayers of Sheriffs Stagg and Dawes near Echo on Monday last, have been captured and are safely behind the bars in the county jail. The men were taken by surprise and surrendered without firing a shot.

MRS. TALMAGE'S DEATH.

It Was Due to Nervous Prostration of Long Standing.

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—The death of Mrs. T. DeWitt Talmage, which occurred at Danville, N. Y., Monday, was due to nervous prostration. Since the burning of the Brooklyn tabernacle last year, Mrs. Talmage has suffered from nervous prostration, and she has never fully recovered from the shock sustained then. A trip to Europe was tried, but proved of little benefit.

While Dr. Talmage was absent on a lecture tour in the West last week, he received a telegram summoning him to his wife's bedside. He at once canceled all his engagements and hastened back, to find that there was very little hope for the patient's recovery, and he remained with her until the end came.

The deceased was the second wife of Dr. Talmage. His first wife was drowned while boating in 1862, leaving a daughter, Miss Jessie, and a son, who has since died. About two years afterwards, the doctor married Miss Susie Whittemore of Brooklyn. She became the mother of five children, Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage, Mrs. Dorin, Mrs. Mangan, Miss Maud and Miss Daisy Talmage.

MIGHT FIRE GREENWAY.

Governor of Manitoba Said to Be Considering the Matter.

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 5.—Sir John Schultze, governor of Manitoba, transmitted to Premier Greenway a communication from the Dominion government asking Greenway just how far he will go in compromising the Catholic school difficulty. Sir John, after transmitting the communication, took the train for Banff, in the Rocky mountains, where Sir Mackenzie Bowell, premier of Canada, now is. In Winnipeg the startling rumor is freely circulated by politicians that if Premier Greenway persists in his refusal to remedy Catholic grievances he and his ministers will be dismissed from office by the Manitoba governor. Of course the governor has the power to do this, but such a high handed course would be calculated only to intensify the trouble and bitterness. Certain it is, however, that the Dominion government is contemplating some decisive move.

ARE GROWING UGLY.

Some of the Ishpeming Strikers Trying to Make Trouble.

ISHPEMING, Mich., Aug. 6.—The strike situation is rapidly changing front, and from being the most orderly on record, there is general apprehension of serious trouble.

The majority of the strikers are orderly and wish to remain so, but the turbulent spirits are getting from under control, and it is hard to see how trouble can be averted unless troops are sent here at once and in strong force.

Mayor Johnson has received a telegram from Governor Rich urging the prevention of interference with any person engaged in legitimate pursuits. The Ishpeming strikers, after a meeting in the rain at the Midway park, went to Negaunee and held a joint demonstration.

IT IS USELESS.

Hill Further Than Ever From Accomplishing Consolidation.

NEW YORK, Aug. 3.—President Hill and Vice President Clough of the Great Northern have been in this city for a week past in constant consultation with J. Pierpont Morgan and with Edward D. Adams, chairman of the Northern Pacific reorganization committee. They have made no progress in the scheme for obtaining control of the Northern Pacific road through the organization of a third company. It is safe to say that Mr. Hill and Mr. Morgan are now further apart than at any time since the consolidation project was broached last May.

NOT AN A. P. A.

Governor McKinley Denies the Statement of Rev. James Boyd Brady.

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—The Traveler publishes a letter from James Boyle, private secretary to Governor McKinley of Ohio, denying in the governor's name that the latter is a member of the American Protective association. The letter was brought out by declarations of Rev. James Boyd Brady of the Peoples church at a public meeting a fortnight ago, who said Governor McKinley was a member of the order and a believer in its principles.

TO SUCCEED ORTON.

Judge R. D. Marshall of Chippewa Falls to Be a Supreme Justice.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 6.—A special to The Evening Wisconsin from Madison, Wis., says that the appointment of Judge R. D. Marshall of Chippewa Falls, to fill the position on the supreme bench made vacant by the death of Judge Orton, was announced at the executive chamber. Official notice of his appointment has been sent to Judge Marshall, and it is believed that he will accept the office.

COWS FOR SALE.

Having decided to rent the farm I will offer for sale the fine herd of Jersey cows now on section 9, town of Fairfax, or will rent the farm including the dairy stock. For particulars enquire of H. E. Cooke at the JOURNAL office, Crookston.

AMERICANS ARE SAFE

ONLY BRITISH SUBJECTS KILLED IN THE LATEST CHINESE MASSACRE.

The Victims Said to Have Been Most Brutally Treated, Being Burned to Death or Murdered With Spears and Swords—The Consul General's Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The state department has received later intelligence of the killing of the missionaries in Ku Cheng, China. The dispatch, like the one received Saturday, was from Consul General Jernigan, and shows that no Americans suffered, but that the massacre of British subjects was greater than at first reported. The consul general's dispatch is as follows: "Americans safe. None hurt. Ten British killed."

Although Mr. Jernigan does not use the word "missionaries" in his dispatch, there is no doubt felt by the officials of the state department that he refers to them, and that his dispatch is intended as supplementary to that of Saturday. Much gratification is expressed that the Americans have not suffered, as the dispatch appears to leave no doubt on that point. The cablegram was at once forwarded to Secretary Olney for his information.

Instruction to Denby.

Up to this time, so far as ascertained, no steps have been taken by the navy department toward sending any naval force to the district where the reported massacre has occurred. When word came of the trouble Saturday the customary instructions were sent to Minister Denby at Pekin to see that American interests were protected. In a response received the minister said that small boats could reach the place quick with marines.

Admiral Carpenter is in command of the Chinese station, and he has authority to use the vessels and men under his command to assist in affording any protection that may be regarded as necessary. The lack of ships of light draught that can penetrate the shallow waters of the Chinese rivers is a serious embarrassment to the authorities.

BRUTALLY MURDERED.

Victims Were Burned Alive or Killed With Spears and Swords.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—A Shanghai dispatch to The Times says that the mission and sanitarium at Wha Sang, near Ku Cheng, province of Fo Kein, has been attacked and 10 British subjects killed.

The Rev. Mr. Stewart, wife and child were burned in their house. The Misses Yellow and Marshall, two sisters named Saunders, two sisters named Gordon and Steetie Newcome were murdered with spears and swords. Miss Codrington was seriously wounded about the head and Stewart's eldest child had a knee cap injured while the younger had an eye gouged out. The Rev. Mr. Phillips with two Americans, were wounded but arrived safely at Fu Chan Fu. The prefect of Cheng Fu, who was on the inquiry commission, is seriously implicated in the Cheng Fu outrages.

Officials to Blame.

A two column article from Hankau, on the Caes Szu Chuen mission outrages, published in The Times declares that officials are at the bottom of all anti-foreign feeling, and that the Chinese people themselves are quite friendly. The letter suggests that if the powers tried a little benevolent retaliation it would prove an infallible cure.

The Standard in its editorial on the Ku Cheng outrage, says: "We must speak to China in a manner which cannot be misunderstood. Not only must the murderers be punished, but a thorough example must be made of the officials whose neglect permits such outrages."

Shanghai Europeans Protest.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 6.—At a crowded meeting of the European residents of this place resolutions condemning the action of the Chinese authorities in the case of the massacre of missionaries at Whai Han, near Ku Cheng. It was resolved. It was resolved to appeal directly to the European governments against the outrage. The resolution also referred to the inadequate manner in which China has dealt with the perpetrators of former outrages.

WANT TO BE ANNEXED.

Hawaiian Legislators Anxious to Reopen Negotiations.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—The steamship Mariposa has arrived from Sydney and Auckland via Samoa and Honolulu, and brings the following Hawaiian advices:

HONOLULU, July 25.—Considerable pressure is being brought to bear to cause the legislature, now in session, to pass a joint resolution authorizing and instructing President Dole to reopen annexation negotiations with the United States. At a meeting recently held by the native Hawaiian organization, resolutions to that effect were passed. It is believed that such a resolution will be introduced by the executive before the senate adjourns.

Arguments in the Kent Case.

FARGO, N. D., Aug. 6.—All day Attorneys Hildreth and Nye have poured forth eloquence in the famous Kent case. Hildreth spoke up to 3 p. m. Frank M. Nye of Minneapolis then began the closing argument in the case and spoke for four hours. He will continue in the morning.

SUPERIOR HAS TWO MAYORS.

Rev. Starkweather Refuses to Vacate the Office.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., Aug. 3.—Rev. Starkweather refuses to vacate the office of mayor, and President Howe has not yet attempted to qualify. The question of which is chief executive confronts the city, and in the meantime payrolls and other city business is neglected. Mr. Starkweather says he will not give up without taking the matter to the supreme court.

Arraigned Altgeld and Adjourned.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Aug. 3.—The special session of the Illinois legislature called by Governor Altgeld, adjourned without having enacted hardly any of the numerous statutes desired by him, except an arbitration bill. The house adopted resolutions caustically arraigning the governor as insincere.

Injured Several Militiamen.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Aug. 6.—A cannon fired from a Knights of Pythias excursion train struck a passing train carrying the Third regiment, Ohio national guard, Colonel Charles S. Anthony commanding, resulting in the serious injury of a number of the soldiers.

Schlesinger Gets Another.

IRON MOUNTAIN, Mich., Aug. 6.—A deal has been closed whereby Ferdinand Schlesinger and Corrigan, McKinney & Co. of Cleveland secure control of the Crystal Falls mine near the village of that name.

Will Meet Speedy Justice.

FT. SMITH, Ark., Aug. 7.—Cherokee Bill will meet swift and speedy justice. The grand jury returned an indictment against him for murder, after considering 20 minutes He has pleaded not guilty and his case is set for trial Thursday morning.

Robbed of $2,300.

CLEVELAND, Aug. 7.—J. M. Curtis, a Kansas City horseman, was relieved of a pocketbook containing $2,300 by pickpockets.

Conflicting Fire Stories.

PETOSKY, Mich., Aug. 6.—Captain Vanderhoef of the steamer Thomas Friant has returned from Beaver Island. He denies any great damage, as given out in the early reports. On the other hand, equally reliable vesselmen who landed at Cheboygan relate that Gillatt is certainly destroyed and that St. James, although saved as yet, is still threatened by swamp fires.

Coxey Nominated.

COLUMBUS, Aug. 8.—Jacob S. Coxey of Massillon was nominated for governor by the Populist convention.

QUINLANS CONFESS

THEY KNEW OF MANY OF THE CRIMES OF HOLMES.

Murder of Mrs. Conner and Her Daughter Practically Admitted—Said They Have Signed a Confession on the Promise of Immunity From Punishment for Their Share in the Crime.

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—The police have at last obtained a partial confession from Pat Quinlan, the janitor of Holmes' Castle, and have, they believe, positive evidence that Benjamin F. Pitzel was murdered in this city by Holmes and the corpse sent to Philadelphia.

The confession was wormed out of the Quinlans by means of a trap given the local officers by Detective Geyer of Philadelphia, who arrived in this city during the day. The exact nature of the story told by the Quinlans the police will not reveal, and, in fact, Chief Badenoch and Inspector Fitzpatrick have both denied that Quinlan or his wife made any confession at all. Notwithstanding the denials, the police, however, it is positively known that Quinlan

Made and Signed a Confession.

Later it was learned that the confession covered all the details of the murder of Pitzel, with the exception of the actual place in which the crime was committed. The confession was obtained from the Quinlans only after the hardest kind of work, and at the price of a promise of immunity from punishment for all part the Quinlans may have borne in the murder of Pitzel or other crimes committed by Holmes.

Mrs. Pat Quinlan knew of the disappearance of Mrs. Julia L. Conner in Holmes' Castle and saw the body of the woman after she was dead. She further knew and has admitted that Pearl Conner after her return from the Quinlan farm at Lake Michigan. Chief Badenoch took Mrs. Quinlan and her husband to the Castle, with Inspector Fitzpatrick and Detectives Fitzpatrick and Morton. The object of this trip was more for the purpose of letting Quinlan and his wife meet than any other. They were closeted together alone for an hour in the room in which the Julia Conner carpet lies and the chair belonging to the murdered woman stands. What took place between them no one knows, but Chief Badenoch and the detectives are nearer the solution of the Holmes mystery than they ever were before. They now have positive proof that Mrs. Conner and her daughter Julia, or Cora Quinlan, were murdered in the building while the mother was in his employ. Further, Quinlan and his wife that Mrs. Connor was so well aware of the schemes which Holmes was operating that it became necessary for Holmes to put the woman out of the way.

Have Proved to the Police

Pat Quinlan and his wife have admitted partially that a business in receiving and disposing of dead bodies stolen from country graveyards was carried on in the Castle under the direction of Holmes. The graveyards of the western portion of Michigan—Grand Haven, Holland, St. Joseph and other places—were despoiled of bodies. These were brought to the Castle and chemically treated and then disposed of to medical colleges. The coffins were remade by Holmes, Quinlan and Pietzel and disposed of to undertakers at a fair profit.

DETECTIVES STILL AT WORK.

CHICAGO, Aug. 6.—Human blood has been found in Holmes' Castle, bespattered from one room to another. Science aided Detectives Fitzpatrick and Norton where other agencies had failed and uncovered more startling evidence against Holmes and Quinlan than has yet been found in the Castle.

There was found in the Castle by the detectives and a medical expert a trail of blood leading from the doorway of the dining room of Mrs. Julia L. Conner to the sink in the same room; from there into the dark chamber where she and Pearl slept and from there to the inside of the door opening into the bathroom where the secret trap door was located and which led to the false elevator shaft and thence to the basement. The blood was human.

In Pat Quinlan's private rooms were found two trunks of the theatrical type, one being purchased from Meeks in Denver. On both trunks were the initials "M. R. W." The initials are those of Minnie R. Williams. Pat Quinlan stated, after his being taken into custody, that both of the trunks belonged to him. Detectives Norton and Fitzpatrick have now the truth that both trunks belonged to Minnie Williams.

Everything Quiet at Omaha.

OMAHA, Aug. 6.—Not a ripple of excitement was noticed in the city during the day, so far as the police muddle is concerned. Whether it is a calm before the storm and a premonition of impending bloodshed is a question undetermined. The only subject now agitating the members of the police force is what about the payment of salaries. All salaries for the last

THE TRAINING SCHOOL

Ends a Successful Session And The Pedagogues and The Schoolma'ms Return To Their Several Homes.

Last week witnessed the close of one of the most successful sessions of the teachers' training school ever held in Polk county. Over 200 teachers registered during the term and the interest was kept up during the entire time. Prof. McCrillis was indefatigable in his efforts to make this session memorable in the history of Polk county schools and to his efforts largely was due the brilliant success it did attain. The following resolutions were adopted at the close of the term:

We, the members of the Teacher's Training School at Crookston, Minn. in special session assembled do hereby adopt the following resolutions:

RESOLVED, That we tender our heartfelt thanks to our conductor, Miss Maria L. Sanford, whose nobility of character, devotion to her profession, and earnestness in her every undertaking have inspired us to better men and women and to do better work as teachers during the coming years.

RESOLVED, That we express our gratitude to Co. Supt. McCrillis, Misses Pendergast and Wilson, and Professors Steffins and Casey for their untiring efforts in our behalf.

RESOLVED, That the citizens of Crookston be sincerely thanked for making our stay with them such a delightful one.

RESOLVED, That a copy of these resolutions be published in each of the Crookston papers. COMMITTEE.

And Yet Another.

There must be something wrong with the ozone at Thief River Falls judging from the number of cases in which young girls get "mashed" on married men and make fools of themselves. And now comes the report that a girl named Annie Folske attempted to steal a poor innocent married man named Anton Peterson and run him off but old man Folske "got onto the racket" and nipped their plan in the bud. It seems that the "gentle Annie" attempted to carry off eighty-five good hard silver dollars belonging to old man Folske and there's were she made a wrong calculation for he drew the line right there, pursued the amorous couple and captured the $85 and Annie and bore them in triumph to the paternal abode. But not for long it seems, for on Monday Peterson and his Annie appeared in this city enroute for more congenial climes. The blushing Annie allowed that Peterson had told her that divorce proceedings were pending between himself and wife so she supposed that Peterson was lawful prey. Such, however was not the case, she learned here, notwithstanding which the couple left on the southbound train on Monday evening.

The Hotel Crookston.

This elegant new hotel was duly dedicated on Wednesday evening of last week by a banquet and ball which was attended by a large number from the city and abroad. The reception commenced at 8 o'clock with an address by Mayor John McKinnon which was replied to by Gov. D. M. Clough and after a few remarks by R. J. Montague, Esq., the people were given an opportunity to shake hands with the governor and staff. After this the grand march took place and then dancing was in order. Hall's orchestra of Grand Forks furnished the music. At about 11 o'clock the assembled multitude sat down to as fine a feast as was ever spread in this city to which ample justice was done. The affair was a brilliant success in every way both financial and social and everybody agreed that Crookston now has as fine a hotel as can be found anywhere in the Northwest.

An Excursion.

On Sunday August 18th the Northern Pacific Railroad company will run an excursion train to Detroit lake. Train leaves Crookston at 7 a. m. reaching Detroit at 10:15 a. m. Returning reaches Crookston at 11 o'clock p. m. The fare for the round trip will be only two dollars.

DEBATE ON SILVER.

First Day of the Harvey-Horr Controversy.

TWO CHAMPIONS JOIN THE ISSUES.

General Positions of the Disputants Stated—Battle Rages Around the Unit of Value Principally—Harvey Contends That Silver Was the Favored Metal in 1792 and Horr That the Yellow Dollar Was Also a Standard of Value.

[Copyright, 1895, by Azel F. Hatch.]

The first of the series of debates between Hon. R. G. Horr and W. H. Harvey, Esq., author of "Coin's Financial School," began in the Illinois clubhouse at 2 p. m. The chamber that had been prepared for the occasion was full to its utmost capacity of interested listeners. When the gathering came to order Dr. Thomas, President of the Illinois Club, welcomed the guests of the club in a brief address and presented the judges of the discussion, Hon. H. J. Miller and Judge W. A. Vincent. Judge Miller then stated the conditions of the debate (which have been widely published), the principal feature of the same being that the talks will be a "running fight," as it were. The judge then introduced Hon. R. G. Horr, who opened the debate.

Mr. Horr proceeded to make a brief statement defining the position he proposed to occupy in the debate. He said in part that "the foundation of the discussion upon which we are about to enter is a small book published by Mr. Harvey, my opponent, and entitled 'Coin's Financial School.' The real aim and object of that book is to convince the people of the United States that this government alone should at once enter upon the free and unlimited coinage of silver upon the old ratio of 16 to 1. The wisdom of such a course I dispute. Mr. Harvey will still maintain the affirmative of that issue. I will state in the outset that from the beginning to the end of the book there is hardly a proposition made to which I give my consent. I propose to controvert many things which are stated as facts, and shall attempt to prove that the entire theory set forth by its author, if adopted by the people of this country, would lead only to business disaster and financial ruin. I do not now remember ever to have examined a book carefully in which I found so few statements that I consider worthy of belief, and I certainly never saw so many absolute errors crammed into so few pages." (Laughter.)

Mr. Horr said he did not oppose bimetallism, but believed in the use of both metals to the fullest extent that could safely be done; that in all large transactions gold was the best to use, and that in all transactions between nations the two metals should be used only at their commercial value. He was a believer in an international agreement on a ratio, and was "very clear in my idea that until some such arrangement shall have been made it would be simply suicide for this nation to adopt a system of free coinage of silver upon the old ratio, a ratio which all the civilized nations of the world have long since discarded. I do not believe that any one government can fix the value upon any two metals and name a ratio which will be accepted by the people of the world or of the country itself, so that the two metals will be used side by side. * * * I do not believe that silver has been demonetized anywhere in the world. I believe that the law of 1873, which Mr. Harvey's book denounces as a 'crime,' was honestly conceived, openly advocated and passed by the American Congress after full deliberation, and because the people at that time who held seats in the American Congress believed that such a law ought to be enacted. * * * I believe if our nation should adopt the course advocated in this book it would seriously injure the entire wage-earners of the United States. I shall deny most emphatically that the great majority of the people of this country are in debt, and shall insist that three-fourths of the American people are creditors and not debtors. . . .

I will state still further that if this book about which we are going to debate is true then I am all wrong. (Laughter.) It seems to me to be devoid of business sense from beginning to end, and I shall enter upon the work of attempting to prove that and hope to be able to do in language that shall be so plain and explicit that my fellow citizens will be satisfied that I have accomplished my task."

Mr. Harvey: I am here to defend the facts and principles in "Coin's Financial School." I expect to make good in this debate the following propositions:

1. That silver and gold are the money of the Constitution. That the silver dollar was the unit of value in our coinage system in this country from 1792 to 1873, just as the yard stock was the measure of length. That gold was measured in this silver unit, and concurrent coinage given to it (gold). That silver and gold combined constituted the legal standard of value in this country till 1873. Silver measured gold; the two together measured all other property.

2. That the act of 1873 was surreptitiously passed.

3. That during the period 1792 to 1873 the mints were opened to the unlimited coinage of both metals into primary or redemption money, and that both were treated as such. That during that period people had a right to have either metal coined into full legal tender money and that the option was with the debtor to pay in coins of either metal.

4. That this bimetallic system made an unlimited demand for both metals to be coined into money, increased the demand for these metals, and so long as this law, authorizing any one to coin 371¼ grains of silver and 23 2-10 grains of gold into a dollar, there was no one willing to sell either for less than a dollar.

5. That the option to pay in either metal caused the cheaper of the two metals to be used and transferred the demand from the dearer to the cheaper metal and restored its relative commercial value. We are called silver men because we are defending the metal that has been demonetized, but we are nevertheless for both gold and silver.

6. That it is to the interest of the United States to act independently in the remonetization of silver at the ratio to gold of 16 to 1 without waiting for the action of any other nation.

7. That monometallism consists in the use of the dearer of the two metals to the exclusion of the other as primary or redemption money. That monometallism is an experiment on trial for the first time in the history of the world, and began with the period 1873. That it is impossible and impractical as a stable money measurement of values; is not based on scientific financial principles; is in the interest of the money lenders and against the property owners and laborers.

8. That the gold unit as the measure of values, with no concurrent coinage of another metal to assist it in performing the functions of primary money, has caused the fall in prices as compared with 1872, when the world's prices of property were measured in the money mass of both metals. That all prices of property and labor have declined accordingly as compared with 1872, except when held up relatively combines and trusts, or special reasons affecting a particular service or property. That the average price of all production, except gold, will show this decline in adjusting itself to the gold standard. And that when we include in labor the unemployed and the time lost by those employed there is a fall in wages of one-half as compared with 1872. That labor is adjusting itself to the gold standard measurement of values. That the gold standard is confiscating the property of the people, and deprives labor of work.

9. That the decline in prices covering a period of twenty-two years has as a rule made all classes of productive, mercantile and manufacturing business unprofitable. That a falling market covering a long period destroys the prospective profits based on cost of purchase and production, and a majority of our most astute business men cannot avoid failure or loss of capital under these conditions.

10. That it has worked a hardship and injury to debtors, who, unconscious of the causes that continuously reduced the prices of their property, have contracted debts during these twenty-two years. That this fall in prices causes a sacrifice of property to purchase the dollars with which to liquidate these debts. That this has caused the renewal of debts; the contraction of new debts to pay old debts and an enlarged volume of all debts. That this unjustly takes from a debtor his property and emphasizes the importance of a stable money measurement of value.

11. That in the end, none is benefited by a fall in prices but the money-lender, the owner of money and securities payable in money-fixed incomes.

12. That the foregoing facts and conditions produced by a change in our money measurement of values will impoverish the masses of the people and points by reason of the disturbances it will produce to the overthrow of the republic. That the free coinage of both metals by this government in the ratio of 16 to 1 will restore prosperity to this nation.

Mr. Horr—Before entering upon the discussion proper I desire to call the attention of my opponent to the manner in which this book is written.

Mr. Harvey—The "School is allegorical; it marshals the opinions of the two sides of this controversy. * * * It puts in the mouths of the gold standard advocates their well-known views fairly stated with which the country had been flooded up to the time the "School" was written. * * * The fact that a little boy in knee pants was the instructor of the men was supposed to be sufficient to fix the story as allegorical.

(Mr. Harvey illustrated by referring to Aesop's Fables, Robinson Crusoe and other books which though not actual fact taught great lessons. He also referred to Shakespeare and to poetry in general, and concluded as follows: "If it is charged that actual characters are used in the book while similar books use fictitious characters, the answer is that the well-known utterances and opinions of these men are used and the further answer that Shakespeare used actual characters."

Mr. Horr—I desire to say that to me the excuse is a very lame one. I am somewhat familiar with fiction, have heard of Shakespeare before, but nowhere in the history of all literature can you find another instance of a man selecting his immediate neighbors and putting words into their mouths which they never uttered and then publishing it to the world. * * * He says that he put into their mouths the words they themselves would have uttered. I have had that done for me so many times in my life that I know what it means. I never yet had a fellow state what I would say if I had a chance who got anywhere near what I wanted to say myself. * * * But now I come to the motto of the book, which is this: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes." I would like my friend to tell me why he used that motto. Does he desire to intimate that the kind of finance which he teaches is something that babes will understand, but that people who know anything will never be able to comprehend? (Applause and laughter). Is that his idea? * * *

Mr. Harvey—Mr. Horr misinterprets the meaning of that verse. The word "babes" is intended to mean the pure of mind and unselfish. It is in that sense that it is used in the Bible, and means that those pure of mind and unselfish can see clearly those things which the impure of mind and selfish cannot see or understand. * * * In carrying out the idea of an illustrated book, an illustrated preface was adopted to show the rise and decline of civilization concurrent with an increase and decrease in the volume of primary money. * * * I used only sufficient of the authority to establish the principle to be taught, and that space would permit. The authority used was the report of the Monetary Commission appointed by Congress in 1875, reported in 1877 and published in 1878. The copy used had the date of its publication on the cover, and that date was given in accrediting the authority. I now read from the report the paragraph from which the abbreviated statement printed under picture in preface was made. It begins with the last two lines on page 49, and is as follows: "At the Christian era the metallic money of the Roman empire amounted to $1,800,000,000. By the end of the fifteenth century it had shrunk to less than $200,000,000. During this period a most extraordinary and baleful change took place in the condition of the world. Population dwindled, and commerce, arts, wealth, and freedom all disappeared. The people were reduced by poverty and misery to the most degraded condition of serfdom and slavery. The disintegration of society was almost complete. The conditions of life were so hard that individual selfishness was the only thing consistent with the instinct of self-preservation. All public spirit, all generous emotions, all the noble aspirations of man shriveled and disappeared as the volume of money shrunk and prices fell.

"History records no such disastrous transition as that from the Roman Empire to the dark ages. Various explanations have been given of this entire breaking down of the framework of society, but it was certainly coincident with a shrinkage in the volume of money which was also without historical parallel. The crumbling of institutions kept even step and pace with the shrinkage in the stock of money and the falling of prices. All other attendant circumstances than these last have occurred in other historical periods unaccompanied and unfollowed by any such mighty disasters."

I now pass the book to Mr. Horr. (Applause.)

Mr. Horr—Gentlemen, I desire to state that my friend has spent his whole time answering something that I never mentioned or said anything about. I merely called his attention to the use of the passage of Scripture which he has now fully explained by saying that the passage does not mean what it says. * * * My next quotation now I find still before you get to the body of the book. It is this: "All money is a medium of exchange, but primary money only is the measure of values." I would like to have him tell us in a word what he means by primary money.

Mr. Harvey—The question asked is a part of the main argument in the book, and it would be out of place for me to answer this question now, and would disturb the logical arrangement of the argument as outlined by the book.

Mr. Horr—I have not succeeded in getting very much information. If I did not misunderstand him in his previous remarks when he laid down the positions he was going to occupy he for the first time in those remarks gave his definition of primary money. I submit to the reporters that he said "primary or redemption money" in the course of the explanation. If I am right then it is redemption money which he refers to in this motto. If that is what he means then I call his attention to the fact that the statement itself is not true.

"All money is a medium of exchange." It is true that far. But primary money only or redemption money only is not always the measure of value. We sometimes live and do business for years and the measure of value that we use is not redemption money at all. I lived seventeen years from 1862 to 1879 and saw the business of this country for years all transacted in money that was not redemption money, but every dollar of it had yet to be redeemed.

The greenbacks that we did business with in '62 to '79 depreciated in value and yet we used those promises as the measure of the values of this country. The measure of value isn't so abstruse as some people think. The measure of value in every country is the term that the people, by common use, come to understand as meaning a certain definite thing. * * *

What is money? Every writer that I am familiar with admits that originally money was always some substance that possessed value; it must of necessity be so. You could not have a yard stick that did not have the length because the yard stick is to find out the length of goods. * * * When we wanted something to measure values with, that is, when the human family wanted something, they necessarily selected something that possessed some value. Almost every article in the world has, from time to time, been used as the measure of values. * * * Now gold and silver finally came to be used as money simply because they were the best adapted for money uses of any substance that the world had ever discovered. * * * Gold and silver were not the first money. Originally copper was more universally used as money than either of these metals.

Mr. Harvey—* * * I will now define "what is money." Money is a medium exchange and a measure of value. * * * To understand the importance of money we must consider the conditions that would exist if we had no money. It would then be a matter of barter and exchange—of one kind of property for another. Needing the wheat of your neighbor, you might offer him in exchange your horse, but not needing your horse he would refuse you his wheat. You would then have to continue looking for a man having wheat who wanted a horse. * * * Under these conditions, there being no money, commerce would be sluggish if it moved at all. There would be no practical method for paying labor in the thousands of industries, including type-setting. Hence there would probably be no books or newspapers, and if published, no convenient way to pay for them. We thus see the necessity for money. (Mr. Harvey enlarged upon this point to some extent, and then said): We thus have three points of difference; first, as to what money should be made of; second, the quantity; third, the laws defining its use and intended to protect it from being diverted from the functions for which it is created. Under this last head comes the question whether all money should be issued by the government, or all or parts of it should be issued by private parties and corporations. The necessity for money, the fact that it is the organic fluid of society, should make it solely a creation of the government. (Applause.) It should become a fixed principle with us that the issuing of money is an act of sovereignty. Our monetary system should be fixed upon scientific principles by which every dollar is as good as every other dollar. (Applause.)

Mr. Horr—There is quite a large portion of that essay that is true. It is true that money is the lifeblood of commerce and of business. It isn't true that money can exist only when it is created by law. Money does not have to be made a legal tender to make it good money even. * * * Legal tender is used for the sake of adjusting disputed accounts. But legal tender laws, except in times of national calamity, are never needed to enforce the circulation of good money. Now I don't dispute the fact that the government should regulate money. I am not for the purposes of this debate going to go extensively into the question of whether all currency should be supplied by the government or whether it should be done by corporations and regulated simply by government laws. Now we come to the first real question under debate.

Mr. Horr then went into the establishment of a currency system for the country after independence had been gained. He showed how the decimal system had been adopted, and told what an amount of discussion took place over the matter. His argument was to prove that "bimetallism" had been established in 1792, and that Harvey's contention was that silver monometallism was established at that time. Harvey contended that the law that established silver as the standard, and he quoted the law of 1792, Albert Gallatin, Chief Justice Chase, the Chicago Tribune, and finally Horr himself to prove his position. Horr said the intention was to establish bimetallism. The two contestants were still in the unit when the firstday's debate closed.

Author of "Coin's Financial School" Declares It the Product of Fraud and Conspiracy, Which the New York Man Controverts—Some Diversion in the Debate to Settle a Question of Correct Quotation of a Statute.

[Copyright 1895, by Azel F. Hatch.]

The second day of the silver debate opened with Mr. Horr in possession of the floor. He immediately referred to the historical statement read by Mr. Harvey the day before regarding the condition of the world from the beginning of the Christian era to 1530. He said: "Let the answer be given from good authority. Hallam's 'Middle Ages,' volume 2, page 555, in note says: 'M. Laber (Mem. de l'Acad. des Inscript., Neuvelle Serie XIV 230) calculates the power of silver under Charlemegne compared with the present day to have been 11 to 1. It fell afterwards to 8 and continued to sink during the middle ages. The average of prices during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries was 6 to 1. The price of wheat from the eighth to the fifteenth century thus doubled and the valu of silver decreased to one-half, according to Hallam and this renowned French authority. This is the exact opposite of the statement which Mr. Harvey makes without citing one leading historian or economist or statistician past or present.

"Let us turn to a third authority, one accepted by men the world over. I cite from Professor James E. Thorold Rogers, the political economist and historian. He tells us in his 'Economical Interpretation of History,' page 252, that from 1261 to 1400 the price of wheat per quarter averaged 5 shillings 10¾ pence, and in the next 140 years averaged 5 shillings 11¾ pence. The price of lead was in the first period 90 shillings 9¼ pence per fother, on an average, and in the latter 104 shilling 4¼ pence. A more marked advance occurred in the years 1500 to 1540, years uninfluenced by the silver treasures of America, which Adam Smith says did not affect prices in England before 1570. Rogers' 'Six Centuries of Work and Wages,' page 343, says: 'Now it is clear that prices were rising, though slowly and moderately, during the first forty years of the sixteenth century. In the first decade the money value of the principal necessaries of life, corn and wheat, were at the ratio generally speaking at which they stood for two centuries. In the last decade, 1530 to 1540, they had risen by 20 to 40 per cent.'

"Professor Rogers says: 'The fifteenth century and the early years of the sixteenth were the golden age of the artisan and the laborer.' In the 'Economic Interpretation of History,' page 34, Rogers says, in speaking of the status of laborers of 1495 it is 'considering the cheapness of the times exceeding liberal. At no time in English history have the earnings of laborers interpreted by their purchasing power been so considerable as those which this act acknowledges.' At that time Rogers shows this purchasing power of wages was substantially 50 per cent higher than the average for the 280 years 1261 to 1540."

Mr. Harvey—What year was that?

Mr. Horr—That was in the fifteenth century, that was the time when you say everything was going to the bow-wows.

Horr quoted other authorities in the same line of argument, and then Harvey took the floor. He said he read from the report of the Monetary Commission of 1876, including the historical quotation just referred to by Horr, "not for the purpose of entering into an argument on political economy of the years 1400 to 1500, but simply to show that all of my friends from New York and elsewhere who have accused me of forgery were wrong. Dr. Adam Smith, an able historian, whose work I put in Mr. Horr's hands yesterday, confirms all that there is in that monetary commission. Page 117 gives you the table of the rise of prices that contradicts everything that Mr. Horr has said here. The encyclopedias in your libraries will confirm that report of the monetary commission and contradict everything that Mr. Horr has said."

Remarking further that he did not expect to be diverted to answer irrelevant matter, he proceeded to recapitulate the debate of Tuesday saying: "Thus far we have considered two questions, gold and silver as the money of the constitution and the unit of value in our monetary system fixed by the framers of the constitution, and what existed as our monetary unit from 1792 to 1873. The debate is of value thus far in eliminating the doubt that has existed on these two points in the minds of the people—a doubt that has been produced by misrepresentations made by those advocating the gold standard. A reading of the debate thus far settles these two questions in favor of the book we are discussing.

"Gold and silver have been honest money for centuries, and under free coinage and equal treatment they have been practically at par with the legal ratio fixed for their coinage; under these laws both were money in their own right, each having equal purchasing power, and both adapted to use as money. Population and demand on the money market are growing every year, and there was no good reason for debasing one of these metals, discriminating against it, and destroying the demand for it that gave to it its value in the market."

Horr expressed surprise that Harvey, "after taking so long a time yesterday to prove to the people of the United States, that the year before the discovery of silver in the world silver money had become so scarce that the people were on the verge of starvation, should now accuse me of trying to divert him from the regular work before us when it is the very work he himself introduced." He then read from Prof. George Gunton, author of "Wealth and Prosperity," page 140, "that in 1496 wheat was five shillings and five pence ha'penny, and in 1514 it was five shillings and four pence. If we take the average for the decades in which each of these years occur, which is still better, we will find the result to be the same. The average price of wheat from 1441 to 1450 was five shillings and three pence and three farthings; from 1491 to 1500 it was five shillings and three farthings, and from 1511 to 1520 it was six shillings and eight pence, three farthings."

He said that this showed "that wheat had been steadily advancing instead of going down as you claim. Now I proceed. The next thing I desire to call your attention to is the matter we were talking about when we closed last night. The question whether the framers of the bill of 1792 intended to establish two measures of value." He referred to the decision of Judge Vincent on the question submitted to him some time ago to decide a bet as to which was the unit according to the law of 1792. The Judge's decision was that the unit was the dollar, to be expressed in both gold and silver.

Horr then said: "Now, I have before me a letter of Mr. Leach, who was for many years the director of the mint; a man whom I know well, and who is considered authority on all the money matters in the United States. He takes precisely the same view that Judge Vincent took. He tells us, 'If, as Mr. Turck says, the silver dollar was the unit which measured the value of the gold coins from 1792 to 1873, what becomes of the act of January 18th, 1837 (supplementary to the act of 1834, which changed the ratio in coinage to 15.98 to 1), in which act no reference whatever is made to units, but in prescribing the silver coin says: "The dollar shall be the weight of 412½ grains." Nothing about unit." And the gold coins, the weight for the eagle shall be 258 grains, and that for all sums whatever the eagle shall be legal tender of payment for ten dollars. The true reason that the gold dollar was reduced in weight in 1834 to conform to the new ratio rather than the silver dollar was that gold being undervalued by the ratio of 15 to 1, gold coins constituted no material part of our circulation.' "

"Just as I stated last night exactly. 'The bulk of the circulation in 1834 consisted of silver coins, and it was easier practically to change the gold dollar than the silver dollar. Does not Mr. Turck perceive that this claim that the silver dollar was the unit of value is inconsistent with the bimetallic system? The bimetallic system presumes a unit of account, a unit of name or number to be represented in coinage by a given quantity of silver. If either is the sole measure the system is not bimetallic.' " (Horr then quoted Knox, deputy comptroller of the currency, in the mint report for 1858-84, to the same effect, and said "this was written before this discussion on the subject of demonetizing silver at all, written by an expert upon this very subject, and again in the same report he states: 'The present laws consequently authorize both a gold dollar unit and a silver dollar unit, different from each other in intrinsic value.' That was the reason he proposed the law of 1873."

Harvey said: "Yesterday Mr. Horr admitted that the silver dollar was the unit of value, and the record of yesterday shows that. Now in view of his attempt to try to twist something back into the discussion by which we are to believe him as saying one thing yesterday and something else today, I leave him to such fate as the readers of this debate think is proper." Harvey said Horr was trying to discuss bimetallism before its time in the debate. That subject was in the second chapter of the book, and would be discussed at the proper time. He said he wanted to take up the subject of demonetization, as that was the agreed subject for the day. Horr denied this, but Harvey went on to discuss the act of 1873.

He said: "To understand how silver could be demonetized in this republic the reader should understand that we had then paper money, and no silver or gold was in circulation, except in California. The conspiracy to demonetize silver originated in London. European financiers had discovered that the demonetization of silver by England had no effect on the commercial parity of the two metals at the ratio fixed by France. It was therefore current that in order to break the commercial parity and substantially depreciate silver all of the great governments would have to be included in the legislation needed. A good deal of diplomacy, concealment and misrepresentation was practiced in securing the co-operation of politicians in Germany, France and the United States.

"Following his trip to London and Paris Mr. Sherman introduced a bill in 1868 that was on its face intended to establish the gold standard. Senator Morgan of New York jumped on it in the Finance Committee. Sherman saw that Morgan understood genuine bimetallism, and this bill died that day and was never heard of again. Senator Morgan's term of office expired in 1869, and the very next session another bill made its appearance. The bill this time went to a committee, in which the second attempt to leave out the silver dollar was again discovered, and it was inserted at the ratio of 15½ to 1. To knock this dollar out surreptitiously at the last moment then became the plan of the conspirators."

Here Horr interrupted to call Harvey's attention to page 9 of the "School," which says that about $100,000,000 in foreign silver had found its way into our circulation prior to 1860 and had been made legal tender by an act of Congress, which act was quoted. Horr said there was not an act in the currency laws of the United States that made foreign coin legal tender, and thought that "Coin" had not fully quoted the law, leaving off the very part that restricted the legal tender quality of foreign coins. The law as quoted by Horr made "all foreign coins named in the act legal tender if they come up to a certain standard, that is, if they have so much fine gold and so much fine silver in them, and if they are worth so much, then and not otherwise."

This matter came up several times during the discussion, Horr insisting on getting it right as he stated. Harvey explained by saying that all that was done was to test the foreign coins to see what they were worth in our currency. Horr then referred to the law of 1857, which required the treasury to melt up all foreign coins and recoin them all. He had another objection to the quotation in "Coin." It did not quote the whole law, leaving out gold, which was mentioned in the first section. Harvey said he had quoted the whole section, but Horr said he had not quoted the whole law. Harvey closed the subject for the session by saying that he quoted section 7 correctly, what there was in another section he did not care about.

Resuming the subject of silver demonetization Harvey said "the intention of the conspirators was to strike out secretly the single line providing for the silver dollar the size of a French five-franc piece, and with the bill thus enrolled the mints would be closed by its terms to silver, except the trade dollar. To make the bill operative in this respect when the standard silver dollar clause was erased a section was inserted in the latter part of the measure that there should be no coin struck at the mints except those hereinbefore provided for. The trade dollar clause could be easily repealed or limited under the purchase clause, and this was subsequently done."

Horr here again came in and quoted the "School" as saying that "on account of the scarcity of silver both Jefferson and Jackson recommended that dimes, quarters and halves would serve the people better than dollars until more silver bullion could be obtained. This was the reason why only about eight millions of the eight hundred and five millions of silver was coined into dollars."

This was on page 10 of the "School." Then Horr quoted from page 10 "the table from Mulhall, the London statistician, in which you show silver was not scarce at that time. You show it was with one exception the most plentiful that it had been at any one time during the experience of the government." Horr proceeded to say that if Harvey had turned to the mint reports for 1893, page 88, he would have found that the director of the mint says: "No issue of silver dollars was made from the mint from 1805 to 1836, the coinage having been suspended by the direction of President Jefferson, owing to the fact—now mark—'that their bullion value being greater than their face value they were purchased for export.' "

In explaining his statement that silver was scarce when the coinage of the dollar was suspended, Harvey said that it was scarce in the United States, although abundant in the world. He then returned to silver demonetization in 1873, but gave Horr the floor. In taking up the subject Horr said he proposed to show "that no law has ever been passed by the American Congress which was freer from taint, which was more carefully examined, which was more completely and fully understood than the law of 1873. The statement which he read to you that the scheme was concocted in London is a simple assertion upon which he cannot produce one scintilla of respectable truth, not one word."

"The law of 1873 had its origin, as all such laws have, in the brains of experts. The question of coinage, mintage, is a most intricate one; a complicated one, and usually it has been decided by a few men who have studied the problem laboriously. All the men who ever assumed to be able to discuss the matter intelligently (in the early days of the century) could be counted on the fingers of my two hands. At their head stood Hamilton, the Morrisses, Jefferson and Gallatin. And so complicated was the question that no two of those patriots agreed about any one feature of the measure when they first commenced discussing it. In 1834 the law as to mintage was changed in a material manner for the first time; it was done by decreasing the amount of gold in the gold dollar. It was done because experience showed those people that the cheap dollar, which was silver, had driven the gold currency out of the United States.

"Several members of that Congress insisted that if the ratio was made 16 to 1 silver would leave the country and that we would be doing business very soon upon a gold basis and with gold currency only. But it was done, and, as those men predicted, silver ceased to be the measure of values in the United States. I don't say, Mr. Harvy, 'ceased to be the legal measure.' Why? Simply because they could sell the silver dollar and get more gold dollars for a quantity of gold dollars than the face of the silver dollars called for. They changed the ratio then, and it was not changed again until perhaps 1853, when they passed a law providing for the subsidiary coinage of silver.

This was done, Horr said, to prevent people from melting the subsisting coin and selling it as bullion, thus getting more for it than could be obtained for it as coin, as it was as good in weight and fineness as the silver dollar. To keep subsidiary coinage incirculation Congress residiary coinage in circulation Congress re-

Harvey here took up the talk and said, referring to Horr's statement that here was no proof of the alleged demonetization conspiracy, that he once heard a lawyer say that to "detect the criminal, look for the man that is benefited by the crime." England first demonetized silver. "London bankers initiated the Paris conference of 1867, at which Mr. John Sherman was present, therefore I have the right to say the conspiracy originated in London."

Referring to Horr's statement that the science of money was hard to understand, Harvey said that was the argument of the selfish money lender. He said: "You who study chemistry and can understand the most difficult problems of science—chemistry and other sciences that would make a banker's head dizzy to contemplate, you, we are told, cannot understand the simple proposition of money, that which you come into the use of every day." He quoted one member of Congress in 1873 as saying of the demonetization act that "the introduction of this bill at the present time either means a trick or is a farce worthy of being caricatured by Thomas Nast."

This closed the debate, and half an hour or so was spent in replying to questions from the audience.

Among those asked was one by B. Gunn of Kansas City, whether, during the period from the time Jefferson closed the mints to the coinage of the silver dollar in1840—34 years—there was free and unlimited coinage of silver.

Harvey said: "Mr. Jeffferson did not close the mints, that could only be done by an act of Congress. Mr. Jefferson directed the mint directors to coin the silver that came, at the option of the people, in fifty-cent pieces and less. You need not coin a single unit, and yet by law the 371¼ grains of silver could be the unit of value regulating all other coins, all compared to it in legal and commercial ratio. The act 1873 made the gold dollar the unit, and now, by the act of September 15, 1889, it is unlawful to coin a gold dollar. So that we now have a unit of 23 2-10 grains of gold, and Congress has said that the mints shall not coin any of them."

A question by James Ballinger was: "Why have I had so little silver or gold since the passage of the act of 1873?" It was to both Horr and Harvey. Horr said he couldn't tell unless he was informed how Bollinger had been behaving since that time. Harvey said: "Because we have been on a gold standard."

Mr. Mntsmyer of Shoals, Ind., asked if the debtor previous to 1873 had not the right to pay his debts in the cheaper metal. The reply was from Horr that it was perfectly proper and natural to so pay.

THIRD DAY'S TALK.

Horr and Harvey Discuss the Demonetization Act.

WAS IT PASSED IN CONSPIRACY?

Extracts from the Speeches Made During Its Long Consideration by Congress—The Base of the Claim of Collusion and Fraud—Harvey Enlarges on Legislative Corruption and Charges That the Bill Passed Was Mutilated Later.

[Copyright, 1895, by Azel F. Hatch.]

Mr. Horr had the floor again at the beginning of the third day's debate on the silver question, and began the day's talk with a personal explanation. He said: "Previous to entering upon a discussion of the law of 1873 I desire to state something as to my personal relations in this debate, because my opponent yesterday stated 'Mr. Horr has only taught in this debate a proposition that is in the interest of every selfish money-lender in the world to advocate, and he is here advocating it.' That is a part and parcel of the method usually adopted by the advocate of free silver for the purpose of creating a prejudice against every person who has honest convictions on the other side of this question. I say to my opponent now I am not a money-lender, I have not a dollar's interest in any banking institution or American corporation, or any other corporations on the face of the earth. I have spent my entire life in working for a living; all the early part of that life was spent in hard work on a small farm; I commenced working for myself at $10 a month; there is hardly any kind of hard manual labor in which I have not at some time in my life engaged, consequently my sympathies are with people who live by toil.

"I can meet a dude on the street and pass him by without any peculiar sensation. I never meet a man digging in a trench but what I feel like taking off my hat and saluting him, because I once dug ditches for a living. I can pass by a railroad president, the superintendent of Pullman cars, without any emotion, but I never meet a brakeman or a baggageman without feeling kindly toward him, because for months I was brakeman on a freight train night and day, and my promotion to baggagemaster was one of the proudest moments of my life. From my boyhood up I have lived, or tried to, on what I earned, and consequently I come into this debate for the purpose of defending the interests, as my friend will learn before I finish it, of the men who live by honest toil. I admit that at present I am employed by a large newspaper corporation of the United States; if it will do him any good I will admit that they pay me every day for my work more than I used to get for two months' hard labor. Am I to blame for that? My policy has always been: 'Take any job you can get so as to get an honest living, and never refuse to take a better one whenever the chance is offered you.' Is that wrong? I have another motto, too, that whenever I am laboring for a person or corporation I am a good deal more anxious to earn all or more than I get than I am to be worrying round about crowding up my wages. My experience has been that if I do good work they will recognize my merits and pay me for it, and that is all I have any right to ask for in this world."

Proceeding and concluding Horr said he had no prejudices against men who had been more fortunate than he; a man did not necessarily become a scoundrel because he saved part of his earnings; he did not think it anything against a man even if he became a stockholder in a national bank. A suggestion that Harvey's father was such a stockholder brought from Harvey an emphatic denial, with the admission that it would not have hurt him if he had been. Horr closed by saying that those who accumulate money and build up great industries are a blessing to the country, and he was just as zealous to prevent financial disaster to those as to see that wages are not cut in two by a debased dollar.

Harvey in reply said his remarks of the day before quoted by Horr had no personal application at all. A man could advocate a pernicious principle without himself being necessarily a bad man. Said Harvey, continuing: "This great question is not going to be decided for the American people by any advocate parading himself before them as having been a horny fisted working man at one time in his life. I do not object to Mr. Horr giving the evolution of his life. I do think it was a little unfair to have omitted that in that evolution he finally became a bank president; that statement should have gone with the balance in the play to popular favor. I do not deny that Mr. Horr and numerous selfish bank presidents have at one time been tillers of the soil.

"Mr. Horr and numerous employes of newspaper corporations and other corporations are in part, many of them, representing their honest convictions, and I accord that to the honorable gentleman from New York. Many of them never stop to analyze the question, the great principle that must make or unmake the republic in which they live. It is only a question of salary that they consider." Harvey then said the value of the debate of the day previous was that it had demonstrated the statement that there were only $8,000,000 in silver coined up to 1873 to be false, and that the real quantity was $143,000,000.

Horr, replying to Harvey's criticism that he had not included having been a bank president, said it was not omitted because he was ashamed of it. He had been a bank president; the bank had gone down in the crash of 1873, and his competency went with it. After a few more words regarding his present history he took up the demonetization act of 1873, saying: "That bill first originated a little before the year 1870. It was drafted after consulting a large number of experts. In the first day of our discussion Brother Harvey went back on his baby theory, and told us that babes did not mean babes at all, that it meant pure and undefiled people, but now he returns to his old motto and claims that money really is so simple a thing that babes can understand it, or that people who have not studied it can learn all about it; and he is facetious because I have stated that the question has given me the headache. I did state that. But, mark you, Brother Harvey, it was the study of the question that made my head ache, not writing such stuff as is in this book. That would not give any man the headache.

"Now, this bill was prepared after submitting the question to a large number of experts all over the United States. We had never had a revision of the mint laws for a great number of years, and the men in charge of the mint thought that the time had come when something should be done. Among the men who were consulted upon the question were Mr. Boutwell, the secretary of the treasury; Mr. Knox, deputy controller of the currency; Mr. Linderman, the director of the mint; Mr. Parsons, superintendent of the mint at Philadelphia. The plan was submitted to these gentlemen and a large number of others for the establishment of a new system of mintage, and yet the free silver papers of this country intimate that this law must have been wicked, because it was tacked on to the revision of the mint laws. Why, that is where it belonged. That was the place to find it.

"Now, was there anything secret about it? I deny that it had its origination in England, or London, or anywhere except in the brains of the people who were looking after the coinage interests of the United States. And I defy Mr. Harvey—not by assertion—to prove one single item that had any reference to the British people controlling or directing this matter. After a correspondence with a large number of these experts upon mints and coinage, the bill was framed, and with the correspondence was submitted to congress in the most complete form and with an elaborate report from Mr. Knox, which explained all its provisions. Every step taken in the incipiency of this measure was as open as the light.

"I am now reading from my own articles and consequently I use them without quotations. Thousands of copies of the bill were sent broadcast to all parts of the country. The Banker's Magazine in its number of July, 1870, printed this report of Mr. Knox and commented on the same. The bill prepared by Mr. Knox was endorsed by Secretary Boutwell, of the treasury, and transmitted to the senate on April 25, 1870. The bill as it was at that time drafted dropped the dollar silver coin of the United States and changed the unit of value. That was in the original bill as it was sent to the senate with a letter from the secretary. Now, nobody tried to cover up that fact. In this report of Mr. Knox were found all the letters of these different experts to whom had been sent a draft of the bill and who had been asked for their opinion upon it. Those letters were all printed by order of the senate in connection with the carefully prepared report of Mr. Knox."

Harvey here asked if Horr had the bill and letters with him. Horr thought he had them in the city and would produce them if he did have them, and continued as follows: "Mr. Patterson wrote to Mr. Knox and was printed in the public documents—for I will say to this house that every single document I have referred to I copied from the books of the government in the city of Washington myself, individually, so I know what I am talking about. Mr. Patterson said: 'The silver dollar, half, dime, and three-cent piece are dispensed with by this amendment. Gold becomes the standard of money, of which the gold dollar is the unit. Silver is subsidiary, embracing coins from the dime to the half-dollar.' Can anything be more plain than that? Was there any covering up of anything in that letter?"

In reply Harvey proceeded: "In the interrupted presentation of demonetization I had called the attention of the people to the condition, morally, of congress at the time of the passage of the act. I had referred to impeachment charges against Vice President Colfax in 1873 for fraud in connection with legislation; to the resignation of Secretary of War Belknap for bribery. I now proceed, after first stating for Mr. Horr's information that Del Mar, the English historian, says that the act of 1816, demonetizing silver in England, had a clause in it that it might be reinstated by the king; that that clause giving a right to reinstatement was repealed in 1871, and that the act in which it was repealed was within two weeks in the hands of Mr. Knox, the comptroller of the United States treasury, and was in part the basis of the act in this country."

Harvey repeated that there was an era of corruption in congress at that time. "Clinton Colgate confessed before the ways and means committee of 1873 to the use of money to influence the incorporation of special features in the internal revenue bill, testifying, among other things, that Charles Sherman, of Ohio, a brother of Senator Sherman, had been paid $10,000 by the New York Stock Exchange in connection with the revenue bill. The officials of the stock exchange were subpoenaed, and the facts developed that while the money had not been paid, Judge Sherman had rendered a bill to the exchange for his services, and, as he claimed, for securing the services of his brother, Senator Sherman, to put the bill through. Colgate, when he testified, knew of the transaction and supposed the bill had been paid. As Judge Sherman was then a United States district judge the ways and means committee turned the whole matter over to the judiciary committee, directing it to take action looking to his impeachment."

He here read a letter from Judge Sherman to a member of the stock exchange, in which the judge claims to have been largely instrumental in securing the repeal of certain taxes on bankers and brokers, including the stamp tax. The judge incloses a letter received from the father of the man he was writing to (said father having died just before the judge's letter was written), in which the judge was asked to work for the legislation desired and a consideration promised. The judge tells his correspondent that he went to work in consideration of what was said in his correspondent's father's letter, and "had interviews with Mr. Boutwell, with John Sherman, chairman of the senate finance committee, with General Garfield, and other prominent members of congress, and the result was that it became the policy of the administration to repeal not only the tax in question, but the stamp and other obnoxious taxes."

Harvey concluded with the words: "It would readily exhaust the words of this debate to go into all the investigations of that notorious congress."

Horr rejoined as follows: "The attempt of Mr. Harvey to smirch the congress of the United States and make the people of this country believe that the people who acted as members of congress in this country as a rule are corrupt and have been subject to purchase and sale, can be characterized only as infamous. There sit before me several members of congress who served with me in several congresses, and I appeal to each and every one of them if during their entire service they ever saw or mistrusted that money was being used to purchase members of congress. When men start out with the proposition that in order to prove their case they must also prove that the majority of the best men of this country are thieves and scoundrels, they had better stop before they begin.

"I admit that Judge Sherman was guilty of a crime. That was never in any way connected with his brother, John Sherman, and you know it. They exonerated him."

Harvey asked: "Did they impeach Judge Sherman?"

Horr replied: "Judge Sherman resigned immediately; they drove him from the bench."

"But what has that to do with the question whether Mr. Knox openly and squarely presented this bill to congress? Mr. Knox said himself: 'The coinage of the silver dollar piece, the history of which is here given, is discontinued in the proposed bill. It is by law the dollar unit'—you read that yesterday—'and assuming the value of gold to be 15½ times that of silver, being about the mean ratio for the last six years, it is worth in gold a premium of about 3 per cent, its value being $1.0312 and intrinsically more than 7 per cent premium to our other silver coin, its value thus being $1.0743. The present laws consequently authorize a gold dollar unit and a silver dollar unit, differing from each other in intrinsic value. The present gold dollar piece is made the dollar unit in the proposed bill and the silver dollar piece is discontinued.'

A voice in the audience: "When was that written?"

Horr: "Just before it was sent to congress in 1870. It was a part of the report that Secretary Boutwell sent to the senate in the spring of 1870; it accompanied the bill and was printed in the public documents as being an explanation of the bill by order of the senate. Is there anything hidden in those sentences?"

Horr then gave Sherman's statement in the senate in August, 1893, showing the course of the bill in that body, the reports thereon, the fact that six senators from the Pacific coast made no objections to the bill, the frequency with which it was printed, etc. Horr then followed the bill into the house, after being passed by the senate by a yea and nay vote, Senator Stewart, of Nevada, voting for it. It reached the house Jan. 13, 1871, and was printed on motion of William D. Kelly, chairman of the house coinage committee; a report in the meantime of a substitute was made, but that congress expired before final action on the bill. At the extra session in 1871 it was introduced again, and again no action was taken. Kelly introduced it.

Harvey then took the floor again and referred to the charge against George A. Bassett, clerk of the ways and means committee in 1873, of having demanded $250 per month from New York bankers and brokers to assist them in repealing the tax on borrowed capital, and quoted a Chicago Tribune Washington correspondent as follows: "Turkish corruption under the pashas and beys, or Russian official rottenness, could scarcely be worse than it is here." He referred also to the "salary list" bill, and said it was at this congress that silver was demonetized. Then he said that the bill as passed was not the bill supposed to have been passed. He quoted sections 15 and 21 of the bill with the words in brackets, the omission of which demonetized silver, as he claimed.

He said: "As the bill passed both houses the unit was on gold, and free and unlimited coinage of both metals was provided for. But as enrolled the mints were closed to free and unlimited coinage of silver, except as to the trade dollar, afterward abolished. The standard silver dollar was fraudulently omitted after the bill had passed both houses."

Horr said the statement was preposterous. He quoted the words of Kelly, of Pennsylvania, in 1872: "We proceeded with great deliberation to go over the bill, not only by sections, but line by line, and word by word." Hooper was also quoted, April 9, 1872, that section 16 re-enacted "the previous existing by-laws, except in relation to the silver dollar, which is reduced in weight from 418½ grains to 384 grains, thus making it a subsidiary coin."

Replying Harvey quoted from Kelly, May 10, 1879: "It (the demonetization bill) was passed without allusion in debate to the question of the retention or abandonment of the standard silver dollar."

Horr then quoted what Kelly said in the running debate in the house (not "by leave"), as follows: "All experience has shown that you must have one standard coin, which shall be a legal tender for all others. * * * I again call the attention of the house to the fact that the gentlemen who oppose this bill insist upon maintaining a silver dollar worth 3½ cents more than the gold dollar and 7 cents more than two silver half-dollars, and that so long as those provisions remain you cannot keep silver coin in the country."

The above was said by Kelly prior to the passage of the bill. After another dissertation by Harvey on the wickedness of humanity, Horr followed the demonetization bill back to the senate and to its final passage, after being before congress for three years. Harvey then quoted Kelly as saying during the debate on the bill that it made no change in the existing value of coins. Harvey said: "While the record disclosed the intention to change the unit to gold, it nowhere revealed the intention to close the mints to silver." He further said: "The clause providing for the 384 grain dollar, with the right to unlimited free coinage, was surreptitiously erased from the bill in 1873 before it was enrolled."

Horr then quoted Hooper as saying during the debate: "This bill provides for the making of changes in the legal tender coin of the country, and for substituting a legal tender of only one metal; instead, as heretofore, of two."

Horr proceeded: "I submit to this audience there is right there in that speech positive proof that that bill was well understood by the people who were legislating upon it. Mr. Potter opposed the bill, but he was frank enough to state that one provision in the bill met with his hearty approval, and that was the very provision we are debating here today. No better proof can possibly be given that that bill was, like all the bills passed in that congress, examined carefully, conscientiously."

This ended the debate for the day, and Judge Miller announced that questions from the audience would be now received. Charles Coffin, of Arkansas, was the first questioner. He asked Horr why he opposed the American people acting on the free silver question. Horr replied that he had never on the face of the earth opposed such action.

J. C. Sibley, of Pennsylvania, asked why, if the silver dollar was at 3 per cent premium in 1873 gold monometallists claimed that the silver dollar was demonetized because silver was depreciating in value. Horr replied that the gold men never claimed anything of the kind. No nation that had demonetized silver gave that as a reason.

In reply to another question Horr said it was true that Jefferson said to congress when he discontinued the coinage of the silver dollar a report of the director of the mint, in which the reason assigned for discontinuing the coinage was the scarcity of small change. Another reason in the report was "to prevent the exportation of the specie of the United States to foreign countries."

On the request of Mr. Horr the further hearing of the debate was adjourned to 1 o'clock Saturday.

THE developments in the H. H. Holmes case in Chicago show that villain to be a fiend incarnate. It would be difficult for human ingenuity to devise a punishment adequate for such a blood thirsty butcher.

THE Democratic administration still pursues the old soldier with bitter enmity. Almost every day we see those who have had notice, "your pension will be cut down one half unless you can prove you are dead," or words to that effect.

GRAND FORKS people are agitating a street fair to take the place of the annual state fair this fall. They are taking hold of it with their accustomed energy which already insures its success. To make any scheme work in Grand Forks, all you have to do is to convince the people that it will benefit the town and they will have it no matter what it costs.

IN A recent interview Ex-President Benj. Harrison is made to say that he thinks his nomination would not be for the best interests of the Republican party. He says further that the Republican party is about to come into power for a long time—that the people are fully awake to the requirements of the hour and are only awaiting the opportunity to place the Republican party in power.

WASHINGTON LETTE .

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2, 1895,

"The Cleveland confidence game" is the name that has been given to the attempt of the cuckoos to make the Democrats believe that Mr. Cleveland doesn't wish to be again nominated for president, but merely to have the honor of declining the nomination after it has been tendered by the Democratic national convention. Inasmuch as the Democratic administration and congress buncoed the voters of the country it would be only a case of poetic justice for Mr. Cleveland and the cuckoos to bunco the Democratic party. If the Democratic convention falls into the trap set for it and nominates Mr. Cleveland with the expectation that he will decline, it will be the most disappointed body ever seen, as it is just as certain as any future event can be that if nominated Mr. Cleveland will accept. In view of the generally recognized fact that the Democratic nomination next year will be a very empty honor, it is difficult to understand the efforts that Mr. Cleveland and his cuckoos are making to get it. These efforts can only be accounted for by the inordinate egotism of Mr. Cleveland which causes him to believe, improbable as it appears to everybody else, that he could be elected again.

It has been known for quite a while in administration circles that, failing to get the nomination himself, Mr. Cleveland desired to throw the entire administration influence to Secretary Carlisle. It has now leaked out that there is a revolt against this program from an unexpected direction. Mr. Cleveland's man, Dan Lamont, heads the revolt. Dan is grateful to Mr. Cleveland for the political favors he has received from him, and, although he doesn't like the idea of a third term for anybody, he is willing to help Mr. C. try to get another nomination, but he owes nothing to Secretary Carlisle, and he declines to have his allegiance transferred to him when Mr. C. sees he has no show. There is another man who has done financially for Dan Lamont what Mr. Cleveland has done politically for him. That man is ex-Secretary Whitney, and Dan proposes to show his gratitude by making Mr. Whitney his second choice, instead of Secretary Carlisle. Mr. Cleveland has only one objection to Whitney, but that is a serious one. He is the only man in either of his cabinets that he failed to completely dominate.

The force of example is one of the strongest known to man. Mr. Cleveland's use of a government light house tender for his hunting and fishing trips was the natural forerunner of Secretary Carlisle's intended use of a government light house tender to make a tour of the great lakes. Not only will the secretary and his wife be carried on this junket at public expense, but his son and his wife will go along, and others may be added. The junket is to last five or six weeks, and if Uncle Sam wasn't to foot the bills it would be quite costly for the two Carlisle families. Still, you occasionally find a Democrat willing to quote "public office is a public trust" at you, in the face of the private snap the members of the present administration have made of it.

Nothing more galling to the Cleveland Democrats has occurred for a long time than Senator Gorman's new clinch on the control of the Maryland Democratic organization, and the astute Gorman rubbed it in on them by having his convention endorse the "able and patriotic administration of President Cleveland" and the tariff law that President Cleveland refused to sign. Mr. Gorman's resolution declared the tariff to be the best we have had for thirty-five years, which isn't strange when it is remembered that Mr. Gorman was one of the principal authors of the Senate tariff bill, which took the place of the Wilson bill and became a law without the president's signature. Gorman may not capture the Democratic presidential nomination next year for himself, but it is not unlikely that the man who does must first dicker with him, and he will be more exacting than he was when he allowed Mr. Cleveland to be nominated in '92.

Fear may do for the sugar planters what right and justice would not do. Finding that Comptroller Bowler was determined, regardless of the arguments which will be presented to him next week, to refuse payment of the money appropriated by congress for sugar bounties, on the ground that the original sugar bounty law was unconstitutional, the Louisiana congressional delegation put a new phase on the matter by informing members of the cabinet that the withholding of this money will certainly put Louisiana permanently in the Republican column. Word has been sent to Mr. Cleveland and Bowler's orders may be changed before his decision is made.

Public Spirited Citizens

Should take a delight in adding anything to our town or county in the educational line which is valuable, unique and is not found in other communities. Our townsman, C. E. Misner, tells us he has an opportunity to place in our city a fine three and a half inch astronomical telescope, which will be for the educational benefit of our citizens. There is not as fine a telescope anywhere in our state, except at Carlton college, Northfield, where they have a fine astronomical observatory. Mr. Misner says that Prof. Hicks' paper, Word and Works, of St. Louis, offers him this fine instrument if he will get up a club of 800 subscribers to the paper. He is willing to put in a considerable part of his time and make a great effort to secure this fine telescope. If our citizens give him proper support it will not be a very hard matter to secure it. Word and Works is a fine monthly magazine and is well worth $1 a year, the subscription price. Mr. Misner will take subscriptions to this paper and every subscriber will have the privilege of looking through the fine telescope, which will be put up at Lynne's photograph gallery, free of charge. You get your money's worth if you do not look through the telescope, for Word and Works is a splendid family monthly and cheap at $1.00, but you have the satisfaction of knowing also that you have contributed toward the addition to our county of a fine instrument, not to be equaled by anything in northwestern Minnesota. Mr. Misner, or his agent, will be around to see the people of the county within the next six weeks and we hope he will receive encouragement wherever he goes. [15-tf]

New York Fashion Letter.

Madame LaMode displays a tendency to revive the fashions of Louis XVI. These fancies appear in the rendigote gowns with the fronts cut away to show a vest of flowered fabric. Old fashioned fichus and wide brimmed hats complete the gowns that are copied from this epoch. All varieties of Louis XVI coats appear, made of satin, silk, flowered velvet and lace. Costumes of white alpaca will be much worn during mid-summer at the sea-shore and mountains. Evening silks with pompadour colors are exceedingly popular, and for afternoon gowns figured lawns and India mull, trimmed with insertions of yellow lace are decorated with chiffon boas and fancy girdles of ribbon and flowers. Wash costumes this season are more in vogue than ever. Beautiful morning dresses are made of French gingham, fancy linen duck and pique. The large collar over the shoulder is seen everywhere. It constitutes the regular collar of the cotton tailor gown and outing dresses. It decorates in an adjustable form fancy silk bodices and is seen also outside of heavy cloth jackets. Its material is varied, ranging from tulle and lace to grass cloth, duck, silk and velvet. Many of the new skirts are box-pleated and all the sleeves voluminous.

Yellow lace is used upon every costume of whatever style or color. It trims the yoke, sleeves, collar, fichu and in some cases the skirt. Of all the fashion magazines at hand we find the popular McDowell Journals most replete in practical information.

"La Mode de Paris" and "Paris Album of Fashion" cost $3.50 each per year's subscription or 35 cents a copy. The "French Dressmaker" is $3.00 per annum or 30 cents a copy, and "Lamode" $1.50 a year or 15 cents a copy. If you are unable to procure either of these journals from your newsdealer do not take any substitute but apply by mail to Messrs. A. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th street, New York.

J. L. Berg, of the Deering Harvester Co., was here last Wednesday, repairing machines.

D. S. Horwitz, of Grand Forks, was over last Wednesday trying to supply the wants of the town in the musical line.

Alfred Campion and Miss Elsie Campion, of Angus, came down Wednesday evening to attend the social.

Mrs. G. Ulsedinger and son Nick, made a business trip to Crookston last Thursday.

Theodore Goossen has his right hand bandaged as the result of a severe cut received while repairing a mower knife.

The recent elevator fire at Buffington has proved a benefit rather than a disaster, at least to the farmers in the vicinity. Besides the new elevator which is in every way superior to the old one, Agent E. A. Fisk has erected a dwelling and store building and will carry a small line of general merchandise. The farmers are also working for the establishment of a postoffice at that point,

John Goosen came in last Thursday to increase his order for twine. He cut twelve acres of barley the preceding day and used sixty-five pounds of twine.

The painters are at work on the M. & N. elevator at this place, trying their best to make the structure look like new. The building was thoroughly overhauled last season and is now in pretty good condition, both outside and inside.

It Sets people Chewing—Lorillard's Climax Plug.

It is prepared with the utmost care and skill from the choicest leaf grown; possessing a flavor and substance that makes it dear to the heart of every tobacco chewer. It is made by the oldest tobacco manufacturers in America, and the largest in the world, and cannot be excelled. Try it. You'll agree with the many thousand discriminating chewers who use it exclusively, and pronounce it much the best. It's Lorillard's.

M. P. Losey is confined to his bed by illness.

Frank Taylor and family and partners have been camped south of town with a large herd of trading stock, during the past week.

H. E. Misner & Co. have improved the looks of their storeroom by placing in a new oil-finish oak counter; they have also replaced their old weighing apparatus by a new computing scale and will endeavor to give their customers more accurate weights than ever.

Sam Marin, of Thief River Falls, is visiting with Hugh Douglas and family.

Miss Theodorf, of St. Vincent, is visiting with her sister, Mrs. John Hansons.

The new organ for the church was received Monday. It is one of the latest patterns of chapel organs and corresponds nicely with the pretty interior of the church.

THE SENTENCE.

A saucy tease is Metabel,
A roguish, laughing, chaffing tease,
But what she says I shall not tell,
And what she does you may as well
Be sure is seldom done to please.

Yet when I threaten Metabel
With penalties severe and high
Her sunny smiles my frowns dispel,
Her wheedling ways my anger quell;
She seems the judge, the culprit I.

No mercy showeth Metabel,
Yet sweet the fate her word imparts.
Last night she sentenced me to dwell
A captive in the deepest cell
Forever of her heart of hearts.

NICKEL STEEL.

Its Extended Use Will Prove a Source of Profit to Canada.

"When nickel steel comes into general use for the construction of vessels, as it undoubtedly will," said a Canadian gentleman at the Great Northern the other day, "Canada will, in a sense, control the shipbuilding industry, because, so far as is at present known, there is [illegible] of the Dominion [illegible] bearing pyrites practically [illegible]. That whole [illegible] reaching from [illegible] dor is rich [illegible] hundreds of [illegible] fy for an [illegible] the demand [illegible].

"How will this [illegible] ing industry? Why [illegible] It has been demonstrated [illegible] at your proving grounds [illegible] and elsewhere that steel mixed with, say, 5 per cent of nickel is double the strength of ordinary steel. In the construction of men-of-war the advantage is obvious, and in building merchant vessels the benefit to be derived from the use of nickel steel is equally plain, as it will enable them to be built much lighter than they are now, which means less coal and less engine power with an equal amount of security and equal amount of speed. It will only be a few years when a wooden vessel in the port of Chicago will be something of a novelty and the new vessels will before very long, for the reasons indicated, be made of nickel steel, and this will be the only metal in demand for the purpose at your great shipbuilding yards in Cleveland, Detroit, South Chicago and other points.

"Another advantage which steel having nickel in its composition possesses over ordinary steel is that it will not corrode and that barnacles cannot get a foothold on it, so that nickel steel ships' bottom will never require to be scraped." —Chicago Times-Herald.

A New Race of Roses Perpetual.

The Gardeners' Chronicle calls attention to a new race of roses which has been introduced by some Paris growers. They belong to the Polyantha group—that is to say, they bear their flowers in trusses. The new roses have the advantage over the others of being "perpetual," and consequently they flower continuously all through the summer. This advantage they owe to their origin, a natural cross (croisement naturel), observed in the Lyons gardens, between the flowers of the first specimens of Polyantha introduced from Japan and some hybrid perpetual roses. By repeated and careful selections, a new race of roses has been produced which, like annuals, germinate, flower and produce seeds in less than a year. The term "dwarf" is justified by the height, which in adult plants is only about 20 inches. The flowers are single, semidouble or double, in almost equal proportion, and present almost all the variations of color observed in cultivated roses. Flowering commences in the first year, and even a few months after sowing. This precocity is one of the most remarkable and interesting features of this new type.—Westminster Gazette.

The Atchafalaya river, in Louisiana, was named by the Choctaws. The word means "long river."

Have Flowers Any Rights?

This question is discussed both in prose and poetry in Will Carleton's Newspaper-Magazine, Every Where, for August. The great roadway of the lakes to the ocean, the lordly St. Larence, river is treated, both by poet and artist. Dozens of other features peculiar to this most original of papers, are at their best in the current number. Fifty cents a year; ten cents for sample copies and agents' outfit. Address:

The August number of the Northwest Magazine, is as usual, of especial interest to Northwestern readers. A very entertaining contribution is written and illustrated by Geo. Cady Johnson and is descriptive of Lake Cushman, Wash. "A Pasco Belle," by Jennie Louise Harris is a western story that possesses unusual literary and dramatic merit. Minnesota as an Educational Center," by Lucius R. Root, reflects credit upon the entire Northwest. Dr. A. H. Hersey continues his graphic descriptions of Montana mines, towns and counties. Victor Herbert Smalley talks of his "Life as a Cadet," etc., etc. There is the usual amount of interesting miscellany, tales of Western life, bits of science, humor and wit.

Paper Trust Assured.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug 6.—S. T. Ward, the local agent for a number of out of town paper mills, said that a paper trust was an assured thing. The trust, he said, would have a capital stock of $35,000,000, and is intended to have a monopoly of the industry. He said that a slightly increased price is already demanded.

Both Sides Satisfied.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 5.—Both miners and operators of this district think they have the best end of the compromise. The operators are able to fulfill their contracts and the miners are jubilant at the prospect of uniform rates throughout the district after Oct. 1.

Mutinous Sailors to Hang.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 6.—Hans Hanson was sentenced in the United States court to be hanged on Oct. 18 for the murder of Maurice Fitzgerald, mate of the bark Hesperia. Hanson and Thomas St. Clair killed the mate as the first step in a mutiny. St. Clair will die on the same day as his companion in crime.

The frequency of storms in Nebraska is due to the fact that not only do many originate there, but the storms of Dakota move southeast, and those of Kansas and Texas northeast, generally passing through Nebraska on their easterly course.

A Rope Barometer.

In the office of the Des Moines Register is the best barometer in the state. It consists of an ordinary rope attached to the carrier box between the first and fourth floors, making it nearly 60 feet long. This rope is wonderfully sensitive to changes in the atmosphere. At least 24 hours before the rain it begins to tighten by the absorption of moisture. Its predictions nearly always come true.

Easy to Take
And Perfect in Their Action,
AYER'S PILLS
Never fail to relieve Dyspepsia, Constipation, and Headache.

"I have proved the value of Ayer's Pills in relieving dyspepsia and headache, with which complaints I was so long troubled that neither the doctor nor myself supposed I should ever be well again. Through the use of the above medicine I am better than I have been for years."—A. GASKILL, Versailles, Ill.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for 15 years as a cathartic in liver complaint, and always with extremely beneficial effect, never having had need of other medicine. I also give Ayer's Pills to my children, when they require an aperient, and the result is always most satisfactory."—A. A. EATON, Centre Conway, N.H.

"Having been severely afflicted with costiveness, I was induced to try Ayer's Pills. Their use has effected a complete cure, and I can confidently recommend them to all similarly afflicted."—C. A. WHITMAN, Nipomo, Cal.

Those——Pimples

Are tell-tale symptoms that your blood is not right—full of impurities, causing a sluggish and unsightly complexion. A few bottles of S. S. S. will remove all foreign and impure matter, cleanse the blood thoroughly, and give a clear and rosy complexion. It is most effectual, and entirely harmless.

Chas. Heaton, 73 Laurel Street, Phila., says: "I have had for years a humor in my blood which made me dread to shave, as small boils or pimples would be cut, thus causing shaving to be a great annoyance. After taking three bottles S.S.S. my face is all clear and smooth as it should be—appetite splendid, sleep well and feel like running a foot race all for the use of S.S.S.

Everywhere We Go

We find some one who has been cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, people on all hands are praising this great medicine for what it has done for them and their friends. Taken in time Hood's Sarsaparilla prevents serious illness by keeping the blood pure and all the organs in a healthy condition. It is the great blood purifier.

Hood's Pills become the favorite cathartic with every one who tries them. 25c. per box.

D. S. Horwitz was over from Grand Forks, last week, to take in the opening event at Hotel Crookston and, incidentally, to talk pianos and organs.

Bert Wells was over from Grand Forks last week to attend the Crookston hotel opening. Bert says "Crookston now has a first-class hotel in every particular."

The game between the Crookston nine and the Blacks of Minneapolis played on Saturday afternoon was very closely contested. Crookston beat by a score of 15 to 16.

The Crookston club went up to Fosston on Thursday and crossed bats on the diamond with the White Earth Indian club. They showed poor Lo how to play good ball.

The Minneapolis Blacks tackled our base ball club on the diamond on Friday afternoon of last week and our boys mopped the earth with them. Hardly left a grease spot.

Walter Latta commenced cutting wheat on the Walsh place on Friday of last week—the first wheat to be cut in Polk county this year so far as we have heard—and that was not any too ripe.

The warm weather of last week had a tendency to ripen up the wheat rapidly and many reapers will take the field this week. August will probably see most of the grain in stack—what is not threshed.

J. J. Dow and wife, of the Hotel Dakotah, Grand Forks, came over to attend the opening exercises of the Hotel Crookston. Mr. Dow brought along a number of his dining room girls to assist in waiting upon the table.

"Canst thou minister to a mind diseased?" asked Macbeth. Certainly, my lord, the condition of the mind depends largely, if not solely on the condition of the stomach, liver, and bowels, for all of which complaints Ayer's Pills are "the sovereignest thing on earth."

The lawyers organized a base ball nine on Monday and issued a challenge to "anybody and everybody," whereupon some of the boys clubbed together calling themselves "The Growlers" and duly entered the lists against the legal lights. Although the attorneys argued every point the jary gave a verdict in favor of the other fellows—as usual. There was more fun than anything else.

A subscription list was handed around on Monday to help Mr. Valle of Louisville who last week lost his barn by lightning, and a goodly sum was raised. Mr. V. lost a good team, some grain and the entire contents of the barn.

Levi Myers was up from the west side on Tuesday. Says that the farmers down that way are nearly all through cutting barley and many will commence in wheat this week. "How much wheat will we have per acre," said he, "well it will take the threshing machine to tell that, but I think the yield will be very good."

J. F. Hawkins & Co. are preparing to move their business into the building that T. H. Bjoin recently bought, on Second street which building will be moved onto a lot on Main street opposite the opera block. They have added new machinery that requires a ground floor for successful operation to say nothing of the added convenience.

Bee culture has been an important industry with a few Louisville farmers for a few years past and on Friday one of them came in with two hundred pounds or so of honey to sell. It is an industry that costs but little to start, very little to maintain and those who are in it agree that the products are just too sweet for anything.

Col. Cobham Post met in regular session on Friday evening and at 9 o'clock a scout brought in the intelligence that Streeter's entire army corps was out under light marching orders, with ten minutes rations, and he anticipated an attack, which was soon verified by a stampede of Greenhalgh's reserves. The Post capitulated, making the best terms possible and then the whole business resolved itself into a jawing match of very pleasant proportions for an hour or so when the corps retired leaving the vanquished Post in possession of the works. It proved a very pleasant evening and the boys are hoping that the corps will not rest on its laurels but will indulge in another raid sometime in the near future. The ladies complimented the Post very highly upon their elegant new rooms and the neatness thereof.

A Real Journey.

Perhaps a couple of decades ago it was that Jules Verne, that ingenious juggler with geographical facts and scientific probabilities (and impossibilities) described in vivid style the supposed voyage of a wonderful submarine vessel driven by electricity. A faint shadow of his gorgeous picture has been given us by some electrically-guided torpedo boats, but the story still remains a fancy rather than even a probability. However romantic it might be to voyage "twenty thousand leagues under the seas," were that a possibility, it would be far more profitable and interesting to take a journey of seven thousand miles (and return) through the prosperous and populous states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota, South Dakota, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and Montana; observing their varied climate, their industrious people, their growing cities and towns, studying their resources in crops, timber and mines, and noting what has been done in a generation to transform the wilderness into a cultivated country, the home of nearly fifteen millions of people. The traveler would return with his mind stored with material for a score of books, and could choose history, statistics or poetry as his themes. Such a journey could be made by taking a trip over the lines of the Burlington Route, which traverses or penetrates all the states above named, and reaches nearly all their principal cities. Your home ticket agent can supply you with tickets via this route to Chicago, Peoria, St. Louis, Omaha, Kansas City, Denver, and hundreds of other places East, South and West. For more particular information, address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

A number of the Bella Coola colonists, consisting of Sampson Hilde and wife, Peter Hilde and wife, H. Breth and wife and T. S. Bangen returned to Polk county last week, having had enough of the new Eldorado in the far west. They say that while wages for common labor is $2 per day, everything is abnormally high, and it is not a very good place for a poor man to be at.

Vacation Time

Is at hand and is gladly welcomed by all, especially those whose duties in life have caused them to greatly run down their system to meet the requirements, physical and mental, forced upon them. With these and others, it is important, whether at home, at the sea-shore or in the country, that some thought be given to diet, and as further assistance to nature, a good building-up medicene like Hood's Sarsaparilla had best be resorted to. If the digestion is poor liver deranged and frequent headaches seems to be the rule, Hood's will change all this and enable everyone to return to their home and business in a refreshed state of mind and bodily health.

J. E. Stockton, one of the soldiers stationed at Pembina, was brought before U. S. commissioner, Judge Christianson, on Monday, on a charge of giving whiskey to Indians. John Murna, a fellow soldier, was brought along as a witness in the case and was arrested shortly after the case was called on the same charge. Marshal Darrach, of St. Vincent, who came down with the boys, interested himself in the case and it was through his instrumentality that the boys were enabled to return to Pembina Tuesday morning. The Indians were denizens of Canada, hence Uncle Sam had no jurisdiction.

Frank Hawkins went down to Fertile this week and while there swapped a bike for a horse—that's a horse on Frank for bikes are selling for more than horses are, and horses eat themselves up.

Jake Ide informed us last Saturday that he had his barley nearly all cut and expected to tackle his wheat this week. Said he should rush it when he begins as a big storm would be disastrous to our heavy wheat this year, if we should get one.

In spite of the rainy weather in July a great deal of hay has been put up, and more will be after harvest. If care is used to prevent the regular annual loss by prairie fires there will be lots of hay to ship from Polk county this year.

Gov. Clough and party went down to Fosston on Thursday where they were entertained during the day, returning in the evening they spent the night at the new Hotel Crookston and on Friday morning went to Grand Forks, from whence they left for St. Paul in the evening.

Appearances indicate that more stacking will be done this year than for several years past as the straw is exceedingly heavy which will make threshing slower and there does not seem to be a super abundance of machines. This will no doubt be to the advantage of farmers as the late prices promise to be the best.

The Cosgrove Concert company played to a small but delighted audience on Monday evening at the Grand opera house in this city. The musical part of the program was excellent while the elocutionary exercises of Miss La Dell were simply "out of sight." Her rendition of the "Chariot Race" in Ben Hur, was especially fine. The excercises as a whole were deserving of a better house.

Awhile ago E. E. Serrine, who was in the employ of the Great Northern R. R. at Thief River Falls, left his job, deserted his wife and family and with a young lady of that place sought pastures new in California. The new infatuation, it seems did not last long and he soon deserted the girl who, it seems had just money enough left to get to Wisconsin with and from whence she writes her friends that she "is sorry."

H. G. Mitchel was down from Woodside, last Friday, with a lot of potatoes for sale. They were the finest we have seen, but Mitch said the sale was slow, as everybody seemed to have plenty on hand. He says Polk county will have thousands of bushels this fall that there will be no market for, but we should think that the scarcity in other states ought to supply a good market for all that Minnesota has to spare.

The auction sale at Collins' stable on Saturday afternoon was well attended, the bidding lively but the prices were exceedingly low. We presume that never before in the history of Polk county were 25 horses, as good as these sold at such low figures. Old, worn out horses may have been sold for less money at chattel mortgage sale before now but these were all good, young serviceable horses in prime condition for farm work, such as have frequently brought from $200 to $250 in this market.

A Fair Inference.

It is undeniable that actions often speak louder than words. A usurious money lender, who had for some time collected an extortionate interest from a debtor, sent his collector to the man, as usual, one day. The collector returned and reported to his employer that he could not collect the money.

"Do you mean to say that the man declared to you that he wouldn't pay the interest?" the usurer demanded furiously.

"He didn't declare so in so many words, but he gave me to understand so."

"How did he give you to understand so?"

"He kicked me down three flights of stairs!"—Youth's Companion.

In the Past Tense.

"Say, mister," he called, with his head in the door of a Michigan avenue grocery, "do you own a hoss?"

"Yes; I own a horse," replied the grocer as he looked up from his paper.

"And a wagon?"

"Yes; what of it?"

"Nuthin, 'cept you are mistaken about the wagon," drawled the boy. "Your hoss took a skate down the street about five minits ago, and there hain't 'nuff of that there wagon left to make a club of."—Detroit Free Press.

Egyptian Superstition.

The Egyptian shopkeeper had a deity to whom he offered sacrifice every morning, and whose duty it was in return for this reverence to stand in front of the shop during the day a sort of celestial "barker" and direct the attention of the people passing by to the shop and its contents.

IT PAYS.

It pays to raise something besides wheat in Polk county, as a Mentor farmer discovered on Monday when he brought a good fat sheep to Geo. Vine and sold it for spot cash. The sheep dressed 80 pounds.

Do You Want to Stop Tobacco?

You Can Be Cured While Using It.

The habit of using tobacco grows on a man until grave diseased conditions are produced. Tobacco causes cancer of the mouth and stomach; dyspepsia, loss of memory, nervous affections, congestion of the retina and wasting of the optic nerve; resulting in impairment of the vision, even to the extent of blindness; dizziness, or vertigo; tobacco asthma; nightly suffocation, dull pain in region of the heart, followed later by sharp pains, palpitation and weakened pulse, resulting in fatal heart disease. It also causes loss of vitality.

QUIT BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE.

To quit suddenly is too severe a shock to the system, as tobacco—to an inveterate user, becomes a stimulant that his system continually craves. "BACO-CURO" is a scientific and reliable vegetable remedy, guaranteed to be perfectly harmless, and which has been in use for the last 23 years, having cured thousands of habitual tobacco users—smokers, chewers and snuff-dippers.

You can use all the tobacco you want while taking "Baco-Curo." It will notify you when to stop. We give a written guarantee to permanently cure any case with three boxes, or refund the money with ten per cent interest.

"Baco-Curo" is not a substitute, but a reliable and scientific cure—which absolutely destroys the craving for tobacco without the aid of will power, and with no inconvenience. It leaves the system as pure and free from nicotine as the day you took your first chew or smoke.

Sold by all druggists at $1.00 per box, three boxes (thirty day's treatment and guaranteed cure) $2.50, or sent direct upon receipt of price. Manager Bjoin announces that he has secured the presence of J. K. Emmet, the celebrated Irish comedian, for the evening of Aug. 13th, at the Grand opera house in this city. Mr. Emmet enjoys the distinction of having played to more money at the Fourteenth street theatre in New York during the three months "Fritz in a Mad House" was played, than any other attraction that was ever played there; and that is saying very much, for the Fourteenth street theatre is a popular play house and has, time and again, played the greatest attractions of the modern stage. The same artistic and pecuniary success has attended his performances throughout his tour through the country.

COOK BOOK 106
Remember these Directions for using Cottolene

For shortening never use more than two-thirds as much Cottolene as you would of lard. When frying with Cottolene always put it in a cold pan, heating it with the pan. Cottolene produces the best results when very hot, but as it reaches the cooking point much sooner than lard, care should be taken not to let it burn—when hot enough, it will delicately brown a bit of bread in half a minute. Follow these directions in using Cottolene and lard will never again be permitted in your kitchen or in your food. Genuine Cottolene is sold everywhere in tins with trade-marks—"Cottolene" and steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every tin.

MORTGAGE SALE.

(First pub. July 18, '95.)
(Last pub. Aug. 29, '95.)

DEFAULT has been made to the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Ezra L. Smith and Lucy A. Smith, his wife, mortgagors, to James H. Barnum, mortgagee, dated the sixth day of February, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Polk, in the state of Minnesota, on the 23d day of April, A. D. 1888, at 8 o'clock A. M., in book 22 of mortgages, on page 237, on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of six thousand, six hundred twenty-four and 90-100 dollars, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. That the default above described consists in the non payment when due, of ten promissory notes, each for the sum of $500.00, and interest at eight per cent. per annum, payable annually, all being dated Feb. 6, 1888, and all executed and delivered by said Ezra L. Smith to said Jas. H. Barnum and all being secured by said mortgage. Said amount above described as being due contains also the sum of $125.87 taxes, for the years 1892, 1893 and 1894, which said mortgagee on the 12th day of July, A. D. 1895 paid on the Southwest quarter of the land below described.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, at public auction, by the sheriff of said county or by his deputy, duly appointed as agent in said instrument for that purpose, on Friday, the 30th day of August, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and one hundred dollars attorney's fees, provided by statute and stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: All of Section twenty-nine (29), in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty-seven (47), west of the fifth principal meridian, containing six hundred and forty (640) acres of land, more or less, according to the government survey.

Principal Subject of the Fourth Horr-Harvey Debate.

REVIEW BY THE WHITE METAL MAN

Of the Points He Claims Have Been Established So Far—Further Evidence Presented in Support of the Conspiracy Charge—Horr Reads a Letter from Ernest Seyd and goes Into the Subject of Gold-Silver Ratios.

[Copyright 1895, by Azel F. Hatch.]

Mr. Harvey had the floor at the beginning of the fourth day's silver debate and he proceeded to sum up his view of what the debate had so far shown as follows: "The debate so far is of value in this: It shows first that gold and silver is the money of the constitution; (2) that the silver dollar of 371¼ grains of pure silver was the unit of value in our monetary system and regulated the other coins in our coinage system from 1792 to 1873; (3) that silver and gold in concurrent coinage was until 1873 the standard and measure of values of all other property, and the basic principle of our monetary system; (4) that prior to 1873, when one metal increased in exchange value over the other, the debtor had the right to pay in the cheaper metal; (5) that silver was not demonetized by the act of 1873 on account of the over-production of silver; (6) that $143,000,000 of silver were coined by our mints prior to 1873."

Harvey then entered a denial that he had charged general lack of integrity on the American people, or that every man has his price. He simply did not intend that those corrupt in official life should "throw around themselves the cloak of the integrity of the American people." He then proceeded with an explanation of Potter's position on the demonetization bill in the house. Potter had expressed suspicion of the bill because he thought it was to assist a speculation in nickel, the bill providing for coinage of 3-cent pieces largely of nickel. Brooks was also suspicious of the bill. On May 27 the bill came up in the house in the form of a substitute, and Hooper moved suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill. Brooks wanted delay until Potter was present, but Hooper declined to wait, nor did he want the bill read. The motion was lost. Harvey read The Record to the above effect.

Horr took up the argument next. He said: "I have shown you that this bill had its incipiency among the experts on coinage in the United States. I quote here from W. A. Shaw's History of Currency, page 275. 'The first widely embracing international conference proper, however, was the outcome of an expression of opinion in the conclave of the Latin Union. It was called at the invitation of France and met at Paris on the 17th of June, 1877. The states represented were'—now listen—'Austria, Baden, Badou, Bavaria, Belgium, Denmark, Spain, the United States, France, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal, Prussia, Russia, Sweden and Norway, Switzerland, Turkey and Wurtemburg. All the states except Holland declared in favor of the gold standard.'

"Now, that is the record of that conference showing that the subject was being agitated by the civilized nations of the world. It was after that action that our experts commenced to examine the question and see what legislation should be enacted. I stated that they honestly engaged in that work. Has he proven a syllable to the contrary of that? The bill of 1873 simply carried out a resolution of all these civilized nations of the world. I showed you how openly, how completely, that bill was drawn in all fairness and submitted in every detail to the American people. The silver men have attempted from the start to smirch that bill by claiming that those men were false to their duties.

"The first yarn that they told and published in a thousand papers broadcast all over the United States was that a man by the name of Ernest Seyd visited the United States and brought with him $500,000 in gold and that he paid that gold to secure the passage of that bill. Only a little while ago somebody happened to think that maybe Ernest Seyd had written something on the question. It occurred to some one to write to Mr. Hooper's widow and children and see if there wasn't something that could be found on that subject. They found a letter from Ernest Seyd in reply to Mr. Hooper, who had sent him this identical bill and asked his opinion on it. In the course of Mr. Seyd's letter he said:

"'As this is a new bill and presumably repeals all previous enactments I suppose that the total abolishment of the silver dollar is contemplated. I think that the United States with her gold and silver mines is in an eminently favorable position to uphold the use of both gold and silver, and that the double valuation as it existed before would be of great benefit to the country. I am myself, as you will perceive from my writings, in favor of the full and complete adoption of the double standard,' and in that letter from Mr. Seyd from beginning to end, covering pages and pages of type-written matter, he does nothing but oppose the very measure that these men say he spent so much money to pass through the American congress."

Harvey rejoined as follows: "The report of the monetary conference at Paris in 1867 will contradict the history that Mr. Horr has read from. As to Ernest Seyd and a letter found among Mr. Hooper's effects since he and Seyd both died, suppose in the years to come some one would say to the people then living that John G. Carlisle was a bimetallist 'and here is the proof of it,' and was to read from Mr. Carlisle's speech, 'The demonetization of silver is the greatest crime of the ages and its consequences for evil are greater than all the floods and fires and pestilences of the past.' Would that prove that Mr. Carlisle is a bimetallist at a particular time when something might be charged against him when he acted as secretary of the treasury under Mr. Cleveland."

Harvey then proceeded with the record of congress when the house refused to suspend the rules and pass the demonetization bill without reading. "Mr. Holman asked this question: 'Before the question is taken upon suspending the rules and passing the bill I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will explain the leading changes made by this bill in the existing law, especially in reference to the coinage. It would seem as if all the small coinage of the country is intended to be recoined.' To this Mr. Hooper replied: 'The bill makes no changes in the existing laws in that regard.'" Harvey read other questions, none, however, referring to the demonetization of silver, to show the character of those questions, as indicating that the members did not know the bill did demonetize the silver dollar. The rules were then suspended and the substitute passed.

The bill went to the senate and Harvey read from the record Sherman's desire to have it passed quickly, the senator saying that it would only take the time consumed in reading the bill. Harvey quoted Sherman as follows in answer to a question by Casserly: "If the senator will allow me, he will see that the preceding section provides for coin which is exactly interchangeable with the English shilling and the five franc piece of France; that is, the five franc piece of France will be the exact equivalent of a dollar of the United States in our silver coinage."

In reply Horr said: "That is right, Mr. Harvey. The bill that was reported to the senate and that they were then discussing had in it a provision for the coining of silver dollars, the silver dollars about which you talked at the last session of this debate containing 384 grains and they were made with all the other silver coins, subsidiary coins. The senate struck that provision out and substituted the trade dollar for that 384 grain dollar."

Harvey—If you will show me from the record of the proceedings in the senate on that day that the senate struck out that dollar we will stop this debate [illegible].

Horr replied: "I have not [illegible]; but I can get it. The law when it was passed had the trade dollar in it. Do you deny that?"

Harvey—No sir, I do not.

Horr—And didn't that take the place of the other dollar?

Harvey—No sir.

Horr—I defy you to show a word anywhere that substantiates that position.

"The only men who opposed that bill in the house were Clarkson N. Potter and Mr. Brooks, both millionaires from Wall street, both representing the very men that you say were trying to impose that bill upon this country for the purpose of aiding men who are rich. Mr. Potter stated in so many words the truth; he thought it was inopportune, but he says: 'I am in favor of the gold unit. I am in favor of that provision of the bill.' That bill became a law by the substitution of the trade dollar. The law in reference to making the gold dollar the unit of value was never changed at any stage in the process of the bill. It is apparent, however, that the bill met with little opposition; not because its provisions were not understood, but because at that time no one cared very much about the silver dollar."

Horr quoted a letter from Senator Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont, to whom nobody, he said, imputed dishonor, in which Morrill said: "There has been a loud and delusive cry about the act of congress in 1873, which after three years of consideration by the treasury department and congress purposely omitted to provide for the further coinage of the silver dollar, none having been coined for nearly forty years and only $8,000,000 having ever been coined."

To meet Horr's argument Harvey quoted Sherman, in the Forty-second congress, speaking of the silver dollar: "We are providing that it shall float all over the world." Again: "This bill proposes a silver coinage exactly the same as the French, and what are called the associated nations of Europe [meaning the Latin union] who have adopted the international standard of silver coinage; that is, the dollar provided for by this bill is the precise equivalent of the 5-franc piece."

Here Harvey reached the passage of the bill by the senate with slight changes in a few minor points, when it was referred to a conference committee which could settle only disputed points and could not change what had been agreed upon by both houses, he said, and the silver-dollar clause [meaning a full legal tender dollar] was not a disputed point. The committee was composed of Senators Scott (Pa.), Boyard and Sherman, and Representatives Hooper (Mass.), Stoughton (Mich.) and McNealy (Ills.)

And here was Harvey's point: He said that in that committee the 384 grain dollar was stricken out (the dollar that had been agreed upon, under principles of free coinage, by both houses). It presented its report and the congressional record says of the matter: "The report was concurred in"—"those five words, and no more." Both houses trusted their committees; the points of disagreement were understood and the committee was supposed to have performed its duty. Neither house asked any questions, nor was there any debate. He added: "If that dollar was only a subsidiary dollar, limited to the purchase of silver by the secretary of the treasury only and that was its only virtue in that bill, why did it disappear from the bill?"

Years afterward, he said, the report of the senate committee turned up so altered as to show an amendment striking out the silver dollar.

Horr defied Harvey to prove that the clause making the gold dollar the unit of value was ever erased from the bill, or that in any draft of the bill was the silver dollar made anything but a subsidiary coin. He then said Harvey was wrong as to the procedure in conference. It not infrequently happened in changing disputed clauses that it was necessary to change clauses not disputed. But in any event the report had to be made and every change stated.

He said: "No unusual thing was done with this bill. It passed almost precisely as the secretary of the treasury had recommended it when he first sent the draft to the American congress. The only other feature of any importance in it was the new feature of the trade dollar; otherwise it was nearly identical with the bill that had first been drafted." Horr read a letter from Jasper Packard, of New Albany, Ind., in which he, who was a member of congress during the consideration of that bill, says: "I heard it all, Hooper's speech, and Kelley's and all the rest. The gold dollar was made the unit of value in the bill from its first printing, and a dollar of 384 grains was provided for and put in the list of the subsidiary coins, legal tender to only $5. Afterward that dollar was dropped entirely and the trade dollar with more silver in it was substituted. There was never any secrecy about it."

In reply Harvey said: "When he says in that letter that the trade dollar was substituted for the dollar that was omitted he is contradicted by the record of that day, from which I am now reading and which is on this table before Mr. Horr. There was no substituting of the trade dollar for the dollar for which I am contending. I want you to show me where in any recorded proceeding of the debate in the senate or house that dollar was struck out, and if you will show it here this debate will stop."

Referring to the record Harvey followed the action of the senate to prove this, closing as follows: "In other words, by the record in the presiding officer's words, there was an amendment to section (16) 15, the silver dollar section, to be considered, and it was passed as it came from the house simply by being marked 'agreed to.'" Harvey then insisted that he was right regarding the procedure in conference committees, and that such committees could not change anything agreed on by both houses. He charged that either men on the conference committee or some "fraudulent clerk" had stricken out the silver dollar. He asked "the voters of the republic to read the Congressional Record of Jan. 17, 1873, and see for themselves that it is there expressed that the silver dollar was in the bill before it was emasculated by the conference committee, the silver dollar that was with the trade dollar to have free access to the mints. Thus the conspiracy succeeded either by a corrupt clerk or the two men who made the report, or both."

Horr offered to give Mr. Harvey his time if he would show that the disputed dollar was given free coinage by the bill as it came from the house, and Harvey said he had already shown it. Horr replied: "This new dollar that was provided for in the bill in the house as it went to the senate was just twice the size of the half dollar. Now the provision existed that the silver for making such half dollars should be bought by the government and that the seigniorage arising from coining such money, which was worth less than it was worth on its face, should go into the government treasury. Do you believe they provided for a coin containing double the amount of silver in the half dollar and agreed to take all the silver that should come to the mint and coin it into such dollars, and in the same bill also provided that if it was coined into half dollars the government should get it [the seignorage]? Men wouldn't go and sell their silver for the market price when the very bill would permit them to have it coined and give them a larger price for it."

Horr then, after a review of the points upon which he and Harvey agreed and differed, proposed to go into the question—the law being on the statute books—Should it be repealed? But Harvey said he wasn't through with the demonetization act. He quoted the Chicago Tribune of Jan. 18, 1873, which only briefly mentioned in its telegraphic report the passage of the bill, notwithstanding one of the money metals had been "struck down" by that bill. Its reporters at Washington did not know it. Horr denied that the passage of the law resulted in curtailing the silver money in circulation in this country. He proposed then to go into the question of ratio, but Harvey said he had still something more to say about the demonetization act.

Harvey quoted Thurman, Feb. 15, 1876, declaring that he did not know the bill demonetized the silver dollar; Conkling admitting his ignorance of the fact March 30, 1876; and Allison declaring, Feb. 15, 1878, that the bill had been "doctored" and that it did not as passed represent the intention of the house.

Holman was quoted, July 13, 1876, declaring that the matter of the bill's passage was "a colossal swindle" and as it passed was certainly not read to the house. Said Holman: "I myself asked the question of Mr. Hooper, who stood near where I am now standing, whether it changed the law in regard to coinage, and the answer of Mr. Hooper certainly left the impression upon the whole house that the subject of the coinage was not affected by the bill."

Horr said: "I desire to say to the gentleman that just what one congressman or another may have said about this bill I neither know nor care. I know this, that the men composing the congress of 1873 personally and individually have every one of them denied the statement of corruption that you charge in the passage of this bill. I know that they have nothing but innuendoes to base the charge upon. I know that they cannot make a case unless they first prove that no decency was left in the American congress in 1873."

Horr then took up the question of rates, saying that Harvey might continue "hanging at that old hole" if he so desired. He referred to Del Mar, of London, to show the variation of the ratio between silver and gold from the beginning, showing that in the Archaic epoch, the earliest record, the ratio was 1 to 1. In the Vedic period it was 1 to 4. In the Buddhic epoch it was 1 to 6½ and so on down to 1769 when it had changed to 14 to 1. He wanted Harvey to explain this, and why it was the highly civilized nations that had adopted gold as the standard.

Harvey, however, insisted on continuing the debate on the demonetization act, and said he had intended to quote many more proofs of the alleged fraud, but that Horr's retreat made it unnecessary. He then quoted the Chicago Tribune, February 23, 1878: "This act, done secretly and stealthily, to the profound ignorance of those who voted for it, and of the president who approved it, had, without the knowledge of the country, removed one of the landmarks of the government; had, under cover of darkness, abolished the constitutional dollar, and had arbitrarily and to the immense injury of the people, added heavily to every form of indebtedness, public and private."

Harvey concluded as follows: "The first question that strikes the innocent mind of today is, why has not this wrong been sooner righted? It is because, sirs, men stand bare-headed beneath a sun whose enervating rays blind the eyes and destroy human character. The same deception which originated and completed this crime is still practiced upon the people, and the same power that directed it then is directing it now. The child of nature, standing in the laboratory of the alchemist, can see the most deadly poison made, but its appearance furnishes no evidence of its deadly power.

"So it is with the man who reads the act of 1873. Such has been the effect of the act of 1873 that debased one-half the money of the government. Its debasement consisted in destroying the attributes that gave to silver its value and power as a money metal. Its use since in debased token money has served to deceive the people by making them believe that it is primary money while not treating it as such."

This ended the debate for the day. Judge Miller then announced that questions would be received from the audience, and a number of questions were asked and replied to.

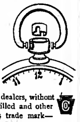
WITHOUT THE

Non-pull-out

BOW (RING)

it is easy to steal or ring watches from the pocket. The thief gets the watch in one hand, the chain in the other and gives a short, quick jerk—the ring slips off the watch stem, and away goes the watch, leaving the victim only the chain.

This Idea stopped that little game:



The bow has a groove on each end. A collar runs down inside the pendent (stem) and fits into the grooves, firmly locking the bow to the pendent, so that it cannot be pulled or twisted off.

A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recommendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kone, La Rue, O.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

RATIOS DISCUSSED.

Principal Subject of the Fifth Horr-Harvey Talk.

"COIN" STATES HIS CASE EXACTLY

What in His View Is the Operation of the Double-Standard System — Horr Holds Labor To Be the Best Standard of Value and Measures Gold That Way, Showing a Depreciation of of the Yellow Metal, as He Views the Case.

[Copyright 1895, by Azel F. Hatch.]

The fifth day of the Harvey-Horr debate began with the chairman, Judge Miller, on the floor. He simply requested the audience to respect the rights of the debaters, there having been on the part of a portion of the audience an inclination to interrupt occasionally. Horr then began the debate by declaring that all attempts to fix the ratio between silver and gold had been failures. A difference between the legal and commercial ratios of ¼ of 1 per cent had been sufficient to drive the dearer metal out of any civilized country. It had been so in this country. Gold was the dearer money up to 1834 and it left us; silver was the dearer after 1834 and it left us, so that in 1853 congress had to pass a law making the smaller silver coins much less weight in silver.

"Coin" had said in his book that France had bid for our silver by establishing a higher ratio therefor, but France had made that ratio—15½ to 1—in 1803 when our ratio was 15 to 1 and she got no silver from us up to 1834. He gave a review of the history of the ratio of France, and said that gold had been made the standard of the whole civilized world because it was believed to be more stable in value than silver and for other less important reasons.

Harvey said that when he replied to the above his answer would be complete, but he desired to talk further about the demonetization act. He quoted the Morrill letter read by Horr at the previous debate. In Harvey's quotation, Morrill says "None [silver dollars] having been coined for forty years," and Harvey referred to the mint report showing that Morrill was mistaken, there having been several millions of silver dollars coined in the forty years prior to 1873. Harvey imputed falsehood to Morrill because he was a bank stockholder and the truth would not have served Morrill's interests.

Horr explained that Morrill was not writing an essay on the number of silver dollars coined in that time, but denying the talk of fraud in the passage of this demonetization act; there had been only 8,000,000 of them coined while the amount of gold was several hundred millions, said Horr: "Senator Morrill simply used the expression 'There were none coined and Mr. Harvey draws the conclusion that because that is not accurately true, he cannot tell the truth about anything else."

He then went on: "Doctor Linderman gives the value of the silver dollar each year from 1834 to 1876 in the Census Report. According to that table, at no time was the silver dollar between 1834 and 1876 worth less than 100.2 cents, the highest was in 1859 when in was worth 105.23. This "Coin" calls a slight variation."

Harvey then began the discussion of bimetallism and said: "Scientific bimetallism is this: "1. Free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver; these two metals to constitute the primary or redemption money of the government.

"2. That silver dollars of 371¼ grains of pure silver (with us) to be the unit of value, and gold to be coined into money at a ratio to be changed if necessary from time to time if the commercial parity to the legal ratio shall be affected by the action of foreign countries.

"3. The money coined from both metals to be legal tender in the payment of all debts.

"4. The option as to which of the two moneys is to be paid in the liquidation of the debt to rest with the debtor, and the government also to exercise that option when desirable in paying out redemption money.

"All of these conditions are necessary. Like any useful mechanical construction all the parts are necessary. First, as to unlimited coinage: When the mints are open to unlimited coinage of the two metals an unlimited demand is created for them. The quantity is limited: When these two metals seek a market they find a demand for their use in the arts and manufactures, which is limited. The surplus finds an unlimited market at the mints to be coined into money, the object for which all other produce seek the market. They thus have an unlimited market as the mints are open to all that comes. It is a question of supply and demand.

"With a limited supply and unlimited demand, what stops their value rising? It is this: The law says, 'We coin 371¼ grains pure silver and 23.8 grains pure gold, respectively, into dollars, and confer upon these coins functions which make for them a permanent and equal demand.' When this is the law people will not take less for their silver and gold, the quantities above named, than a dollar in current money, for they have the right to have it coined into dollars."

"This unlimited demand for the two metals existed in all the world at ratios one to the other up to 1816, when England closed her mints to silver. The demand thus made fixed the commercial value of the two metals at the ratio fixed by law. England closing her mints had practically no effect. It was designed to do so and was the beginning of the movement intended to limit the quantity of primary money to one of the metals and correspondingly decrease the value of the other metal.

"I now make a part of my remarks an official table taken from page 108 of compiled laws and coinage statistics, an official document from Washington, showing the commercial ratio of the two metals for 200 years, to which I have added the commercial ratio for 1894. From this table it will be seen that under the effect of unlimited coinage up to 1873 a parity between the two metals was maintained at the legal ratio. Cast your eyes up and down these columns and see how evenly the commercial ratio kept pace with the legal ratio. The ratio of France, the largest nation commercially during that period having a bimetallic ratio, was the governing influence, which was 15½ to 1; ours was 15 to 1 till 1834 then 16 to 1."

The table showed that from 1687 to 1873, inclusive, the ratio varied between 14.14 and 15.93, being 14.94 in 1687 and 15.63 in 1872. As prepared by Harvey the rise to 15.93 in 1873 and up to 32.56 in 1894 is marked "Demonetization."

Horr then took up the argument, saying: "All these inquiries about the valuation in the ratio of the past are of little account in this debate. This one fact i admitted by Coin and disputed by no one: All the civilized nations of the world have ceased the free coinage of silver upon any ratio. Silver today has no free coinage in any country where gold is the standard, and only in such countries as are using silver as the unit and measure of value. It matters little how such a state of affairs has been established since it is the existing fact. Silver is cheap. We both agree to that.

"No coins which are of less value than the market values of the metals in them would indicate are ever treated as the measure of ultimate redemption, nor ever passed current at their face value, except they are redeemable in money which is worth as much coined as uncoined. Now 'Coin' in his 'Financial School' really admits that the ratio between the two metals must always be determined by the actual value of the metals in the markets of the world, and ignores the doctrine of the ratio of 16 to 1 being possible at the present day. On page 111 'Coin' says: 'We express values in dollars, the unit of our monetary system. That unit is the gold dollar of 23.2 grains of pure gold, or 25.8 grains of standard gold. If we were to cut this amount in two, and make 11.6 grains a unit or a dollar we would thereby double the value of all the property in the United States except debts.'

"Is not that statement wisdom for you in chunks? What a head that boy must have. Precisely such another proposition would be: We measure cloth in this country, legally, with a yard stick thirty-six inches long. If we were to cut the yard stick in two and declare by law that eighteen inches shall hereafter be a yard we would thereby double the amount of cloth in the United States. Holy Moses! What a philosopher we have here. Then cut it in two again and the cloth would be quadrupled. If the boy had said that by cutting the gold dollar into two pieces and then changing our unit or dollar so that it should be only half as valuable as it is now we would double the nominal value of all the property in the world, but would not affect its actual value in the least, he would have told the truth.

"Before Mr. Harvey finishes his book he discloses what he really meant by bimetallism. We have it here in his own language, and it is in this book that I find the principles which I am called upon in this debate to combat. The author says: 'The objection to independent bimetallism is that the parity between the two metals cannot be maintained at our ratio of 16 to 1, that is, the gold—23.2 grains—in the gold dollar will be worth more than the silver—371¼ grains—in the silver dollar; we have twice changed the quantity of gold in the gold dollar, each time making it less. If the commercial value of 23.2 grains of gold is worth more than the commercial value of 371¼ grains of pure silver then reduce to 23 grains, 21, 20 grains of less, if necessary, to put the two at a ratio where the practical effect of free coinage, when once set to working again, will demonstrate that the ratio is at its natural point and parity easily obtained.'

"And then again on page 148 he says: 'with silver remonetized and a just and equitable standard of values we can, if necessary by act of congress, reduce the number of grains in a gold dollar till it is of the same value as the silver dollar. We can legislate the premium out of gold.' Now then, what becomes of his ratio of 16 to 1?"

Harvey's reply was as follows: "Mr. Horr alludes to something that I have said before and then adds, 'Cut the yard stick half in two and it will make twice as many yards of cloth in the world.' Now, Mr. Horr, let me tell you what you people did in 1873. You doubled the length of the yard stick. For instance, let me illustrate it. Suppose one-half of the gold in the world were destroyed today beyond recovery, would not the gold dollars that were left be twice as valuable as they were before? Mr. Horr is not a bad pupil and shakes his head. Let me illustrate it in another way that every farmer in this country will understand. Suppose that one-half of the wheat in the world today were destroyed beyond recovery. Mr. Horr, would not wheat on the Chicago market tomorrow be about double in value what it is today? You cannot escape that proposition, and it does not require a man to be a farmer to understand the illustration and any man who is a business man will understand the gold illustration.

"So that when you destroyed one-half the redemption money in 1873 you doubled the value of the money that was left. You doubled the yard stick. You can see no harm in destroying the price of a man's property, cutting the price of his property half in two; you shut your eyes to that. But your eyes are wide open when any man proposes to even up with you in your cutting-in-half process by proposing to cut the gold dollar half in two. We don't wish to do either. We wish to put back in the coinage system the money that you demonetized in 1873."

Then referring to the table of ratios from 1687 to 1894 he said the whole of the variation of said ratio when "the world practically had bimetallism" was made by the cost of exchange.

"It is possible," said Horr, in reply, "that my friend Harvey believes it when he says the act of 1873 cut the price of the property of the world in two, and that prices immediately, as they must have done if their statement is true, dropped fifty per cent. You destroy one-half the wheat in the world and the chances are that you will increase the value of wheat probably four times—such is the estimate of political economists; but wheat is an article that people eat to live, it is all consumed from year to year, or after a short time. Gold has been accumulating for ages, and if you should destroy the primary money quality of half the gold in the world you would not change the price of the metal one-half. As soon as the price would go up there is an enormous store laid away all over the entire world that is not being used for money purposes, that would at once seek the channels and be coined into money and take the place of the money that had been destroyed.

"What 'Coin' is really after is a cheap dollar. He would reduce at one stroke, if need be, the value of the money unit of this country one-half. If that is not adopting a 50-cent dollar what is it? Now I am here to protest against the whole scheme because it is an effort to cheapen labor. I care not in what part of the world you seek for examples you will find that civilization is the highest where the best wages are paid for human effort, both mental and physical. The real measure of values is human toil. To decide whether any system of finances is best you must inquire into its effect upon the toiling millions. The greatest commodity ever placed on the markets of the world is labor. To show whether gold has appreciated or depreciated in real value the price paid for any human effort must never be omitted. When the laws of nature through mechanical devices are compelled to do the work formerly done by human hands, three results should follow: The product should be cheapened for the consumers of the world, the wages of the men who still labor in that production should be increased, and the profits of the promoter of the enterprise, or the inventor of the improvement, should become greater."

Harvey rejoined: "Mr. Horr, we do not intend to let you before the American people cloak yourself behind the laboring man. There have been free schools in this country for many years, and you are not going to fool the laboring men of this country. Mr. Horr asks me about prices, why they did not drop suddenly 50 per cent. in 1873 when silver was demonetized. The reply to that is this: We were not then on a specie basis. We began again in 1879; the demand for gold was not thrown on it to answer the entire purpose of primary money until 1879, and then it was cushioned in this country by the disputed position of silver.

"He says my illustration about half the gold being destroyed is not like the wheat if one-half of that were suddenly destroyed. In this whole argument you can apply one safe principle, and that is that supply and demand regulate values." Referring to the table of ratios again Harvey said that for 200 years there was a practical parity between the two metals.

Said Horr, when Harvey sat down: "My friend Harvey says that he is not going to permit me to stand behind the laboring men, or hide behind them, or words to that effect. How are you going to stop me from standing where I have a mind to? I say I oppose this whole scheme because it will injure every man who lives upon wages in the United States."

Horr then went into a dissertation on the origin of value, his conclusion being that when gold and silver were first used to effect exchanges the cost in human labor of producing them measured their values. The men who advocated free silver left "out of the question the great human product of labor and the manner in which it will be affected by the legislation that they propose. Their whole plan seems to be to enable people who have run into debt to pay their debts without returning full value for what they have received." But, said Horr, the creditors of the country outnumbered the debtors five to one. Every man who had worked one hour of his day's work was a creditor.

Harvey would not take up this subject yet, but would prove when he got to it, he said, that Horr was wrong about the creditors outnumbering the debtors. He proceeded to show when Germany and France demonetized silver, in 1873 and 1874 he said, and called attention to the table of ratios to show that it was just then that the price of silver began to fall, his conclusions being that for 200 years under bimetallism there was parity and in 22 years under the gold standard total destruction of parity.

Another table was here produced showing the annual price at London of silver from 1833 to 1894 and the period from 1873 to 1894 when silver fell so greatly was marked on the table "Demonetization." "We have relatively now only half as much primary money in existence as in 1873 and of course silver is only worth half as much." He then asked: Has silver declined since 1873 by reason of overproduction? and presented a table giving the production of both metals each year or period of years from 1545 to 1891 in kilos, the ratio of gold to silver in weight and in value. From this he argued that: "The varying supply of the two metals prior to 1873 never had any effect in changing their commercial parity from the legal ratio fixed."

Horr said: "Brother Harvey omits this one important thing. You may make two standards by law, but the people will discard one and use the other. We necessarily are compelled to do business with one or the other unless the value happens to be precisely the same, so that the measure becomes one and identical."

Harvey referred to the table of production of gold and silver to prove that in the time it covers, 328 years, the ratio between the quantity of the two metals produced fluctuated from 56 to 1 to 4 to 1, while the "commercial ratio hung tenaciously to the legal ratio."

Horr declared that gold had depreciated in value—5-per cent in less than 100 years. "How do I know that gold is cheaper than it was in 1873? I will tell you. The rate of wages, the amount of gold that a man can get for a certain number of hours' work, tells me whether gold has decreased in price or not. I can get today twice as much gold for a day's work following the plow as I did in 1849? Wages are 70 per cent higher, paid in gold, for the same amount of work than in 1860. Has not gold depreciated then when you measure it with the great commodity of human toil?"

Harvey replied: "Mr. Horr says that everything has been cheapened, including gold. To say that gold and products cheapen simultaneously is a financial contradiction. You buy gold by exchanging other property for it. When it takes more property to buy gold than formerly, gold has risen.

"With us now the price of services or property means the gold dollar or its equivalent. Price has a definite meaning. It is gold that property and labor is being priced in, it is not priced in labor, and the average human intellect will have to be reduced a little lower than it is now, before Mr. Horr can toll the people out on a limb and chop the limb off and mangle them any more than they are now mangled. He is trying to lead you off on a theory that has no practical application as a monetary unit."

Here the debate ended for the day.

Thad Stevens' House Demolished.

One of the historic old houses of Capitol hill is now being demolished to make way for a handsome modern residence which is to be erected upon the site. People passing along B street, between First street and New Jersey avenue southeast, have noticed for years an ancient residence on the south side of the street, which has been one of the landmarks. The oldest inhabitant when asked about it would say it was formerly the home of Thad Stevens, and thereupon the house assumed renewed interest in the eyes of many. A project was on foot at one time to purchase the house with money contributed by colored people and to make it a memorial to the regard which the colored race entertains for the memory of Thad Stevens. Ex-Senator Bruce and other colored men of note were interested in the scheme, but it was abandoned.—Washington Star.

CHEESE BOX MAKING.

AN EXTENSIVE INDUSTRY OF WHICH LITTLE IS KNOWN.

Half a Million Dollars' Worth of Cases Turned Out Yearly by Expensive Machinery—How the Logs Are Cooked and Then Cut Into Unbroken Sheets.

An idea of the magnitude of the cheese industry in this country is given by the fact that the boxes in which the cheese is shipped represent a cost of nearly $500,000 annually. It is not many years since cheese was shipped in any kind of barrel or box which would hold from one to half a dozen good sized forms, packed in straw to keep them from being bruised or broken in the handling. It was only factory made cheese that received such protection, while dairy cheese was sent to market destitute of any covering other than its own roughly bandaged rind, which in most cases proved invulnerable. Competition among manufacturers has changed all this, and at present the manufacture of boxes gives employment to a large number of hands and necessitates the use of powerful and expensive machinery.

It was customary in the early days of the business to saw the hoops, as the large body of the box is called, out of the log in planks about one-fifth of an inch in thickness. The waste of material was a most serious objection to this plan, fully 50 per cent of the timber going in sawdust. The invention of the rotary cutting machine has prevented this waste and at the same time produced a better hoop than the sawed article. The chief timber used in making cheesebox hoops is the common swamp elm. No other timber seems to possess the same qualities of lightness, toughness and elasticity so requisite for cheeseboxes as this once despised product of American forests. The logs, after being cut in the proper lengths, generally 5 feet for an ordinary cheesebox of 15½ or 16 inches diameter, are thrown into long vats filled with water, where they are boiled from 12 to 20 hours. The time required to soften the timber, or cook it, as the operation is called, varies according to the size of the timber and the season. Large logs require to be cooked longer than small ones, particularly when the logs are frozen. It is not uncommon to find the center of a log still frozen after 15 hours of boiling.

Experience is the best guide in this part of the business, and to know when the timber is thoroughly cooked and not overdone is one of the things acquired only by constant observation. When sufficiently boiled the logs are lifted in iron grapples from the vats and laid on skids, where the bark is removed. Then a log is lifted by a crane and swung into place in the machine, where it is held in a horizontal position by chucks or dogs that center it at each end.

In this position the log revolves like a roll of paper in a printing press. The knife which does the cutting is very heavy and is bolted to a heavy head called a carriage, which is fed forward by screws toward the revolving log. In the most approved machines the knife has an end or oscillating as well as a forward motion. This reduces the strain on the machine and permits the cutting of soft, unsound and shaky hearted logs. As the knife comes in contact with the timber, the inequalities of the log are first shorn off and gradually the log becomes perfectly round and yields an unbroken sheet of lumber, like the unwinding of a roll of cloth. This sheet of wood is broken off in convenient lengths, which are passed under dividing knives that cut them into uniform widths corresponding with the required depth of the box.

If the boxes are to be made up at once the hoops are bent around iron cylinders to give them the form of the box, after which the bottom is pressed in and nailed in place. Comparatively few boxes are put together in the larger mills. In most cases the product is dried and shipped to the cheese manufacturing centers, where the boxes are completed. The boxes in the finished state are too bulky for economical handling. An ordinary freight car will not contain more than 500 complete boxes, while 5,000 can be carried if shipped in the bale.

The remnants which are not wide enough for hoops are used for the cover band and for the narrow band that goes around the bottom of the box. The boxes vary in size both as regards depth and diameter. The most common size will hold a cheese of from 60 to 65 pounds. Such a box is 10 inches deep and 15½ inches in diameter. This is the size of cheese most in demand for export. The size for home consumption is as a rule much smaller and requires a box from 5 to 6 inches deep, but of the same diameter as the other.

Various kinds of timber are used to form the heads of the box, but elm is the accepted material for the hoops. Owing to peculiarities of the soil, the timber in some localities is inclined to be shaky, the checks or shakes running around the log and following the grain of the timber. Such timber was useless when the hoops were sawed, but in the rotary process much of it can be turned to good account. The bulk of the elm timber used in this business is brought in from Canada.

The western peninsula of Ontario lying north of Lake Erie contained one of the largest tracts of elm timber on the continent. It has been greatly depleted in recent years. Logs are taken out in winter when the swamps are frozen and are skidded near the railways or on the lake shore. The bulk of them are taken to the mills by water in tow of powerful steam tugs.—New York Sun.

True worth is as inevitably discovered by the facial expression as its opposite is sure to be clearly represented there. The human face is nature's tablet. The truth is certainly written thereon.—Lavater.

Thus the St. Paul Fire Department Relief association will receive $7,857.14; the Minneapolis department, $12,080.19, the Duluth department, $3,580.64; the Winona department, $956.17 and the Stillwater department $741:84.

Minnesota Plumbers.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 5.—A meeting of the plumbers of the Twin Cities was held in Labor Temple for the purpose of discussing matters pertaining to the closer organization of the different lodges of the state. Several short informal speeches were made, welcoming the visiting members, and the committees appointed to investigate the advisability of forming a state organization made their reports. These reports were favorable to a close union, and an attempt will be made to draw all the plumbers in the small towns throughout the state within the fold.

May and Matrimony.

The pagans had a myth that "only bad women marry in May." They had another, that if the marriage did take place the couple would live most unhappily, and children born of the marriage—if it was not hopelessly rendered barren by thus slapping the fates in the face—would be deformed or imbecile. With prizes like that in prospect, it is not much wonder that the ignorant and superstitious taboo May marriages, but there is no excuse yet for this idiosyncrasy of thinking people—at least, no sensible one.

Ovid was a firm believer in the superstition and said that no widow or young girl would marry in May unless she wished to invite the displeasure of the gods, and that the imprudent woman who braved their wrath would fill an early grave. Ovid pinned his faith to rosy June, the birth month of June, and when he got ready to launch his daughter on the matrimonial sea he studied the stars and all the superstitions to make sure that he would not run upon Scylla in steering off Charybdis.

Resolved to match the girl, he tried to find
What days unprosperous were, what moons were kind.
After June's sacred ides his fancy strayed—
Good to the man and happy to the maid.

Better One Way.

In North Carolina lately a case was tried in which, the defendant's character having been impeached, it was sought to bolster it up by showing he had reformed and joined the church. The witness, who belonged to the same church, insisted that as the defendant was now a Christian man of course his character was better. Counsel asked him, "Doesn't he drink just as much as he ever did?" The witness, who was colored and evidently embarrassed by the inquiry, slowly raised his eyes and said with much deliberation, "I think he do, but he carries it more better."—San Francisco Argonaut.

Calomel.

Calomel was discovered by Crollins in the seventeenth century, and the first directions for its preparation were given by Beguin in 1608. Its name is derived from two Greek words, signifying "a beautiful black," because in its preparation a black powder is the first step in the manufacture, being produced by rubbing mercury together with corrosive sublimate.

The Illinois river was so termed from the Illini, a tribe of Indians on its banks. Another derivation is suggested in Isle aux Noix, island of Nuts. Several derivations more or less fanciful are suggested by the etymologists and geographers.

BIG COMPANIES COMBINE.

The Result Will Probably Be an Improved Electric Engine.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 6.—The successful use of electricity as a motive power on steam roads has led the Baldwin locomotive works and the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company to effect a combination. Conferences have been going on between the two companies for the past two or three months, which have resulted in an agreement by which they will hereafter work together in the development of apparatus for the operation of steam railroads by electricity. The name of the new company has not been determined, and the officials of the Baldwin company decline to state whether or not it will be made a stock company, though by the agreement the two companies will hereafter work as one, and both plants will be retained as they are at present, extension being made as the business warrants.

HEADED FOR HOME.

Bannocks on the Way From Jackson Hole to the Reservation.

OMAHA, Aug. 3.—A dispatch received at the headquarters of the department of the Platte indicates that the Indians are returning from Jacksons Hole by a straight line to the reservation. To testify the correctness the Union Pacific officials were asked to telegraph for information from stations along the Oregon Short Line from Soda Springs westward. The following reply is from the division superintendent at Pocatello:

A stage driver who has just reached Soda Springs says he left Carraboo Friday morning. He came through the Grave Lake and Blackfoot River country. He reports 200 Bannocks at Grave Lake on the way from Jacksons Hole to the reservation. They said that there had been no fighting and no desire to fight on their part. The scare seems to be over and settlers understand they are trying to make their way back to the reservation to avoid troops.

The parties are all prominent.

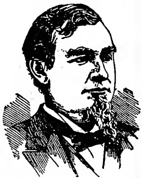
ENDED WITH DEATH

JUSTICE HOWELL E. JACKSON OF THE SUPREME COURT

Passes Away at His Tennessee Home of Consumption — Has Become Steadily Worse Since He Sat on the Income Tax Case—Biographical.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 9.—The Hon. Howell Edmunds Jackson, associate justice of the supreme court of the United States, died at his residence at West Meade at 2 p. m. of consumption.

Judge Jackson had been in failing health for the past four years, but it has been only in the past few months that the progress of the disease began to cause his family and friends uneasiness. Last year he went on a lengthy trip to the far west in search of health. Later he went to Thomasville, Ga., where it was hoped the mild and yet bracing climate would restore his one time vigorous constitution. The trip did him little good and after a long time he was brought home. At his old home Judge Jackson seemed to improve slightly until he went to Washington to sit in the second hearing of the income tax case. He stood that trying trip only fairly well, and after his return home appeared to lose strength rapidly. Nevertheless, Judge Jackson never took to his bed until about a week ago. Since that time his family and friends have realized that the end was near, and his death was not unexpected.



HOWELL EDMUNDS JACKSON.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Howell Edmunds Jackson was born in Paris, Tenn., April 8, 1832, so that he was in his 63d year at the time of his death. Justice Jackson was a classical scholar, graduating from the West Tennessee college in 1848. He studied law two years at the University of Virgina and in Jackson, under his kinsmen, Judges A. W. O. Totten and Milton Brown; graduated from the Lebanon law school in 1856, in which year he located in Jackson and engaged in the practice of law; served on the supreme bench by appointment on two occasions and was once a prominent candidate for supreme judge before the nominating convention; relocated in Jackson in 1876; was elected to the state house of representatives in 1880 on the state credit platform; was elected to the United States senate as a Democrat in 1881, and served till April 12, 1886; was appointed United States circuit judge by President Cleveland and nominated for associate justice by President Harrison; was confirmed by the senate Feb. 18, 1893, and entered upon the duties of the office March 4, 1893.

Judge Jackson was twice married, the first time to Miss Sophia Malloy, daughter of David B. Malloy, a banker of Memphis, who died in 1873. To this union four children were born. In 1876 Judge Jackson married Miss Mary E. Harding, daughter of Geneal William G. Harding. Of this union three children survive. With the exception of Miss Elizabeth Jackson and William H. Jackson, who are in Europe, the children were at the bedside when the distinguished sufferer passed away.

JUSTICE JACKSON'S FUNERAL.

Services Attended by Many Distinguished Men.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 13.—The funeral of Justice Howell Edmunds Jackson occurred at Belle Meade, the famous home of his brother, General W. H. Jackson, six miles west of this city, in the presence of many distinguished men from a distance, and a very large concourse of personal friends. The services were conducted by Rev. J. H. McNeilly of the Presbyterian church, and Rev. R. Lin Cave of the Christian church.

CONFLICT LIKELY.

OMAHA, Aug. 13.—It now looks as if a conflict is inevitable between the Omaha police force and the A. P. A. faction, which claims authority under a recent law to appoint a new police force. Indications were that a compromise was probable, but the efforts of citizens, who deplore the present strife, to persuade the A. P. A. to submit the controversy to the supreme court, were of no avail. The A. P. A. board is appointing its force and assert they will take possession of city property by force. The police headquarters resembles a barracks. The disquieting rumors which are flying around, according to the police, is the basis for the precautions taken in protecting the headquarters from assault and capture in true feudal style. The door leading from the office into the police court and the door opening out into Jackson street from the captain's office have been with timbers so that neither of them could be forced without the use of a sledge hammer. The police are armed with their clubs and short handles, such as are used in pickaxes, and every one of them has a revolver. There are only 15 patrolmen doing duty on the streets of the city, the rest of the regular day force and some of the dog watch being used to protect the headquarters and the city hall. Captain Mosley said he did not anticipate any trouble but that it was deemed advisable to keep a force about the headquarters as a protection in case of an effort to take possession. The men will be kept on guard until the commission muddle is settled.

DIPLOMACY USELESS.

United States and Great Britain Urged to Send an Ultimatum to China.

TIEN TSIN, China, Aug. 13.—A meeting of the foreign residents of this city was held here. It was decided to communicate by cable the necessity of immediate intervention in China upon behalf the United States and British governments, and the following telegram was, according to a resolution by the meeting, addressed to The Associated Press as an expression of the sentiments of the foreign residents of Tien Tsin as an appeal to the people of the United States for assistance.

"The foreign community of Tien Tsin express sympathy with the friends of the Ku Cheng victims. They consider the Chinese officials guilty, and the British and Americans blame the continued apathy of their governments for the situation. They regard England's demands for an inquiry into the Ku Cheng massacre to be useless, for, as before, the officials will buy innocent heads as substitutes for the actual criminals. They protest that the Sezohnen commission implicated the officials of that province. England and America must send an ultimatum threatening reprisals.

"Diplomacy is useless. We implore attention.

German Pythians Won a Victory.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 13.—A special to The Wisconsin from Chicago says: German Pythians won a signal victory in the superior court over Blackburn, for refusal to adopt the English ritual. Waldeck lodge No. 136, sued the supreme lodge of Illinois, asking the court to enjoin it from taking away the lodge charter and to also issue a writ of mandamus compelling it to give up certain passwords. Judge Brentano rendered a decision in the plaintiff's favor.

CENT A MILE.

That Will Be the Rate From the West to the Chattanooga Dedication.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Aug. 8.—Colonel H. J. Schaliar, chairman of the committee on transportation of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military park dedication furnished the following in regard to the reduced railroad rates from all points:

The rates from Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul and all points in the Northwest will be 1 cent a mile. The rates for all points south of the Ohio river will also be 1 cent per mile, and the rates on Eastern lines leading out of New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Baltimore will be one and one-third fare for the round trip to points where they connect with northwestern and southwestern lines.

Cherokee Bill to Hang.

FORT SMITH, Ark., Aug. 13.—Cherokee Bill has been sentenced to be hanged on Tuesday, Sept. 10. Judge Parker's remarks were most severe, but they produced no effect on Cherokee Bill.

NOT FOR FREE SILVER

IOWA DEMOCRATS DECLARE FOR "SOUND MONEY."

The Fight Made by the Silver Men Was, However, Very Spirited—W. I. Babb of Mount Pleasant Nominated for Governor—Bestow for Lieutenant Governor.

MARSHALLTOWN, Ia., Aug. 8.—One of the most notable state conventions in the history of the Iowa Democracy closed in this city last evening. Since Monday there has been a bitter strife between the two opposing elements of the party—one contending for a ticket and platform on a "sound money" basis, the other clamoring for free coinage without waiting for an international agreement. From start to finish the white metal contingent did nearly all the talking, on the street, in hotel lobbies, at various headquarters, in committee rooms, caucusses and finally on the floor of the convention. By an apparently fortuitous incident the silver men had a fine chance to exploit their views in convention hall during the afternoon, from the fact that the resolutions committee on the financial plank that kept them in the committee room till nearly 4 o'clock, the currency resolution being overhauled and reconstructed two or three times before an agreement was reached, and the majority making persistent effort to avert the introduction of the minority report. During this interval the convention did nothing but listen to free silver speeches by radical white metal champions. The controversy grew warm and bitter, and when the minority report favoring free coinage was introduced another prolonged silver discussion was precipitated and for awhile the proceedings were tumultuous. The final roll call on the resolutions showed the white metal men defeated by a vote of 651½ to 420½. A large number of free silver delegates immediately left the hall, not waiting for the nominations.

Babb Named for Governor.

The state ticket was then nominated as follows:

For governor, Judge W. I. Babb, Mount Pleasant.

Lieutenant governor, S. L. Bestow, Chariton.

Railroad commissioner, Colonel George James, Dubuque.

Supreme judge, Senator Thomas G. Harper, Des Moines.

Judge Babb made a brief speech of acceptance, in which he said he only accepted because of repeated urging and his devotion to the party and its interests in the state in which he was born and raised.

The financial plank of the platform is as follows:

We hold to the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country and to coin both gold and silver without discrimination against either metal or charge for mintage; but the dollar unit of coinage of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, or be adjusted by international agreement or by such safeguards of legislation as shall insure the maintenance of the parity of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the payment of debts, and we demand that the paper currency shall be kept at par with and redeemable in such coin. We insist upon this policy as especially necessary for the protection of farmers and laboring classes, the first and most defenseless victims of unstable money and fluctuating currency.

The platform condemns the mulct law at present in force in Iowa and favors a high license law.

SILVERITES WIN.

Missouri Democratic Convention Declares for Free Coinage at 16 to 1.

PERTLE SPRINGS, Mo., Aug. 7.—Free silver has conquered in Missouri, as it did in Illinois, and the fears expressed that there would be strife and turmoil in the convention were not borne out by facts. The so-called gold or sound money adherents were so overwhelmed by the superior generalship and numerical strength of the free silver leaders and forces that they made but a very faint effort to stay the onslaught of the white metal adherents. Mr. Bland said, in opening the convention, that the Democrats of Missouri had assembled to adopt resolutions for the to select a state committee which was in sympathy with the popular will, and how well the prophecy was carried out the result of the convention tells. The report of the committee on permanent organization, which practically snows under the old committee, was adopted with but one or two dissenting votes, and the resolution for free and unlimited coinage at 16 to 1, regardless of any foreign nation, was carried with a hurrah and expedition seldom seen in any convention. Furthermore men were selected to nominate delegates favorable to silver to the national Democratic convention in 1896.

THE DEAL DROPPED.

Said the Hill-Adams Combine Will Soon Be Officially Declared Off.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 13.—A Tacoma special to the Tribune says: It is stated here in Northern Pacific circles that the Hill-Adams plan to reorganize the Northern Pacific is positively off, and that an authoritative statement to that effect will be made in New York very soon. High officials say the present earnings are sufficient to meet the interest on the first, second and third mortgage bonds, and that if the earnings continue to increase at the present rate they will be sufficient within a year to pay the interest on the entire present bonded indebtedness. This fact, they say, has been fully explained to J. Pierpont Morgan and Mr. Adams, with the result that their views have undergone a change. It is understood that Morgan approved the first plan, which had to be dropped. He has since expressed a willingness to join in a similar plan if it could be devised, but has not committed himself to the "third company" project as it stands. Adams is said to hold similar views. It is believed that within two weeks Hill's plan will be finally rejected and steps taken to form an independent reorganization.

The road is now earning money at the rate of $6,000,000 net per year, while between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000 would pay the interest on the entire bonded debt.

Northern Pacific men claim to believe that Hill's chief object is to get possession of the Northern Pacific's splendid coast terminal system.

THE LAW'S DELAYS.

Attorney Hildreth Hopes for a Third Trial for Kent.

FARGO, N. D., Aug. 13.—Apparently Attorney M. A. Hildreth, who defended Kent in his recent trial for the murder of Mrs. Kent, is not going to give up the fight for another trial for his client. Mr. Hildreth is sanguine that a new trial will have to be granted. In an interview the attorney said that if the case is taken to the supreme court and the verdict of the jury in the lower court is not reversed, application will be made to the United States courts, as a legal federal question is involved in the last trial, which would entitle the hearing of the case in that judiciary.

The Third Car Load.

On Thursday evening S. L. Collins will receive the third car load of Iowa horses, having sold every hoof of the two car loads that he had. If you are looking for a good animal to cut that grain with, better you get around to Collins' stables on Friday as he has had applications enough to take every horse before Saturday evening if everyone calls who has spoken to him for horses. If you buy a horse of a reliable dealer like Collins you make no mistake. Call early for choice.

THE STATE FAIR.

The State Fair that takes place from Sept. 9th to 14th inclusive promises to be of more than usual interest the farmers of Minnesota. Besides the many and varied attractions will be the state farmers institute which will be in session during the fair. The expenses of the week may also be made very light to all who choose to occupy tents that will be provided on the grounds. Two dollars covers the expense of admission to the grounds for the entire week.

Herman Rasmussen passed away at his residence in this city on Thursday last at 3 p. m., of consumption. Mr. R. came to this city seven or eight years since and after clerking in a hardware store a while embarked in the hardware business with his brother-in-law, C. W. Motz. Some two years ago the disease that carried him off began to develope and last year Mr. R. made a trip to California in hopes to find relief, but in vain, and this spring he returned. A few weeks ago he sold his interest in the hardware firm of Rasmussen & Motz to Mr. Motz and calmly awaited his dissolution, which came as above. He leaves a wife and three children to mourn his loss. The funeral sermon was preached at the Baptist church at 3 o'clock on Sunday, by Rev. C. T. Ilsley, to a large audience of sympathizing friends.

HEAVY GOLD WITHDRAWAL.

Treasury Reserve but a Little Above the Hundred Million Mark.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The treasury lost $1,650,000 in gold Monday for export to Europe, leaving the reserve only about $1,200,000 above the $100,000,000 point. The telegram which announced the withdrawal, reached the department just as it was closing. Mr. Curtis, the acting secretary, said he had nothing to say in regard to the matter. He had no specific information and could not say whether the syndicate would allow the $100,000,000 to be encroached upon or not. This heavy withdrawal has given rise to a report that another bond issue is impending, but there is now no one in Washington who can speak authoritatively on the subject or who has information not shared by the public. The best public opinion is that the syndicate will not allow the reserve to be encroached upon until Oct. 1, when, as generally understood, their obligation ceases.

May Go Pretty Low.

But, even in the event of still further withdrawals, it is believed that both Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Carlisle would see the reserve reach a point below anything that it has touched before they would take any steps to recoup it by another sale of bonds or purchase of gold. It is argued that the meeting of congress is now only 14 weeks off, and without any reasonable doubt the treasury, with an available cash balance of nearly $184,000,000 and the revenue slightly on the increase, can meet its obligations and have a comfortable balance remaining at the close of the calendar year. The best judgment obtainable here is that there will be no bond issue or extra session of congress, except in the event of continued heavy withdrawals, which are not looked for.

Carlisle Interviewed.

DULUTH, Aug. 13.—Secretary Carlisle, when shown the dispatch from Washington, relative to the treasury gold reserve by a representative of the Associated Press, refused to talk further than to say: "The people need have no apprehension as to the gold reserve, the treasury department will take care of that. Everything in that regard is all right."

GENERAL CAMPOS RESIGNS.

Urges Spain to Grant Cuba Self-Government.

It is generally believed that he strongly urges the home government to grant the Island of Cuba self-government.

SPANIARDS LOSING.

Cuban Advices Unfavorable to the Campaign.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The Times publishes a dispatch from Havana, dated Aug. 7, which says that General Moreno has assumed the chief command of the troops in the province of Santiago de Cuba. Insurgents are increasing in the province of Matanzas. The force of 1,360 soldiers and men of local volunteers from Havana, which has been drawn for actual service, causes the impression that the situation is more grave. The suppression of the news encourages the wildest rumors adverse to Spain. The recent Madrid appointments, giving all the posts of Cuba to Spaniards, is criticised as proof that Spain is determined not to allow Cubans any share in administration. The appointment of Cabezas as director of finance is especially deprecated.

SCIENCE OF MONEY.

Harvey's Subject at His Sixth Talk with Horr.

SOME MISTAKES IN COIN'S SCHOOL

Alleged by the Gold Champion, Who Declines To Be Limited in His Line of Argument to That of His Opponent on "Scientific Bimetallism," Which is Explained at Length—Pithy Points from the Day's Discussions.

[Copyright 1895, by Azel F. Hatch.]

The sixth session of the money debate began with Harvey on the floor, and he proceeded to make a statement reviewing from his standpoint the value of the fifth day's debate. He claimed that every material proposition he was contending for had been strengthened by what had been brought out. Horr then proceeded with the discussion. He said: "On yesterday Mr. Harvey stated that I had found but one error in the statements in his book, and he defied me to call attention to any other mistake that he had made. The mistakes that are made in Mr. Harvey's book are, many of them, not mistakes as to the words that he uses, but misleading inferences from positions which he takes. I will now in my opening remarks call some attention to what I mean. In your book, Mr. Harvey, you say: 'It is estimated by all men of judgment who have given practical attention to mining that the silver now in existence has cost not less than $2 per ounce, and many put it much higher.' You will find that in 'Coin's' book, page 74. I assert that silver has not cost that much for production because, silver has been constantly increasing in production at a low price, running from $1.20 an ounce down to 57 cents an ounce, and the people of the world never keep constantly producing an article at so much less than it costs them to produce it."

Horr said that if "Coin" was correct the silver men in three years lost $236,000,000. He didn't believe that men would continue at a business in which they lost nearly $80,000,000 a year. He then proceeded: "Again, Mr. Harvey says on page 39 of his book: 'There is in the world now, according to the report of the director of our mint, $3,727,018,869 in gold and $3,820,571,348 in silver.' The mint director didn't give that as the amount of silver and gold in the world at all. The director of the mint gave simply the amount of coin supposed to be then in existence. Mulhall, whom you refer to as good authority, gives the stock of gold coin and bullion in 1890 at six thousand million dollars, and the amount of silver at about six thousand million dollars.

"Coin tells us on page 53: 'We have in the United States in round figures $1,600,000,000 of all kinds of money.' The Statistical Abstract of the United States, page 80, says: 'The total amount is $2,420,000,000.' That gives one amount, you give another. You tell us, page 53: 'We are paying England $200,000,000 annually in gold in the payment of interest on our bonds, national and private bonds owned by her people.' I deny it and defy any proof that will show that we owe all the countries of Europe combined that much; that is, bonds that would require that much of interest to be sent abroad. You state that the indebtedness of the United States is forty thousand million dollars; that is, the people of this country, if that be true, owe nearly two-thirds as much as all the property in the United States is worth. I brand such a statement simply as false."

Harvey on taking the floor again said he would prove in the proper place that silver cost what he said it cost and foreshadowed that he was going to count in its cost all that had ever been spent prospecting or digging for it, whether profitably or not. Replying to Horr's comments as to the quantity of gold and silver in the world he said: "When he refers to the amount of gold and silver in the world he omits to say that my statistics gave the amount of gold and silver available for use as money. Its quantity for use as money is the subject we are interested in." He then produced a table showing the world's production of gold and silver for each year from 1849 to 1892, and for groups of years including the period from 1792 to 1848 inclusive. The grand total was, gold, $5,663,218,000; silver (coining value) $5,077,529,000. It showed that the silver produced in 1872 was (coining value) $65,250,000; that in 1878 it was $81,800,000, and that, generally increasing each year, it went on until the production for 1892 was $196,459,000. The figures are for the whole world, and are official.

The argument Harvey made on this table was: "Here we see that from 1792 to 1800 there was $3.25 in silver produced to $1 in gold, or a quantity ratio—ounce for ounce—of about fifty of silver to one of gold. And yet there was no fluctuation of the commercial with the legal ratio. For 328 years prior to 1873, as far back as we have statistics that are undisputed, the change in the relative quantity of relative production had no effect on their relative commercial value. But in twenty-two years demonetization has revolutionized the metallic currency of the world."

Harvey then challenged Horr to assign any other reason than overproduction for the break in the commercial parity of the two metals.

Referring to "scientific bimetallism" he recapitulated his statement of the fifth session, and added: "Excepting in the unit, there should be no discrimination between the two metals as they stand before the law. The right to make a contract to be liquidated in any specific property should not apply to money. All such contracts, when made payable in money, should call for 'lawful money.' To permit a raid to be made upon either gold or silver is to permit individuals or combinations of men to dictate to the government what should be legal tender money. The government is the creator of money, and the creator should regulate that which it creates. To make debts payable in one to the exclusion of the other is to make a greater demand for the one and to discredit the other; it is giving the individual a right to promote his selfish interests at the expense of the common good; to interfere with that which the law creates for the benefit of society."

Horr, in reply, resumed his comments on the "school." He said: "While discussing your visionary 'law of unlimited demand for silver by free coinage,' on pages 47 and 48 of your book, you make Mr. John R. Walsh, whom you represent as present in your school which never existed, ask 'How can the government by passing a law add a cent to the commercial value of any commodity?' You answer: 'Suppose,' said 'Coin,' 'that congress should pass a law tomorrow authorizing the purchase by the government of 100,000 horses, cavalry horses, of certain sizes and qualities. And the government entered the market to get these horses. Horses should advance in value. Not only the kind of horses desired but also other horses upon which there would be a demand to take the place of horses sold to the government. The government can create a demand for a commodity.' Now that answer has misled thousands of honest and unthinking people.

"You used this illustration to teach that free coinage would create an unlimited demand for silver and increase its value in the markets of the world. The horses would be bought, kept, and used by the government; and the price of them would be paid to those who sold them, in money. Under such coinage as you advocate silver would be received by the government, coined, and then, in effect, returned to the owner again. He might not get the same dollars made from the identical silver which he took to the mint, but he would get those coined from silver received and treated precisely as his was, so that he would practically get back the same thing. The only honest connection possible between your illustration and the truth would depend upon the government's branding each horse and returning him, or another horse of the same class which had been treated and branded in the same way, to the man who presented the horse for branding. Now, what influence would that have on the price of the horses? It would not increase the consumption nor would it affect the supply.

"Another item: The average price of wheat, as given on page 108 of 'Coin's School,' was 85 cents in 1891. The Statistical Abstract gives the New York price $1.09 in 1891, and the average price in Chicago in 1891 was 97 cents. If you are teaching the people the truth, explain this discrepancy. Again. In 1893, you state, the corn crop of Illinois was 180,000,000, which you teach to the people governed the price of corn in the United States that year, whereas the product of corn that year in the United States was 1,819,000,000 of bushels. Now what I want is, Brother Harvey, that you should tell us how that little tail in Illinois corn crop wagged the whole dog in the United States. In another portion of your book you state, at least by implication, that the farmer's products will not buy as much of all kinds of commodities, except labor, as in 1873. You do this on pages 121 and 123 of Coin's School. That statement is misleading and untrue. The farmers' products taken as a whole will buy as many things that the farmers need and use as the same products, all taken together, would have bought in 1873."

In reply Harvey said: "When he called your attention to the illustration in the 'School' of the government entering the market for horses Mr. Horr should have thought how the government fixes the price on gold. You take a certain quantity of gold to the United States mint and it is coined and given back to you in so much money. The price of gold as money is fixed. Now, we ask the same thing for silver, that's all. Now I proceed with the argument of what is scientific bimetallism. The option of the debtor to pay in either metal is a vital principle. Unlimited free coinage at the mints guarantees a substantial parity. But if, by reason of supply or a corner on one of the metals or from any other reason one of the metals is enhanced in value, the debtor exercises his option to pay in the other metal and this transfers the demand from the dearer metal to the cheaper metal."

Here Harvey quoted the Chicago Tribune of January, 1878, in which an editorial takes direct ground against a single standard for the reason that the debtor should be provided with an option as explained by Harvey. Harvey enumerated two kinds of money in use—one was "primary," the other "representative." Primary money was the measure of values. He proceeded: "When we have gold as real money, as we have now, our representative money is tied to it as the tail of a kite is fastened to a kite. We make it as good as gold only by fastening it to gold. Hence we now hear of a 50-cent silver dollar. Why? Because silver is being measured in gold, and so is all your property. We have 50-cent wheat and 5-cent cotton, and this relative decline is the same with all other property where its value is measured in the gold markets of the world, not affected by trust causes or a new use that has increased its demand. What reduced the prices was taking away one-half the real money. What will put it back is to restore that half of the money. Bear in mind one thing through this whole argument: that supply and demand regulate the value of money, the same as of all other property."

Horr proceeded "to take up the question as to why the people of the civilized world refuse to adopt Mr. Harvey's plan. I admit it, that the nations that first demonetized silver did so because they considered the mineral unstable, variable in price, and that afterwards the element of cheapness came in. The nations which acted later did it because silver was cheapening all the time, as an additional reason. In your book and yesterday in every statement you made you used the term that if 'the mints of the world' would give free and unlimited coinage to silver on a certain ratio, it could be maintained. I have not denied that. The question we are discussing is after the entire civilized world has refused to use silver as money of final redemption, and still refuses to use it, can the United States single-handed and alone afford to put itself upon a silver basis?"

Horr then adopted in his remarks "Coin's" table of the gold and silver production of the world, but only that part from 1874 to 1892 inclusive, and with the mint report of the production for 1893 and 1894 added, showing a pretty steady increase of production of gold and a production of silver (coining value) of $71,500,000 in 1874, increasing steadily to $214,881,000 in 1894. The gold production begins at $90,750,000 in 1874 and rises to $181,510,000 in 1894. Horr remarked: "Now this table shows that since 1874 the production of silver has been constantly on the increase. Gold has increased since 1873 from $90,750,000 worth in one year to $181,510,000—just about double. Silver in those same years has increased from $71,500,000 up to $214,881,000. While gold increased only twice, silver has increased just about three times."

Harvey began on taking the floor again by stating that all our forms of money have their value fixed by gold, and in reply to a question Horr said: "That is right," and Harvey proceeded: "Paper and token money, representing gold, do not affect the value of gold or property, except in the sense of facilitating exchange. They are each a medium of exchange but not a measure of value. There was no paper money in circulation in California between 1850 and 1878, and very little between 1873 and 1880. And yet between these years gold and silver prices were as high in California as they were with us. Mexico has no paper money, and yet wheat is worth there $1.30 per bushel in silver, and the equivalent of our gold price for wheat here, where we have paper money representing gold.

"Any one who denies the proposition that primary or real money alone is the measure of values is asked to consider this: With relative production of silver to gold since 1873 not accounting for the decline in silver since that year, why is it that silver is worth only 50 cents now as compared with 100 cents in 1873? And, if a change of our money measure to the gold standard has reduced the price of silver 50 per cent., what reason is there that it would not exert a similar influence on other property?"

Horr's rejoinder was: "Any business man will only need to look at the table of production of silver and gold since 1873 to be able to ascertain that the law which I partially illustrated yesterday operates in reference to silver as well as in reference to every other commodity. It is cheaper because the demand and the supply are in such relations to each other that it makes it cheaper, just as wheat has been cheaper, and for the same reason.

"Prices are not governed or controlled by the amount of primary money in any country or in the whole world, so far as I know. Why, when we passed the law of 1873 there was at that time only about one hundred thirty-five millions of gold in the country—all the primary money we had. If his doctrine is true prices should have been doubled instantly. Ah, but here is the trouble with your mathematics. If your doctrine is true every product in this country should have been reduced in price by this cheapening of silver."

Harvey said: "Silver is not now primary money," and Horr went on: "Silver is not primary money, and under his doctrine, because primary money has been reduced in that way one-half, all prices should be reduced one-half. Have they been? Has corn depreciated that way? Has pork depreciated? Has cattle depreciated that way? Over one-half of the farm products of the United States are as high now as they were in 1873, a fact which could not be true if his doctrine as to the appreciation of the measure of value is true; prices would necessarily be split in two. Now the difficulty is, articles are cheapened by the processes of production. The price of an article is always fixed by the absolute cost of production—to the concern producing it, which does it at the highest price at which it can stay in the business after the price is fixed.

"For instance, we had been paying years ago $1 a pound, and a good deal more, for aluminium. It used to cost that in actual work in expense to get a pound of it. Now aluminium is without limit in the crust of the earth almost. It used to cost so much to separate it that it was worth more than gold. Now we have been cheapening the production of aluminium until it is down to perhaps 40 or 45 cents a pound. Now mark—when some person (and it will be done) shall discover a method of reducing aluminium so that it can be made for 10 cents a pound the price of aluminium will not go down to 10 cents a pound at first, or anywhere near it. The man making the discovery will hold the price up as high as he can keep it, and that is always at the highest point that it costs any of the man who still stay in the business to make it."

In reply Harvey said he would fully debate this question later "in its proper place," but "just give you this to think about meantime: Between 1850 and 1873 we had a great era of improved facilities. Even the harvesters were all invented and in use before 1878, and yet prices were rising. Improved facilities increased constantly and at the same time prices were rising. If 371¼ grains of silver is now only worth 50 cents why is not the gold in the gold dollar only worth 50 cents, if you are right about your cheap cost of production.

"In 1867 all the money in circulation was per capita $18 28. At that time all money was primary money—the measure of values was paper money itself. In 1873 the per capita of all money in circulation was $18.19, and all of it was primary money. In 1894 we had a per capita circulation of primary and credit money combined of $24.23." The reason why prices were not higher, as they should have been in 1894 than in 1873, was that of the $24 per capita only $8 was primary money, said Harvey.

Horr rejoined: "I am very much surprised to hear my friend say that we were getting along well during the years of suspension of specie payment when we used entirely money that on its face had to be redeemed. His definition of primary money was money of redemption. Every greenback has to be redeemed to make it good. It is not primary money."

Horr went on to say that it was the old greenback cry that the whole business hung on the amount per capita in circulation, and intimated that Harvey would have been a Greenbacker. Horr did not believe this doctrine; he believed the quality of the money had much to do with the matter. "This country was never more prosperous than from 1879, as I told you yesterday, up to 1892. There is not a man living who can take the statistics and prove that we were not doing well as a nation during all those years."

Horr then asked Harvey who were, among the peoples of the earth, followers of the silver idea, and enumerated China, Mexico, the South American States, etc., saying that the most progressive of those peoples were adopting the gold standard.

Harvey denied the greenback imputation and declared he had never written anything to justify such an imputation. The reason the civilized nations were adopting gold was that they were being tricked. That was the way the money power had destroyed the Roman empire. He then proceeded with the "scientific bimetallism" argument and said: "Credit money represents primary money. If a bank issues it, it is expected to redeem it in primary money, if the government issues it, it is expected in like manner to redeem it."

The government, however, should not issue it to an extent greater than it was possessed of primary money to redeem it with. He declared that a nation that borrowed from foreign nations was in process of decay and only exceptional statesmanship and vigorous action could save such a nation from financial revolution and disaster.

This ended the debate for the day and it was adjourned to Thursday.

The Fire on Both Sides at the Silver Debate.

SEVENTH DAY OF THE DISCUSSION.

Harvey Further Elucidates the Principle of Scientific Bimetallism, and Claims That $4,800,000,000 in Primary Money Is Needed to Do Business in This Country on a Safe Basis—Horr Goes Largely Into Comparative Prices of Products.

[Copyright, 1895, by Azel F. Hatch.]

In opening the seventh day's debate on silver Horr referred to a statement made by Harvey that silver dollars of 412½ grains standard silver were coined in 1874 and 1874 for the people of Nevada, Colorado and perhaps California out of silver produced in the United States and under the free coinage law. Horr said he could not understand how it could be as 412½ grains of silver were worth more uncoined then coined at that time. Horr added that he had hunted the matter up and found that the truth was this: "Congress had previously provided that certain foreign silver coins should be redeemable at the treasury and the several postoffices and land offices of the government, at a certain fixed valuation. In the second section of the act of February 21, 1857, congress provided: 'And be it further enacted that the said coins when so received shall not again be paid out or put into circulation, but shall be recoined at the mint.' And then the director of the mint also tells us that over $5,000,000 of silver had accumulated in the mints found in the gold during the process of assaying it. The silver dollars which you tried to account for were all coined at the mint in Philadelphia, and not from the silver taken to the mint by our producers at all. I give my authority as the report of the mints of the United States. And I defy my friend Harvey to show any instance from the report of the entire mints where after 1858 a dollar of our American product was ever received for free coinage in any mint in the United States."

Harvey replied: "Mr. Horr has persistently quoted in this debate authorities which he has not produced here in this room. I want that impressed on the mind of the public. He has just made a statement with reference to the coinage of silver dollars that I deny, and he cannot produce the authority here to prove what he has said. I will only answer it incidentally, but sufficiently. I hand Mr. Horr the report of the director of the mint for 1892, and call his attention to 412,462 silver dollars coined at the mint at Carson City, Nev., in the year 1870." He then proceeded with the argument in relation to primary and credit money, prefacing his remarks with the statements that the change to gold standard."

[If should be stated that Harvey has his whole argument prepared—written—and at hand. Each chapter of his book is taken up in its order and discussed. All this matter was gotten up before the debate began and the authorities he depends on are placed in their order among his manuscript. Horr speaks without notes and jumps from one part of the "School" to another as he finds something he takes issue with.]

Harvey then proceeded with his argument in order, taking it up where he dropped it Tuesday afternoon. He said: "An over-issue of credit money creates a lack of confidence in the ability of the government to redeem it, and a strain on its primary money begins. In other words, it causes a run on the government for the redemption of its credit money. This forces the government to issue bonds to borrow primary money. So long as this unhealthy relative proportion of credit money to primary money continues the run on the treasury will continue and the borrowing by the government must continue. And the more it borrows the greater the strain, as the interest on bonds demanded in primary money will be an additional strain. This is what Mr. Cleveland calls 'an endless chain.' If at a period like the present, when gold only is by law primary money, we increase the stock of credit money by issuing more paper money, or by coining more silver as credit money (the way in which it is now treated), we increase the strain on gold and hasten the financial chaos that must come. The quantity of gold now in the United States is variously estimated at from $400,000,000 to $600,000,000. The quantity of credit money outstanding is about $1,000,000,000. Hence a surplus of from $400,000,000 to $600,000,000 of credit money is now in circulation, and the run on the United States treasury must continue till the credit money is reduced to the quantity of gold in the country, or the stock of primary money is increased.

"Each time a government gold loan is made with, say, the Rothschilds behind the treasury, temporary confidence will be restored and prices will advance. The government supplying itself with gold causes the gold hoarders in the United States to let their gold out. But as the golden sand in the hour glass at Washington runs out again, as it must, a scare returns, gold hoarding begins again, the demand for gold increases, and prices correspondingly fall. The end is national bankruptcy. To correct this system is national prosperity."

Horr then showed that Harvey had mistated the facts when he said 412,462 silver dollars had been coined in the Carson mint in 1870, and that it was 12,462, Harvey having read the dollar mark as a figure "4." Harvey admitted this, and Horr went on: "Now this mint report which he handed me shows that after 1870 up to 1874, in the entire mint in Carson City there were only coined 19,288 of the old silver dollars. The mint report will show that those were coined from the silver accumulated in assaying the gold taken to that mint. I now proceed to state that up to this moment Mr. Harvey has not said one word upon the real question in debate. He spent hours to prove that the law of 1873 was conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity. I gave a short succinct history of the origin of the bill and the steps taken in its passage. He has not successfully controverted a single statement of mine. He has nowhere proven any act of bribery or the influence of money in a single step taken during the progress of that bill through congress. He has printed long tables to prove that when the entire world, except England, was attempting to control the price of silver by legislation, they succeeded in keeping the legal price within five cents on the dollar of the market or commercial price, and that generally the variation between the market price and the legal price was only about two points.

"I have shown that a variation of one quarter of one point has thus far been sufficient to drive the dearer metal from every country in the world. But suppose we admit that by the concerted action of these countries, including all Europe, except England, they did prevent, with the conditions that existed in those days, a variation of more than two points between the legal and commercial ratio, that does not help Mr. Harvey in this debate in the least. That does not tend to show that the United States government alone with the entire civilized world refusing free coinage of silver and when the difference between the commercial ratio; and the legal ratio is 16 points, can restore the old ratio. It proves that if the combined action of the civilized world, except Great Britain, with the half civilized nations—all that have silver working to help them—could not maintain a parity between the legal and commercial ratios when the production of gold and silver were nearly the same, now when the production of silver has increased twice as fast as that of gold it is folly to claim that this nation alone can restore that old ratio.

"Mr. Harvey admits as much when he provides for cutting down the size of the gold dollar. He has not had the hardihood to claim that the United States alone can restore the old ratio. I think he does not desire to have any such thing occur. He says reduce the size of the gold dollar—tells us that the gold dollar has been constantly advancing in price, and that the silver dollar has remained stationary. He says over and over again that an ounce of silver will exchange for as much of human productions today as it ever would. Now, my proposition is that gold has remained nearly stationary in price since 1873, and that silver has fallen in price in accordance with the great law of supply and demand."

Harvey began on taking the floor by saying: "The table on production of silver for the world shows the world's production in 1860 to have been $40,800,000, and that the production increased each year till 1872, twelve years later, when it was $65,250,000. Here was an increase of 84 per cent. in twelve years in the production of silver. Now if you are right, why did not this increase break down the price of silver from 1860 to 1873? And before you answer I call your attention to the twelve years, 1872 to 1884, when the increase is 63 per cent., 1 per cent. less than the previous twelve years, during which time the price of silver had fallen 17 per cent."

Horr said he would take time to think over that question, and Harvey continued: "Mr. Horr challenged me to show where any dollars were coined outside of the Philadelphia mint. I did that. Now I want to say to Mr. Horr, while disputing all that he has said, that the silver derived from gold in refining gold at the mints was not coined into dollars, but was coined into fractional silver. Suppose a man in Nevada had a lot of silver bullion and wanted it coined in those years into silver coin. Now 2 or 3 per cent. premium for silver would be no inducement to that man to ship that bullion to London—that is where this premium was; it wasn't here nor in New York. The freight and insurance and expressage would more than consume that 2 or 3 per cent., not to speak of his being out of the use of his money in the meantime. Hence he would take it to the United States mint and have it coined into money that he could use immediately."

Resuming the matter of credits Harvey said: "To say there is $4,800,000,000 deposited in the banks is today at the same time the banks are drawing interest on $3,300,000,000 of it. It works this way: A deposits $10,000 in a bank. B borrows the $10,000 from the bank, but does not take the money; it is placed to his credit. Now the $10,000 has swollen to $20,000 on deposit. The $10,000 is still in the bank. C comes in and borrows it, and places it to his credit. Now there is $30,000 on deposit. Interest is being paid on $20,000 of it. A has $10,000 to his credit, the capital in his business, on which he is paying up interest. B and C have each $10,000 to their credit as capital in their business, and they are both paying interest."

Horr took the floor with the remark that he would discuss that later "in its regular order" and proceeded: "It is all idle talk, Brother Harvey, about silver costing $2 an ounce. To add to the cost of producing an article all the money that has been lost in mining speculations and gambling is too ridiculous to announce as an economic proposition. There are mines in the United States that can produce silver, and save money, at 15 cents an ounce—large mines that are doing that very thing today."

He then quoted M. L. Scudder, who, naming the mines and having seen the books, said silver was produced in one mine at a fraction over 13 cents and in another at 24 cents an ounce.

Harvey rejoined: "What Mr. Horr has said about the cost of producing silver he could have said with a great deal more force about the cost of producing gold. Gold, dollar for dollar, costs a great deal less than silver does." He then read from Del Mar on the History of Money: "Apart from other considerations there can be but little doubt that the average cost of producing a pound of silver, from the beginning of the world to the present time, has been far greater than that of producing a pound of gold." He then told of the uncertainties of silver mining—how you never know just "where you are at," as it were; how we all know that of 100 of our friends who may go into silver mining, ninety-nine come back "broke." He said that the mines continued to produce because men would gamble—risk their money on the hope of making a fortune suddenly, and because a large per cent. of the product of the mines is gold. Only three or four silver mines are left in the United States that are paying. To Scudder's statements he replied by declaring that Scudder was a fraud, who was sent out to Colorado to defame his own country, the willing servant of the National Banking association.

Horr denied that it cost as much to get a pound of silver as a pound of gold. It had not been done for many thousand years. Del Mar would show the separation in value from 4 to 1 down. "The gap has always been widening and silver has always been getting cheaper. So has gold." He then took up the question of the effect of demonetization on the farmer: "Brother Harvey, in Monday's debate stated that owing to the resumption of specie payments from 1873 to 1879 the silver legislation of 1873 did not affect prices very much until 1879. To measure the effect of silver legislation, then, upon the farmer I will compare the value of their crops before and since 1879. I will compare the five years from 1875 to 1879 with the five years from 1890 to 1894. I will use the home value of the crop, or the value of the same to the farmers, and begin with the largest and most important crop of the land, a crop which is worth more to the producers than any other two. I refer to corn. In the five years, 1875–1879, there was raised in the United States an average annual crop of 1,176,715,000 bushels, for the five years a total of $2,533,820,163 in currency. This is an average of 86.8 cents a bushel in currency or 35 cents in gold. In 1890 to 1894 they were raising annually on an average 1,609,170,837 bushel with a total value of $3,379,384,093 for the five years, which is 42.1 cents per bushel. Here is an advance in gold of 7.1 cents a bushel between the two years."

Harvey replied: "As to corn. (See statistical abstract, page 284) For 1872 we produced in the United States 1,092,719,000 bushels of corn. We then had a population of 40,596,000. In 1894 the United States produced 1,212,770,052 bushels, with a population of 68,275,000. For 1872, 24½ bushels per capita; for 1894, 17¾ bushels per capita. Seven bushels less per capita in 1894 than in 1872.

"Take it another way. The number of farm animals (corn-eating animals) in the United States for the years 1872 and 1895 is shown by the same statistical abstract, pages 293 and 294, and by taking the corn crop for these two years, as shown on page 284, we find that there were ten bushels of corn to each animal for the year 1872, and only 7½ for each animal for 1894." The uses of corn had also vastly multiplied in the intervening years.

Horr then proceeded with the value of farm products: "In 1875 to 1879 the nation raised each year an average crop of 371,787.78 bushels of oats; they were worth during those five years $5,835,065.04, or 31¼ cents per bushel in currency, or 29.8 cents in gold. In 1890 to 1895 the average annual oat crop was 644,783,355 bushels, with a total value for those five years of $1,066,207,376, or 34.4 cents a bushel in gold. These figures show that the greatest cereals have not been decreased in price by the legislation of 1873. Silver has been constantly going down, corn and oats are higher in gold value than they were in the five years previous to 1879.

"I will now refer to wheat. The price of wheat was depressed because it was so largely exported. The value of the other grain was maintained, yes advanced, because corn and oats are mainly marketed upon the farms upon which they are raised. Let us now strike a balance for these great cereals in the United States. The United States from 1875 to 1879 produced of corn, oats and wheat an annual average of 2,111,535,219 bushels, with an annual average value in currency of 46.7 cents a bushel, or 44.4 cents in gold. From 1890 to 1894 they raised an average crop of 2,723,637,220, with an average value of 44.4 cents a bushel. This is exactly the same as the gold average for the years before the silver legislation; before, according to Brother Harvey, the effect began to be felt in the prices of the United States."

Harvey replied by stating that a farmer in Mexico sells wheat in London at $1.25 per bushel in silver and pays $1.25 of debt. We sell our wheat at London at 65 cents, and can pay no more than 65 cents worth of debt with it. He then said that the question of the amount of money needed in this country was an important question and figured it at $4,800,000,000. This was primary money. He ridiculed the confidence idea.

Horr took up the statement about the Mexican farmer and his wheat. He said the Mexican who sold his wheat got Mexican money. The American got American money. The latter could go to Monterey and depositing the dollars he got for his wheat get just twice as many Mexican dollars therefor. Harvey objected as to the American farmer that he could not pay so much debt with the money he got and Horr said he would come to that later.

He said: "In 1873, when this act passed, calicoes averaged 11½ cents a yard. The farmer can buy it now for 5½ cents, cheapened not by cutting in two the measure of value, for we have the same measure of value we had then, but cheapened by the great law of cheaper production. A reaper which then cost $170 can be bought today for $70. A mower which cost $90 then can be bought now for $45,"—and so on. "Silver has been cheapened in precisely the same way. So have iron, copper, lead, aluminium and every other leading commercial article."

Harvey said: "You may cheapen a thing with reference to the time required to produce it, but if the man that handles the machinery that does it does not get enough for the work to hold him up as a responsible citizen in the community, wherein does your cheapening process help him any?" Horr had not mentioned the property most in demand in the world—money. All these things Horr had enumerated would only bring half as much money. Legislation had been in the interest of men owning money.

Horr then put in a table giving the prices of nine agricultural products, including wheat and cotton, prepared by the agricultural department, showing that from 1875-9 to 1890-4 the prices had not declined.

Horr further proceeded to quote statistics to show the increase of wealth in the United States between the years in consideration. Harvey replied: "He said that we had increased in wealth. Nobody disputes that. Now does our increase in wealth go to show that my proposition was not true that the owners of money and securities are exchanging their property and absorbing yours?"

Horr then went back to the question asked by Harvey as to why the increase of the production of silver from $10,800,000 in 1860, to $65,250,000 in 1872 had not affected the price, while a slightly less increase from 1872 to 1884 had caused the price to fall 17 per cent. He said: "The reason why silver did not fall between 1860 and 1873 was because of the enormous demand for it in the Orient. Mulhall (page 809) gives the imports to India alone from 1860 to 1870 at $590,000,000, while from 1870 to 1880 she took only $250,000,000. The entire production of silver from 1860 to 1870 was $500,000,000, and was utterly absorbed by India alone, while the production from 1870 to 1880 was $655,000,000 more than India absorbed."

He said the demand for silver had not decreased since demonetization and to prove it said we alone had coined $600,000,000 since 1872. In reply to the Sauerbeck table he said it was made up for England "a country where nobody claims, who knows anything about it, that the laboring men have the comforts of life that they have here in the United States."

Harvey closed the day's debate with a philippic against the money power which, he said, was dominating the world. He said: "We are making in the United States today the last stand of freemen in the civilization of the world. That same money lending influence arose two thousand years ago and struck down civilization."

At the close a number of questions were asked and when that was completed the deb[illegible] adjourned to Saturday, July 27, [illegible] request.

Great Chicago Silver Debate Nearly at an End.

EIGHTH MEETING OF THE TALKERS.

Wide Range of Subjects Tackled by the Two Champions—Prices of Products and Labor, Banks, Indebtedness of the People, Failures and Panics, Some of the Matters Disputed Over—"Unit" Dollar Presented to Horr by Harvey.

[Copyright, 1895, by Azel F. Hatch.]

The two disputants in the silver debate in beginning the eighth day's discussion showed an inclination to "get together" in proposition and reply, and instead of Harvey discussing one thing while Horr was discussing another their argument was confined more closely to the same phase of the question. At the commencement of the session Horr had the floor. He stated that "when you take all the human productions together with the great product known as human labor, gold has not appreciated in value since 1873, and when measured in human toil it has depreciated; that after twenty years under a gold standard in this country the farmer can purchase with the products of his farm more of the things which he needs to buy to-day, than he could in 1873. More than that, I state that when the entire products of the farm are taken into account they will bring as much money of final redemption as they would have brought in 1873."

He then introduced as part of his case the table compiled for the finance committee of the United States senate under the direction of Carroll D. Wright, national commissioner of labor. The table shows the cost of several classes of products, the average wages of men who worked at all kinds of labor, from 1860 up to 1890, and is computed on the plan of starting in 1860 with 100 as the basis. This table gives the average of all prices as follows: 1860, 100; 1865, 216 8; 1870, 142.3; 1875, 127.6; 1880, 106.9; 1885, 93; 1890, 92.3. Average of wages: 1860, 100; 1865, 143.1; 1870, 162 2; 1875, 158 4; 1880, 141.5; 1885, 150.7; 1890, 158.9. Purchasing power of wages: 1860, 100; 1865, 66; 1870, 114 1; 1875, 124.1; 1880, 132.8; 1885, 162; 1890, 172.1.

Proceeding to argue from these figures Horr said: "You will notice that in 1865 the prices were nominally high on account of their being given in the cheap money used in this country at that time. In 1865 the greenback, in which we were measuring values, was worth only 49½ cents on the dollar. All prices had advanced when named in paper money to 216 8. Wages had advanced to 143 1 per cent., but owing to the unusual advance in the price of products and of wages the purchasing power of wages was only 66. We resumed specie payments in 1879; by that time the high prices had fallen off; that is the nominal prices, because the measure in which they had been valued had been advancing all the while on account of the paper money which we were using as the measure constantly appreciating in value until it finally reached par with gold.

"At that time prices as compared with 1860 were as 106.9 to 100, and wages were as 141.5 to 100, showing that the wage-earners received much better pay than they received in 1860. But the purchasing power of wages was 132.8 instead of 100, Labor was better paid and men enjoyed the necessaries and comforts of life to an enormously greater degree, notwithstanding silver had at that time declined from 100 to 84 7. In 1870 the average of all prices was 142 3; wages 162.2, and the purchasing power of greenbacks was 114.1. In 1890 prices were 92.3, wages 158.9, and their purchasing power in gold 172.1, showing that the wage earner for his day's work got one and nearly three-fourth times as much of the things he needed in 1890 as he could have got in 1860."

Horr then referred to a table presented by Harvey, compiled by Sauerbeck for a London society of statisticians. This table showed the prices of forty-five articles in London, including silver, and made out an average decrease from 1873-87 to 1885-94 of about 12 per cent. Horr said the senate finance committee based the table he had quoted on 226 articles used in the United States. He said he would print as part of his remarks a list of sixty-five of the articles used in the senate committee's table. Among them are the following: Beans, bread, butter, coffee, fish, lard, pork, beef, mutton, sugar, potatoes, cotton, woolen and cotton cloths, carpets, hides, leather, coal, iron, copper, lead, nails, knives, saws, scythes, shovels, brick, silver, lumber, chairs, tables, soap and flour.

Horr said it was better to select data from the United States than England. What they were after was to find out how this law (demonetization) affected the people here, and what would be the effect of free silver here.

Harvey took up the debate by quoting from Horr that the average price of wheat from 1875 to 1879 was 99.8 cents a bushel, and that corn, oats and wheat brought as much gold in the five years past as they brought in the five years previous to 1879. Harvey read from the same table quoted by Horr showing the prices for the years 1890-94 inclusive, which averaged 66 6 cents per bushel for wheat. He then defended the Sauerbeck table, saying: "It shows the decline in prices of all those articles that seek the world's markets, such as our wheat and our cotton. The London price of wheat affects the price of our wheat on the Chicago market."

Of the senate committee table Harvey said its compilers were "not free from a desire to make as good a showing as they possibly could for prices in the United States. When it is known that Edward Atkinson was one of the men who assisted in making it one can judge of the bias that enters into it." The senate report was made in 1891, when it was supposed prices had touched their lowest point, and yet it showed a decline in prices below those of 1872 of 30 per cent., and below 1860 of 8 per cent. He then submitted a table, comparing those of the senate committee, Sauerbeck and Soetbeer, showing a decline in prices between 1872 and 1891 from 133.8 to 92 2 by the senate report; from 109 to 72 by Sauerbeck, and from 135.62 to 109 19 by Soetbeer.

Harvey added: "We thus see by all of these tables that prices are lower than in 1850. These tables all prove the enormous purchasing power of money when exchanged for property, and the small amount of money property will buy when exchanged for money." Referring to Horr's "unit of human toil," Harvey then quoted Horr, replying in the New York Tribune to a correspondent who suggested that a day's work be called a unit of measure, and that it be called a dollar. Horr was quoted as replying that the idea was "so absurd that I can hardly treat it soberly." Harvey said the same reply would do for Horr's idea.

In conclusion Harvey said: "The gold standard men are constantly pointing to the gold dollar as being worth 100 cents as measured in itself. It is a self-evident proposition, as measured in itself it is worth 100 cents."

Horr said Harvey had not quoted the Tribune reply fairly, only giving part thereof. He said he was replying to a man who did not believe in either gold or silver as money, but in "fiat" money—the old greenback idea. What he (Horr) wrote about his correspondent's theories being absurd was not in reference to his measure of value, but to his whole scheme—fiat money. Here Horr charged Harvey with being anarchistic and socialistic, Harvey indignantly repudiated the charge.

Horr then took up the subject of banks, prefacing it it with the declaration that no country in the world had been as prosperous as the United States since 1873. Banks, he said, when well organized, were a blessing to every community in which they were located. By their aid a dollar did more than twenty dollars used to do. By their aid exchanges were made with the use of very little money. Less than five per cent. of exchanges in civilized countries was made with money. He had seen that fact established in the New York Clearing House.

Harvey in replying referred to his estimate of the normal supply of money ($4,800,000,000) needed in the United States, and now to show the difference between "having the money in existence and having the banks supply it," he presented a table of failures (Dun & Co.'s), showing the number per year and amount of liabilities from 1857 to 1894 inclusive. Of the table he said: "It shows that during the years of the war, when there was plenty of money, making about $40 per capita, the number of business failures was reduced to a minimum. See how the contraction of the currency, beginning in 1866, increased the failures. Follow it along down the years to 1894, and note its ravages as demonetization and bank were substituted for real money. Notice credit, with their terrible tax on the people, the failures prior to 1862, when bank credit was supplying the people with money. Look at its terrible ravages in the last ten years; 115,000 business concerns have gone into bankruptcy. I do not mean to say that all these failures are to be attributed to this cause, but I do mean to say that the credit system of money, with its tax of $200,000,000 annually, will account for every dollar involved in those failures."

Pausing long enough to introduce as part of the discussion a table on pages 186 to 194, American Statistical association publication, vol. II, date 1890-91, giving the total business population of the United States and the total number of business firms dropping out of business, Harvey gave figures showing the number of railways, July 20, 1895, in the hands of receivers, the increase of the number of tenant farmers between 1880 and 1890 and said that in 1880 25.62 per cent. and in 1894 34.13 per cent. of the farms were cultivated by tenants; also a census bulletin giving the number of tenant families in New York city and immediately surrounding municipalities at 81.54 per cent. and this he charged to the financial legislation he was opposing.

Horr returned to the bank question and admitted that the quantity of gold in the world had not increased as fast as the business of the world, but methods had been devised by which $100 in gold would do now as much business as $2,000 used to do. This diminished the demand for the actual metal. He illustrated this by comparing the work done by water power with one mill on a stream and an undershot wheel, and that done by mills all along the stream at successive falls, using turbine wheels.

Turning to the subject of debt he said Harvey based "his new philosophy entirely upon the theory that the people of the world are mostly in debt. It does not occur to him that the debtors and creditors, when you speak of sums of indebtedness, are always precisely the same."

Harvey replied to the mill argument by saying: "Money is a stream. Suppose that along that stream manufactories had been erected, and all had adjusted themselves to the quantity of water, and suddenly one-half of that water is taken out of the stream, what is the effect? Let me draw another illustration from the gentleman's figure; Suppose we were by laws to give rights to men living along the banks of that stream of water, to store it away, draw it out and put it in great reservoirs, and rent it to the manufactories and business houses along that stream that had adjusted themselves to the use of it, requiring them to pay a toll for the use of that water—then you would have our present banking system."

Harvey then put in a table giving homicidal statistics of the country from 1882 to 1890 inclusive, showing that they increased from 1,467 to 5,906; another table showing the immigration from 1882 to 1894 inclusive; another giving the number of inmates of penitentiaries, jails, and insane asylums, and the number of suicides, 1880 and 1890, and the number of suicides for each year from 1889 to 1894 inclusive—all showing a great increase. Commenting thereon he said history told us that all republics had fallen, and this would fail unless we taught ourselves to diagnose national disease. When by a false money measure the people were deprived of their property, monarchy becomes a necessity.

Horr took up the table of failures Harvey had put in. He referred to 1857 and 1893; the former year was one of fearful panic. We were then, according to Harvey, on a double standard basis. In 1893 we were on a gold basis, and that, according to Harvey, was the cause of the panic. Horr said one cause of the latter panic was the free silver propaganda. The total liabilities in 1857 amounted to $10 per capita under double standard. The per capita in 1893 was $5.25 under a gold standard. In closing Thursday's debate Harvey had laid the crucifixion of Jesus Christ to the money power of that day. "He forgot that the only man that betrayed our Saviour was Judas Iscariot, the only silver man of the entire tribe, and what is remarkable he insisted on a ratio of thirty to one.

Replying to Harvey's mill illustration Horr said that if half the water could be spared, and there still be enough to do the business, it wouldn't make a particle of difference.

Harvey then recurred to the panic of 1857. He said that was caused by the bank credit system, and under that system we would always have panics. He then proceeded to give figures for his claim that the United States owes $40,000,000,000—not the government, but the people, and gave items from the Bankers' Magazine, including state, municipal and railway bonds, mortgages of various kinds, and bank, etc. loans and discounts, aggregating $19,000,000,000, and said the balance could be easily figured as "short time" debts, which Horr himself said were vastly greater than long time debts.

Harvey then referred to Horr's contention that falling prices were the result of improved facilities for production, and said improved facilities did not lower prices. It was the supply produced and the demand for it that regulated prices. To illustrate it he said: "Suppose a widow owning a farm receives the voluntary assistance of her neighbors to raise and harvest her wheat crop, will her wheat be worth any less/than the price fixed by the quantity of wheat in existence known to traders, and the estimated demand for it."

Continuing he said that if the whole corn crop of this country, except Iowa, were destroyed, the price of the Iowa crop would not be governed by the cost of production, and so on. If improved facilities resulted in an oversupply of anything the price would fall. It was all supply and demand; "the cost of production has nothing to do with with it." But if it be said that improved facilities always result in lower prices, then such facilities are being applied to all products including gold and silver. "And if it increases production, both in the things to be measured and the product in which they are measured, the exchangeable value of the two would remain substantially unchanged."

Horr attacked the the theory that the business of the country depends on the circulation per capita, and presented a table showing the per capita for all the leading nations of the world, and said that France had $36.81 per capita, but her bank system was nothing to compare with that of Great Britain; Germany only had $13.56, and her greatest writer said she was crippled for want of banks; Great Britain had $20.44, but business was readily done because of her banking system; we had 26 02 and there were hundreds of millions of money lying idle because there was nobody to use it; Sweden had but $2.71 and there was no complaint of scarcity of money there.

Banks did not make money in panic times, nor a great deal when interest is high; it was when business was active, interest low and deposits increasing. A great part of the money in this country could not be used without banks. Money was deposited in banks so that it could be be used in business. "The banks pay interest to depositors in most instances, and they make the money of depositors earn an enormous sum, millions upon millions each year, that they would never get a cent for but for the banks investing it and paying them interest on these deposits. They can't pay interest on deposits if they don't get some interest themselves."

Harvey then took the floor and commented on the claim that the wages of labor had increased. He said there were two classes of labor—one that produced something and sold it itself, and one that sold its services to somebody else. In the first class was the farmer, the village tanner, the cobbler, etc. The other class was called wage-earners and was divided into two groups—organized and unorganized; the last included store clerks, office help, etc., and owing to the gold standard. Store clerks, for instance, were getting $5 and $7 per week, where in 1873 they got $12 and $15. In this group of laborers the reduction in wages had been carried to the point of bare subsistence, and in many instances beyond that.

Organized labor, however, fought out the matter with its employers and either gained its point or inflicted such an injury as to make it feared in the future. It this way organization had prevented wages from declining. Such organization would exist and had a right to exist, but our civilization should make it unnecessary.

Horr then attacked the statement in the "School" that foreigners own real estate, personal property, bonds, stocks and mortgages in the United States to the amount of ten thousand million dollars. He said there was not a shadow of authority for that statement, and explained apropos of the $40,000,000,000 debt matter. that the "short time" debts he referred to were those accumulating every day in wages, salaries, etc.

Harvey, resuming his discussion of the wages of labor, read a letter from Thomas I. Kidd, general secretary of the Machine Wood Workers' union, in which it was stated that for work in Omaha in 1880 carpenters got $3.75 per day, while the average now was less than $2. In Chicago wages had fallen from $3.75 to $1.75 and less. Kidd adds that what the laborer saves by cheaper clothes, etc., is more than offset by rent alone and "then, again, the American mechanic is a greater consumer than he was thirty years ago. Articles that were luxuries then are almost indispensable to his health and comfort now." Harvey gave the report of the labor commission for 1890 to show that in 67 pig iron establishments the men averaged $1 63 per day, working only 178 days a year.

Referring to tenancy he said he would in a similar debate to this take the affirmative of the proposition. "That twenty million acres of land in the United States to-day is owned by English lords and titled nobility, and that English land tenantry has to that extent been already introduced into this country."

Horr resumed the $40,000,000,000 debt matter. He said that in the case of mortgages Harvey had largely overstated the amount. One series of a dozen or more mortgages could be wiped out by the payment of the first in the series. He attacked other items in the list given by Harvey and finally knocked off of Harvey's aggregate about $22,000,000,000, according to his (Horr's) figures.

Harvey insisted that he was right as to the indebtedness of the country. In closing the day's debate Harvey took from his pocket the silver dollar having the word "unit" stamped upon it, which he had used in the beginning of the debate to prove that the silver and not the gold dollar was the unit, and with a few graceful words presented it to Horr, who accepted it equally gracefully and said he would punch a hole in it and prepare it to hang around the neck of his little grandchild, born just as this debate commenced.

This closed the debate for the day and it was adjourned to Monday, which will be the final day of the discussion. A number of questions were asked and replied to.

The death of Judge Jackson gives Grover an opportunity to appoint another democrat to a life position. The question of who it shall be is interesting the faithful not a little.

On his return from his European trip last week Hon. W. D. Washburn said that bi-metalism does not seem to be greatly in favor, though it has some very strong and influential adherents. Speaking of Mr. Hill's contemplated deal for the Northern Pacific Mr. W. said he did not think it could be made a success owing to the money and conflicting interests involved. He predicts an era of good times for this country unprecedented if we make no mistake on the silver question.

Not since "The Anglomaniacs" has there been so clever a society satire as Henry Fuller's "Pilgrim Sons," which is published in the August Cosmopolitan. The problems involved in woman's use of the bicycle are so startling and so numerous, under the rapid evolution of this art, that one welcomes a careful discussion of the subject by so trained a mind and so clever a writer as Mrs. Reginald de Koven. The Cosmopolitan illustrates Mrs. de Koven's article with a series of poses by professional models. A new sport, more thrilling than any known to Nimrod, more dangerous than was ever experienced by even a Buffalo Bill, is exploited in the same issue in an article on "Photographing Big Game in the Rocky Mountains," before shooting. The idea that ten cents for the Cosmopolitan means inferiority from a literary point of view is dispelled by the appearance in this number of such writers as Sir Lewis Morris, Sir Edwin Arnold, Edgar Fawcett, Tabb, W. Clark Russell, Lang, Sarcey, Zangwill, Agnes Repplier, etc. Nor can we entertain the idea of inferiority in illustrations with such names as Hamilton, Gibson, Denman, Van Schaick, Lix, Sandham, etc., figuring as the chief artists of a single month's issue.

BARLEY.

Norman County Herald.

Nearly a year ago the writer met on the train coming down from Crookston a gentleman engaged in farming near Red Wing, this state, and as he was looking our country over the conversation naturally drifted to methods of farming. During his short stay in the valley he had made some observations and he remarked that he thought barley as a crop did not receive the attention and care it was entitled to among our farmers. He considered barley one of his paying crops "but to be so it must," he said, "receive more attention than your farmers here seem to give it. In the first place they seed it too late in the spring. After the other grains have been put in the ground they will begin to plow for barley and frequently the first day of June is reached before the seed is in the ground. I never seed it first neither do I keep the barley till the last. And in the manner of harvesting, barley requires different treatment from other grain, as it is more easily discolored and unless the grain has the right color it will not bring the best price." He went on to describe his method of harvesting as follows: "After cutting the grain with a self binder I never shock it the same day but allow the bundles to lie on the ground over night. A small shower of rain will not hurt. The next day or as soon as the upper side of the bundles are dried out I set them up taking care to put the wet side out and put on a good cap sheaf. When ready to stack I send a team ahead picking off all the caps and put them by themselves. The sheaves standing will yield a good quality of barley."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9, 1895,

Republicans who are thoroughly posted on the situation regard the election of a republican governor in Maryland as a certainty this year. Senator Gorman overreached himself, as the smartest of political bosses are apt to do sooner or later. He now has not only the Cleveland democrats against the ticket he nominated, but a number of his old-time lieutenants have revolted because of his having deceived them at the recent state convention. Gorman has made a deal with Dan Lamont, whereby that oily-tongued gentleman undertakes to get the Cleveland democrats into line for the Gorman ticket, but those who ought to know say that he cannot live up to his contract. As a sample of the confidence Maryland republicans feel this language used by Mr. A. P. McKissick is given: "The republicans are going to carry Maryland this year as sure as fate. Mr. Gorman has alienated thousands of democratic voters by his co-operation with Raisin to force the nomination of Hurst for governor. Hayes was promised the nomination, and was amazed at the eleventh hour to find out that the promise wasn't to be kept. I know of hundreds of democrats who will bolt the ticket, and all the fine work of Arthur P. Gorman will not get them into line. Hundreds more will indirectly aid the republicans by refraining from voting, and the consequence will be a big republican victory. If they do not win by at least 15,000 majority, the best political judges will be mistaken."

A significant political move is the action of certain prominent Cleveland democrats in feeling the democratic pulse by setting a boom for Senator Vilas, of Wisconsin, to going. Although Mr. Vilas is neither the first nor second choice of President Cleveland, he is a faithful cuckoo and would be far preferable to ex-Secretary Whitney, who has a mind and will of his own. The politicians who come to Washington do not consider that Vilas would have any show for the nomination, even if backed by the administration. He might, in certain contingencies, get the support of Mr. Cleveland and a portion of his cabinet, but there are at least two members of the cabinet who would oppose with all the strength at their command the nomination of Vilas. Republicans would not object to his nomination, he would be so easy to beat.

The department of state did a very unfeeling thing when it refused to receive public contributions for the assistance of the wife and children of ex-U. S. Consul Waller, who is in prison in France on what is believed to be a trumped up charge. This woman and her children are in Madagascar, in want. The officials of the department of state informed counsel of Waller, who are trying to get this government to do something to get him out of prison, if he is unjustly there, that there was no public fund from which money could be taken to relieve the wife and children of this American citizen, even though they were starving in a foreign land. The counsel then appealed through the newspapers for public contributions, asking that they be sent to the department of state, so they could be transmitted at once to the U. S. Consul in Madagascar. The officials refused to either receive or transmit contributions, on the flimsy ground that there was no law authorizing them to do so. There may be no man-made law to cover a case of this sort, but there is a higher law—that of humanity—which would have furnished authority, which neither the American people nor their representatives in congress would ever have questioned, had these democratic officials used it.

The arguments for the payment of the money appropriated by the last congress for deferred sugar bounties were made this week before His Majesty Comptroller Bowler, according to program, ex-Senator Manderson leading off for the Nebraska beet sugar people, and the counsel for the Louisiana sugar men following. His Majesty has not made his decision, or rather he hasn't announced it. I understand that he will not attempt to decide the question, but will merely decline to approve the payment of the money until the courts have passed upon the constitutionality of the sugar bounty. That will accomplish the end aimed at by the administration—keep the money in the treasury for a long time.

One Fare for the Round Trip.

During the week of the Minnesota State Fair at Hamline, Minn., Sept. 9th to 14th, inclusive, the railroads in the northwest will make a rate to St. Paul and Minneapolis, from all points in Minnesota, of one fare for the round trip. The same reduction extends to points within two hundred miles of St. Paul in Wisconsin. This includes Superior and Ashland, points on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul as far east as Tomah, on the Wisconsin Central as far east as Marshfield, and on the eastern division of the Northwestern line as far east as Elroy. This is the first time that this concession has been made and it ought to result in a large increase in attendance at the Fair.

Public Spirited Citizens

Should take a delight in adding anything to our town or county in the educational line which is valuable, unique and is not found in other communities. Our townsman, C. E. Misner, tells us he has an opportunity to place in our city a fine three and a half inch astronomical telescope, which will be for the educational benefit of our citizens. There is not as fine a telescope anywhere in our state, except at Carlton college, Northfield, where they have a fine astronomical observatory. Mr. Misner says that Prof. Hicks' paper, Word and Works, of St. Louis, offers him this fine instrument if he will get up a club of 800 subscribers to the paper. He is willing to put in a considerable part of his time and make a great effort to secure this fine telescope. If our citizens give him proper support it will not be a very hard matter to secure it. Word and Works is a fine monthly magazine and is well worth $1 a year, the subscription price. Mr. Misner will take subscriptions to this paper and every subscriber will have the privilege of looking through the fine telescope, which will be put up at Lynae's photograph gallery, free of charge. You get your money's worth if you do not look through the telescope, for Word and Works is a splendid family monthly and cheap at $1.00, but you have the satisfaction of knowing also that you have contributed toward the addition to our county of a fine instrument, not to be equaled by anything in northwestern Minnesota. Mr. Misner, or his agent, will be around to see the people of the county within the next six weeks and we hope he will receive encouragement wherever he goes. [15-tf]

Literary Notes.

The Review of Reviews, while it is perhaps the only periodical published in the United States that may be properly called an international magazine, summing up as it does the progress of the whole world from month to month, is none the less strong in its Americanism. The editor, is easy to perceive, is first of all an American. In the August number he points out as one of the most significant utterances of the last month the speech made by M. Hanotaux, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, at the Independence Day banquet of the American Chamber of Commerce in Paris, which, evidently inspired by Minister Eustis, was a brilliant and intelligent tribute to the United States of America as the foremost of modern nations. "Nothing," says the Editor of the Review, "has been said in a long time that has been so deftly designed to promote warm relations between the French Republic and our own, as M. Hanotaux's frank and hearty speech. . . Unless we are greatly mistaken in reading what seems as simple as the alphabet, the French Republic has wisely concluded that the best possible course for the French to pursue in their relations with Western hemisphere questions, is to consult frankly and cordially with the United States and to make their policy, so far as possible, conform with the policy and wishes of this country."

SHALL WE HAVE A FAIR?

There should be but one answer to that question and that answer—yes. But for some reason it seems problematical whether we do or not. In such a year as this, with one of the finest crops ever raised in the county, and the prospects for renewed business so bright, our people should feel sufficiently encouraged to go deep into their pockets, if need be, and see that the thing is gotten up on a grander scale than ever before. From a report of the directors it is apparent that quite a sum of money will be needed, but not more than can be readily obtained if our people feel interest enough to see that a fair is held. A public meeting has been called for to-night to discuss the matter and decide what, if any, steps shall be taken.

Euclid Items.

Mrs. Angie Stockwell and Mrs. Blanche Hsley, who have spent the past two months with relatives at this place returned, the fore part of the week, to their home at Lyons, Iowa.

Mrs. E. C. Murney and son, Willie, spent the latter half of last week with Mrs. Fred Tiedt, at Argyle.

G. H. Fargo drove to Crookston, last Wednesday and while there his team became unmanageable and ran away. The boy who was driving escaped uninjured but the wagon was badly damaged.

H. C. Misner transacted business at Crookston last Wednesday.

Among other representatives from Euclid to Crookston, Wednesday, were C. Stuhr and Herman Wallis.

Stewart Chapin was here Wednesday visiting with friends and relatives and incidentally talking a little about Arizona.

Mesdames M. E. Kirsch and John Schantzen, of Crookston, and friends Mesdames Ksss and Nepper are visiting with John Salentine.

Martin Keeley drove to Crookston Thursday last.

Rev. S. Currie held services at the Euclid Presbyterian Church last Sabbath.

Miss Hattie Davidson is teaching school in District No. 218. The term opened last Monday.

Constable Bloom was up from Crookston on official business last Monday.

Julius Berg came in town in a very excited condition last Tuesday and gave the intelligence that his herder, a fellow by the name of Manly Simons, of Fisher, had disappeared and with him several head of stock, a saddle, bridle and about thirty-five feet of new rope.

H. C. Misner has sold a half section farm to Cordt Ruther, who will take possession right after harvest. Mr. Ruther has secured an excellent piece of land and Euclid is glad to welcome him as one of her solid farmers.

Mr. Knappen, of the Fisher Bulletin, called at our city, Tuesday, while on a tour through the country in the interests of his paper.

A Great State Fair.

The annual fair under the auspices of the Minnesota State Agricultural society will be held this year on the grounds at Hamline, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis, September 9th to 14th inclusive. The big crop which has been harvested in Minnesota this year is likely to contribute most to making the fair the biggest and best in the history of the society. More interest has already been shown in the forthcoming exposition than in any previous year and more inquiries are being made about the affair. The society offers $22,000 in premiums and prizes, of which $4,000 is to be given to the raisers of cattle, and a like amount to the breeders of horses. There are liberal premiums also for the breeders of sheep and swine, and for the poultry fanciers. The big crop which Minnesota has secured is known all over the country and the prospects are that the stock raisers from all over the country will send their herds and studs to the fair, and make the exhibit a notable one. Premium list will be sent on application to E. W. Randall, Secretary, Hamline. Minn.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOLS

—AT—

WINONA, MANKATO, ST. CLOUD AND MOORHEAD.

These schools are organized for the training of teachers for the public schools of the state.

ORGANIZATION.—Each school comprises two departments—the Normal Department and the Training Department or Model School.

This Normal Department embraces:

(A) An elementary Course of two years for teachers of rural districts and elementary grades.

(B) An Advanced Course of five years for teachers of advanced grades.

(C) A Professional Course of two years for graduates of high schools

(D) A Kindergarten Training Course (at Winona, St. Cloud and Mankato.)

ADMISSION.—Graduates of high schools and colleges, and teachers holding county superintendents' first and second grade certificates are admitted without examination. All others are required to pass an entrance examination.

EXPENSES.—Tuition is free to all who pledge themselves to teach in Minnesota. Text books are furnished at a rental of $3 per year. Provision is made in each school for economical living. The average cost of furnished rooms with board is about $3 per week.

The new Dormitory at Moorhead, and the Ladies' home at Winona furnish similar accomodations at a slightly higher price. Winona accomodation $3.50 per week.

The next school year opens at Winona September 2nd; at Mankato, September 2nd; at St. Cloud, September 3rd; at Moorhead, September 3rd.

For free catalogues and circulars, giving full information, address the presidents as follows:

IRWIN SHEPARD, Winona,
EDWARD SEARING, Mankato,
GEORGE R. KLEEBERGER, St. Cloud.
LIVINGSTON C. LORD, Moorhead.

Financial Affairs of France.

The financial speech of the ex-Prime Minister M. Loubet, in the senate, is to be posted, by order of that house, all over France. There are some statements in it worthy of consideration. Thus, the national debt is set down at £1,200,000,000. It also appears that the difficulty of making both ends meet has greatly increased since M. Meline secured the triumph of his system. The court of audits has discovered 211 irregularities in the last budgetary account of money paid. By irregularities it means embezzlements, set down under the head of "virements."

Among them figures the £800 spent on behalf of a minister for "cabs," and £640 a month for little "dejeuners" at Voisin's, where a minister of justice entertained his friends. The "virements" at the home office are set down at £650, those of the war office at £1,330, those of the colonial office at £2,090, those of the public works office at £2,375. When M. de Freycinet was war minister, the "virements" of his department amounted to about £6,000 a year. He, as minister of public works and war, swelled the national debt more than any one else in power since Thiers' retirement. The redeemable loans were an expedient of M. de Freycinet to give employment to the public works department.—London News.

Some Points About Wills.

Do you know that you cannot will away your body; that a clause in your will giving your body after death to any person or institution is not legally binding? Your executors cannot be forced to carry out your wishes, though they may do so through deference to your expressed preferences. It is also important to remember that three witnesses are needed in devising real estate instead of two, as in bequeathing personal property. "When a woman will, she will, depend on't," says the proverb. But there are so many sharp turns and short curves in the course of the law that though a woman wills to will what she will, how she will in nine cases out of ten she cannot make her will so that she wills what she will as she wills to will. —New York Press.

The Power of Words.

Words, for the most part, are mere arbitrary combinations of characters, to represent some thing or abstract idea, and yet there are those which by association have a magic power. Shakespeare speaks of "words to conjure with," and in the dark ages the astrologers and magicians had their mystical words which were supposed to have supernatural powers, even to the raising of the dead. Nations have had their peculiar war-crys, as the old English "For England and St. Gorge!" the Mahomedan "Allah il allah!" and under the influence of these mere words men have gone cheerfully to the certain chance of death. Other words bring up crowds of tender memories, like "home" and "mother." A friend of ours who was wounded at Chickamauga told us that when he was in hospital, a neighboring band played "Home, Sweet Home," and he drew the blanket over his head and cried like a child. That is the influence of names of places often bring up delightful associations when we hear them. The words "Burlington Route" recall to thousands of people pleasant journeys, superb accommodations, quick time and courteous attention. When about to travel ask your ticket agent to send you to your destination by the Burlington Route, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn., for information.

Tented City at the Minnesota State Fair.

The educational feature has been made a prominent element in the success of the fair which is given annually under the auspices of the Minnesota State Agricultural society, on the grounds at Hamline, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis. This feature will be quite as prominent this year, as usual. The lecturers in the Farmer's Institute course will, as in previous years, deliver lectures in Institute hall, on the grounds and arrangements have been made for an unlimited number of tents for those who desire to camp on the grounds during the week of the fair, or from September 9th to 14th inclusive. These tents will accommodate six persons, and may be had without cost by application to Dr. J. C. Curryer, who may be addressed at Hamline. Season admission tickets may be had for $2, covering admission to the grounds during all the week. Meals may be had on the grounds at a reasonable price.

A MARTYR
—TO—INDIGESTION
Cured by Using
Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Words of Comfort to All who Suffer from Dyspepsia.

"For years, I was a martyr to indigestion, and had about given up all hope of ever finding relief, as the complaint only seemed to grow worse instead of better, under ordinary treatment. At last, I was induced to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and I hereby testify that after using only three bottles, I was cured. I can, therefore, confidently recommend this medicine to all similarly afflicted."—FRANKLIN BECK, Avoca, Ia.

"I am personally acquainted with Mr. Beck and believe any statement he may make to be true."—W. J. MAXWELL, Druggist and Pharmacist, Avoca, Ia.

"I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla for general debility and, as a blood-purifier, find it does exactly as is claimed for it."—S. J. ADAMS, Ezzell, Texas.

C. A. Sharkey returned to civilization on Friday morning and resumed his place at the N. P. depot after a month's vacation spent with relatives and friends in Illinois, Iowa and Wisconsin. Says in all his travels he did not see any crops that compared with ours.

From a letter received by one of our citizens, last week, we learn that Herb Mason has again embarked in business for himself—fruits and confectionery, at Jamestown, N. D. We are told that he is doing a good business, which is not surprising, as Herb would have his share of the trade, if there was any trade in the place—and Jimtown is a good point.

Dan McKinnon served his first meal at the new restaurant on Sunday morning. He has everything elegantly fixed up and it is a pleasure just to go in and sit down a few minutes. There are no flies on Dan—nor in the restaurant, and it is a nice, nobby place to get a good, square meal. Try McKinnon's restaurant, No. 10 Reckitt block.

Andrew Eiken returned on Sunday morning from a visit to Chicago. This was Andrew's first visit to the Windy City and he was quite impressed with the stir and bustle of the restless city by the unsalted sea. He received the impression that much business is transacted in that great mart of trade and thinks it quite a town, even if the weather was too hot for any use.

Vacation Time

Is at hand and is gladly welcomed by all, especially those whose duties in life have caused them to greatly run down their system to meet the requirements, physical and mental, forced upon them. With these and others, it is important, whether at home, at the sea-shore or in the country, that some thought be given to diet, and as further assistance to nature, a good building-up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla had best be resorted to. If the digestion is poor liver deranged and frequent headaches seems to be the rule, Hood's will change all this and enable every one to return to their home and business in a refreshed state of mind and bodily health.

The attendance at the opera house on Tuesday evening to hear Emmet, was small, owing to the storm, but all were delighted with him. His support was excellent and the entertainment was well deserving of a better patronage.

At a meeting of the bank directors of the First National bank on Saturday J. W. Wheeler was elected a director in the place of E. D. Childs resigned. The resignation of C. E. Sawyer was tendered and accepted and J. W. Wheeler was elected in his place.

On Tuesday morning Dr. Dunlop's dog showed up with a rope around his neck, and one end of the rope looked as though it had been chewed off. Doc says he would like to interview the man who had stolen that dog a few minutes. Several valuable bird dogs have come up missing recently and somebody will get into trouble first they know.

In an interview with Mr. Sawyer on Tuesday morning relative to his future movements he said that just who he could not say what he should do in the future—it would depend wholly upon circumstances whether he remains in Crookston or not although such would be his choice. He will remain in the First National bank until Sept. 1st and then he will take a few weeks vacation after which he will return to spend the balance of the fall and the coming winter probably. Mr. Sawyer will be missed when he leaves the bank as he has been there so long as to seem a very neccessary part of the institution.

The hair, when not properly cared for, loses its lustre, becomes crisp, harsh, and dry, and falls out freely with every combing. To prevent this, the best dressing in the market is Ayer's Hair Vigor. It imparts that silky gloss so essential to perfect beauty.

Agujardi's Voice.

Agujari, better known as La Bastardella, had an incredibly high range of voice. Mozart heard her in 1770 and expressed the greatest delight. She sang B in altissimo with perfect ease and performed cadenzas deemed impossible for the human voice. During a great part of her professional career she received about $500 a night, a sum then equal to about $2,500 in the money of our time.

The City Council.

The council met on Tuesday evening, while the storm was raging outside and carried some of it into the council chamber, for while the thunder rolled and the lightning flashed outside it was not a marker to the storm of eloquence that prevailed when the question of extending the water mains to the 5th ward came up.

The committee on the sewer ordinance recommended some change in the ordinance and as amended, it passed.

The city engineer was ordered to estimate the cost of lowering the water mains on the streets affected by grading and report.

An ordinance requiring saloons to have their blinds raised after 11 o'clock every night and on Sundays was introduced and referred to a committee.

A bill of $926 from W. E. McKenzie for city printing was referred to the comptroller.

Allen, the little six-year-old son of Harry Norrie, met with a severe accident on Monday afternoon. His older brother, Harry, was taking the lawn mower along the side-walk to put it in the barn when Allen ran out of the gate to see the mower. Harry stopped it but the knife kept revolving and before Harry discovered what the little chap was up to he had seized the knife with his left hand to stop it. It stopped—after mangling three poor little fingers and taking off the index finger between the first and second joints. The little lad ran into the house to consult mamma about it and Dr. Dunlop was hastily summoned who dressed the wound and is in hopes to save the finger where it is, but fears that he may have to amputate it at the second joint. The little fellow has been very brave through it all and inquired anxiously of the doctor if he could put a new finger on for him.

Do You Want to Stop Tobacco?

You Can Be Cured While Using it.

The habit of using tobacco grows on a man until grave diseased conditions are produced. Tobacco causes cancer of the mouth and stomach; dyspepsia, loss of memory, nervous affections, congestion of the retina and wasting of the optic nerve; resulting in impairment of the vision, even to the extent of blindness; dizziness, or vertigo; tobacco asthma; nightly suffocation, dull pain in region of the heart, followed later by sharp pains, palpitation and weakened pulse, resulting in fatal heart disease. It also causes loss of vitality.

QUIT BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE.

To quit suddenly is too severe a shock to the system, as tobacco—to an inveterate user, becomes a stimulant that his system continually craves. "BACO-CURO" is a scientific and reliable vegetable remedy, guaranteed to be perfectly harmless, and which has been in use for the last 23 years, having cured thousands of habitual tobacco users—smokers, chewers and snuff-dippers.

You can use all the tobacco you want while taking "Baco-Curo." It will notify you when to stop. We give a written guarantee to permanently cure any case with three boxes, or refund the money with ten per cent interest.

"Baco-Curo" is not a substitute, but a reliable and scientific cure—which absolutely destroys the craving for tobacco without the aid of will power, and with no inconvenience. It leaves the system as pure and free from nicotine as the day you took your first chew or smoke.

Sold by all druggists at $1.00 per box, three boxes (thirty day's treatment and guaranteed cure) $2.50, or sent direct upon receipt of price. DEFAULT has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Ezra L. Smith and Lucy A. Smith, his wife, mortgagors, to James H. Barnum, mortgagee, dated the sixth day of February, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Polk, in the state of Minnesota, on the 23d day of April, A. D. 1888, at 8 o'clock A. M., in book 22 of mortgages, on page 237, on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of six thousand, six hundred twenty-four and 90-100 dollars, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. That the default above described consists in the non payment when due, of ten promissory notes, each for the sum of $500.00, and interest at eight per cent. per annum, payable annually, all being dated Feb. 6, 1888, and all executed and delivered by said Ezra L. Smith to said Jas. H. Barnum and all being secured by said mortgage. Said amount above described as being due contains also the sum of $125.87 taxes for the years 1892, 1893 and 1894, which said mortgagee on the 12th day of July, A. D. 1895, paid on the Southwest quarter of the land below described.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, at public auction, by the sheriff of said county or by his deputy, duly appointed as agent in said instrument for that purpose, on Friday, the 30th day of August, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and one hundred dollars attorney's fees, provided by statute and stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: All of Section twenty-nine (29), in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty-seven (47), west of the fifth principal meridian, containing six hundred and forty (640) acres of land, more or less, according to the government survey.

CLOSE OF THE TALK

Harvey and Horr End Their Exhaustive Debate.

PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER

One of the Subjects Elaborated at the Final Session—Horr Devotes Most of His Time to the Question Whether the United States Alone Should Adopt Free Coinage—Harvey Further Exemplifies the Theory of Scientific Bimetallism.

[Copyright, 1895, by Azel F. Hatch.]

Horr had the floor again at the beginning of the last days' debate on the silver question, and proceeded to criticise Harvey's use of the only correct figures Harvey had given of American grain prices"—"those he gave Thursday last for corn in 1872 and 1894. Said Horr: "When analyzed they show a per capita decrease for man and beast in the latter year of 25 per cent. and an advance in gold prices of 25 per cent. This corresponds with what Mr. Harvey repeatedly has said is to be expected under normal conditions according to the law of varying supply and demand, and thus proves that silver legislation has not affected corn prices in the United States." Continuing Horr said that the Sauerbeck tables proved nothing for this country; they were compiled from European figures. "I defy him to produce the table of averages agricultural prices in America, constructed by himself or any one else that will show a decline for the whole country since 1875."

He then questioned Harvey's statement that there were 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 people out of work in this country at present, which was quoted from Carroll D. Wright, and Horr read a telegram from Wright denying that he had ever given such figures.

Harvey replied that about the only fact he had used without confirming it was the one last mentioned by Horr. He had asked some labor leaders if it could be relied upon and they said it could. He had found out later that it was wrong, and it was no longer in his book. He had never knowingly printed or stated a fact he did not believe was correct. But when those working half time and those not working at all were considered "you have got more than 4,000,000."

The silver champion began his continuation of the argument with the production of a "table from pages 184 to 186 of the mint report for 1893, of the gold and silver coined in this country from 1792 to 1873. I do this to remove the representation that has gone all over the country that for the first half of the century we were on a silver basis and from 1850 to 1873 we were on a gold basis. The best answer to that argument is the production of the table of coins themselves. The statement that gold did not seek the mints for the first fifty years and that silver did not seek the mints for the last thirty years prior to 1873 is not true.

"Page 180 of the United States coinage laws, appendix and statistics, 1894, gives the approximate stock of money in the world. The stock of gold there given is $3,901,900,000; the stock of silver there given is $3,931,800,000. This estimate includes gold and silver coins and gold and silver bullion available for coinage into money. The quantity of these two metals available for coinage into money is what is left after the demand for them of the arts and manufactures are supplied. As civilization has grown the use in arts and manufacture of these metals has grown out of proportion to the increase in population."

Horr then took the floor and proceeded to discuss what he considered the meat of the question: "Can this nation alone establish the ratio of 16 to 1 and maintain it among the nations of the world?" He did not believe Harvey took the affirmative of that proposition. He quoted Harvey's book as follows: "They say it is not bimetallism unless two metals stay at exactly the parity of 16 to 1. These men do not know what bimetallism is. We may have bimetallism and bimetallic prices whether one metal has a tendency to leave no more than the other or not, and if desirable to stop this leaving a change in the ratio would do it." Harvey, consequently, said Horr was not a stickler for 16 to 1.

Continuing Horr said: "Now I start out with this proposition: Nations by their laws do not fix the value of things. They cannot do it if they try. The actual value of the two metals at the present time is wide apart. The figures 16 to 1 do not represent the commercial value of the two today. Nobody claims they do. Always, from the earliest foundation of society, the relative value between gold and silver has been fixed by the people of the world and not by legislation. That is a fixed fact. They have never been able legally to determine any ratio and have it [illegible] permanently.

"Now Mr. Harvey and I both agree that the free coinage of silver would decrease the [illegible] this country. [illegible] burden [illegible] that we [illegible] that the [illegible] we agree that it [illegible] He proposes to [illegible] people by letting them pay [illegible] owe in cheaper money. I answer him 'No, the debts of the day, [illegible] them, have been contracted with the gold dollar as the measure, and to relieve the payment of them in any way by a trick of this kind is repudiation.'

"He answers me by saying: 'I agree with you, the unit of values should be used by both parties the same,' but he says 'for twenty-two years your unit has been increasing in value and silver has remained stable.'

Harvey said he would reply to the foregoing at the proper time, and proceeded with his estimate of the precious metals used in the arts. He then introduced a table showing the production of gold and its use in the arts each year from 1880 to 1893 in the United States, showing a production varying irregularly from $30,000,000 to $36,000,000, and use in the arts almost regularly increasing from a little less than $11,000,000 to over $19,000,000. He called attention to the quantity of gold left each year to be used as money, showing $25,000,000 in 1880 and less than $14,000,000 in 1893.

Then he took up silver and said that of the whole stock $1,951,800,000 was used in India, China, Mexico and the South American states, Japan and the Straits, India having $950,000,000 of it. Of the remainder the United States had $624,000,000; United Kingdom, $112,000,000; France, $500,000,000; Germany, $215,000,000; Spain, $155,000,000, and the remainder among the smaller nations of the earth. The figures are all coinage value in our dollars.

He quoted authorities to show that there was no stock of silver to speak of in Europe; that the use of silver in the arts had grown wonderfully and that the supply in the European market was "ridiculously small at any one time." Last year's silver production of this country was $40,000,000 and $37,164,718 was exported, showing that there was a demand abroad for substantially all our silver, and these facts had an important bearing on independent action by the United States.

He laid down the propositions that the demand by the rich for either metal became greater as the metal become costly; that the dearer was hoarded when used exclusively for primary money; that when both were used the plain people hoarded silver to serve them in time of need, the rich hoarded gold to bull the money market. Hoarding of silver by the people was beneficial; hoarding of gold was an injury. That was one of the reasons why silver has always proven the more stable money. Gold was not regular in production.

Here he introduced another table showing the production of gold from 1849 to 1892 inclusive. It showed $37,000,000 in 1849, going up to $155,000,000 in 1853, dropping variably to $90,000,000 in 1861 [illegible] creasing to $119,000,000 in 1878 [illegible] to $95,000,000 in 1883, and then [illegible] pretty regularly to $133,000,000 [illegible] The production of the two [illegible] bined was more regular than [illegible] rately, which made them safer for use as money.

"In the case of the two metals we are considering they differ from [illegible] this: The use of these metals for money, when given full money functions, is comparatively unlimited. The supply, unlike corn, is limited."

Horr then proceeded with his argument against a change of the present system. "There is no disguising the issue between us; it is simply this: Can we benefit the people of this republic now by making a dollar mean any considerable amount less than it now is by making it actually less in value? The free coinage of silver on a ratio of 16 to 1 means silver monometallism. The first result of such a law will be to drive the gold out of the country.

"Who will be injured and who will be benefitted by scaling down all debts, by making our measure of value cheaper? Can you bless a people by clipping the coins? Monarchs used to indulge in it. Such efforts have always ended and always will end in robbing the mass of the people. Whenever you change the value of money by any device which cheapens the unit of measure and lessens the price of the coin in use and compel people to take it at the old price then you rob the common people of any nation, and the profit has usually gone into the pockets, not of money lenders, but of money changers. That is the history of the world.

"Now I come to the practical question: Who in the United States will be benefited by giving them cheap dollars for the good ones they now receive? I first say our census arranges the toilers, great classes of the American people under different subdivisions. The first heading I find here is professional men; lawyers, doctors, preachers, editors, publishers of books, men who toil at any kind of public work. Now I ask the army of professionals, do you think it would benefit you to vote down the price of the dollar in which you are paid? They are all paid in money for their work. Will you be better off by getting just the same number of dollars and having them worth just half as much?

"There are of those people, Mr. Harvey, 944,343, the book is right here. I next call up those engaged in trades and transportation. That includes all the railroad hands, all the steamboat hands. That includes all the people who work in different trades."

Harvey replied: "He talks about clipped coins. Who clipped the coins in 1873? Who started the world upon the robber measure of values of 1873? There is great concern among some of our citizens that if free coinage of silver is adopted those holding gold obligations will be paid in silver, also that gold will leave us, and a debtor who owes gold will not be able to get it without paying a high premium in order to discharge his debt. Both of these questions can be answered together. Gold obligations would be paid in gold and not in silver. To secure the gold with which to do this would not be so difficult as it is now.

"It would operate this way. As soon as the United States opens its mints and confers on silver the full functions of money with the right to no one thereafter to make a debt payable in gold, the demand for gold would be withdrawn except to pay previous debts thus payable. When you withdraw the demand in such a pronounced way from an article it must decline in value. With the demand thus suddenly thrown on silver to supply the United States with money its value would rapidly advance. Gold is now at a premium of one hundred per cent. over silver.

"When the proposition is made that free coinage of silver will send gold to a premium and make it harder for you to pay a debt, you are misled by the manner in which the proposition is put. Premium over what? Premium over silver is meant. Silver would be in that event the medium of exchange through which you would get the gold—but you would have sold your property at a higher price in silver, and when converted into gold you would have received more gold for your property than you do now. If the demand for wheat in the United States were suddenly to be transferred to corn, wheat in the markets of the world would decline, and corn would advance.

"I want right here to answer Mr. Horr's proposition that we cannot, by law confer value upon silver or anything else. It is not the stamp upon the coin that gives value to it—it is the law creating it as money. When you make a new use for a thing you increase its value. Wheat would not be worth as much as it is now if it were not for its use when ground into flour for bread. But we are answered, gold will go out of circulation and a panic will result. If it should prove true that gold went out of circulation it would be because silver had come into circulation.

"Passing from a specie basis to paper in 1861 did not bring on a panic. It brought good times. Passing from a paper basis to specie in 1879 created no disturbance. In fact paper and gold had come together before the day of resumption had arrived. It worked then as it will work now. Gold and silver will come together before the [silver remonetization] act is passed."

Proceeding with his argument Horr said that 8,325,962 persons were employed in transportation and trades. "At least, 8,000,000 of that army get their pay in wages given them each day, week and month, for the work they have done. You ask them whether they want a dollar that will buy a good many of the things they need, or one that will buy a part as much as they now receive and what will be the answer?

"The next witnesses, I want to call up are those in domestic and personal service, the hired girls of the United States, the men who sweep the streets, the men who do the personal duties for people in this great country of ours. There are four million three hundred sixty thousand five hundred and six. They are all of them paid wages. Is there an idiot anywhere on the face of the earth who thinks those men and women would be benefited by giving them less for their day's work of the things they need—for that is what he proposes to do.

"Now I come to the list of those manufacturing and mechanical—all factory hands, all skilled laborers in the United States. There are 5,091,669. Go round among them, ask them, do you want the measure of value reduced? Do you want every dollar you earn cut in two? The next is agricultural, fisheries, mining. There are 9,013,201. A part of all these, who are in debt more than they have got property with which to pay, would tell you they would like to scale down their debts and pay but 50 cents on the dollar. Of these, 3,004,015 are farm hands, men who work by the day, men who get their pay in cash, not in productions. How will they vote?

"This makes a grand total of people who live by labor in the United States of 22,735,661. Of these people 16,000,000 receive their pay in wages from day to day and week to week, and large numbers of others are dependent upon good money in order to be prosperous in this world.

"Now in addition to this army of working people I have a crowd of witnesses I want to call to the stand to vote on this question. Many of them are on crutches; empty sleeves are hanging by the sides of many; scars received by the furrowing work of shot and shell when they were risking their lives that this nation might live. One million of them now in the United States. Ask them: 'Do you want your pensions cut down by giving you a dollar not worth as much as you have been receiving?'

"Again we have in this country savings banks. Four million, seven hundred and eighty-one thousand six hundred and ninety-five people put their money in savings banks. Do you propose to say to them: 'You have worked hard. Those dollars you deposited when they were worth their face in gold. We propose to let those banks pay you off in dollars that are worth only 50 cents and do not intend to let you help yourselves either.'"

Harvey said the wages of servant girls had risen since 1873 because, the men not being able to provide homes for those dependent on them, the women had to go out and occupy situations the men should occupy, thus creating a demand for servants. Farm hands in 1873 got $15 a month, now they get $6. Going back to his subject he said: "Again they say, 'With silver only in circulation we are on a gold basis.' They are wrong. When under the law of a land either metal has a right to enter the mints and be coined into money, that nation is a bimetallic nation.

"I now pass to the question of 16 to 1. We maintain that there will be a commercial parity between gold and silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 if the law is passed putting both metals on an equal footing at that ratio. What we mean by an equal footing is that both shall have the right to enter the mints free to be coined into money with 23.22 grains of pure gold to be a dollar and 371¼ grains of pure silver to be a dollar. The money made from both metals to be full legal tender money in the payment of all debts, and the debtor to have the right to pay in either metal.

"No notes, bonds or other forms of indebtedness to be made payable in either metal to the exclusion of the other. All indebtedness to be payable in lawful money, and either gold or silver to discharge such indebtedness. The two metals will then be in competition with each other to supply the demand for money. The supply is limited and the demand is substantially unlimited.

"What we mean by the demand being unlimited is this: When a man owns either metal and it is a surplus over and above what is needed in the arts, he converts it into money at the mints and puts it himself into circulation. That the business interests of the country demand and will absorb all the gold and silver that can possibly seek the mints for coinage.

Horr continued on savings banks, saying that the deposits were $1,712,760,026, which would be cut in two by free coinage. Building and loan associations had deposits of $526,852,835; life insurance companies had liabilities of $3,691,686,594—all these would be cut in two. Then there were the depositors in other banks. Silver mines would be benefited, but all the silver produced in the country was not worth more than half the eggs produced. The free coinage measure would be destructive of all credit and credit was the base of all commercial transactions.

Harvey said life insurance men were money lenders who got rich on lapsed policies. Horr's estimate of silver as compared with eggs was a good argument for free silver—showed that its supply was limited, while under free coinage the demand would be unlimited—these conditions would take care of the ratio. He then gave England a raking down for being "heartless and cruel" in money matters and sucking the life blood of other nations.

Horr took up the supply of gold and argued to show that it was increasing rapidly enough to supply the demand for business uses. He gave a table showing that the supply had increased from 1886 to 1893 inclusive $837,011,685 in six gold producing countries and gave Mulhall as authority for the statement that in 1890 the available stock in the world was $12,240,000,000—gold and silver, about equally divided. He then gives figures showing that new processes had reduced the cost of producing metals while the wages of the men employed had increased between 1879 and 1894 about 33 per cent.

Harvey said that as civilization advanced more money would be needed. He gave figures to show that manufactories were springing up all over silver countries while they were depressed in gold countries.

The debate ran on in this way, Horr closing by presenting Harvey with a Chinese coin, 1,000 of which were nominally equal to an American silver dollar, but of which 2,000 could be purchased with the silver dollar as it now is. Harvey closed with a plea for free coinage and the declaration that this country "should by right be independent of the financial laws of England or any other land that strikes at our liberty."

Resolutions were then adopted, thanking the Illinois club, the stenographer and assistants, the presiding officers and others. A number of questions were then answered and the great silver debate came to an end.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble. The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

REVIEW THE TALK.

Harvey and Horr Give a Round-Up of Their Debate.

EACH MAN CLAIMS THE VICTORY,

And Asserts That He Made Out His Case Completely—Points Made by the Two Disputants in Summarising the Nine Days' Discussion of the Silver Question—Final and Concise Statements of the Claims of the Contestants.

[Copyright, 1895, by Azel F. Hatch.]

Under the terms of the agreement for the silver debate between Messrs. Harvey and Horr each contestant had five days from the close of the debate and 2,500 words in which to prepare a summary of his argument. These were to be exchanged and a final 800-word rejoinder written by each man to his opponent's summary. Following is the summary of Roswell G. Horr:

The object of this debate was to determine if it would be wise for our nation to throw open its mints to the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 when the civilized nations of the world refuse to join in such action. My opponent proposed to prove that such course is advisable, and undertook to do it on the lines laid down in "Coin's Financial School." I denied the advisability of such action, and attacked the teachings of that book from the title page to its close.

Mr. Harvey admits that the book is all fiction. His statement that primary money only is the measure of value he has not even attempted to sustain. He based his whole argument on the proposition that the silver dollar was in 1792 made the only unit or measure of value. I have shown conclusively that our forefathers attempted to establish bimetallism and provided for two units of value, one of gold and one of silver, always naming gold first, and that up to 1834 the silver standard alone was used. That after that the gold standard came into use, and and that since that the silver dollar has never for a day been used as the measure of value in the United States.

Mr. Harvey next based his case upon the assumption that the law of 1873 was a crime, and stated that it had its origin in fraud and its birth through bribery and corruption. He planted himself upon four propositions to prove his case: That the congress of the United States was purchased; that the bill passed both houses all right, and was changed by some clerk in its enrollment; that it was not changed by a clerk, but the dirty work was done in conference committee; that none of his other statements are true, but that the work was done by passing a "substitute bill." He introduced no evidence in support of either proposition.

If the congress of the United States was bribed to pass a bad bill, then the bill must have first passed in bad shape, and there would be no need of a clerk to do the dirty work. If it was done by the enrolling clerk, then it follows that congress passed the bill as it ought to have been, and they could not have done what he says they were bribed to do. If congress passed the bill all right and the enrolling clerk enrolled it correctly the bribery could apply only to the members of the conference committee. I submit that such conflicting allegations demonstrate beyond a question that Mr. Harvey has attempted to sustain his position in regard to the law of 1873 by pure fiction and without calling to his aid a single established fact.

Mr. Harvey's statement that free coinage creates "unlimited demand" is not true, because there can be an unlimited demand for no human production. His assertion that the option of the debtor to pay in either metal causes the cheaper metal to be used is true. But such option does not restore its relative commercial value. On the contrary it drives the dearer metal out of use. In Mexico and other countries where the cheaper metal is today the sole currency it is not increased in value one iota.

Another doctrine of Mr. Harvey is that by the free coinage of silver in this country upon the old ratio of 16 to 1 the old price of silver, as compared with gold, will be restored. If it will restore the value of silver it will not increase prices. History proves that the use of a single standard is the only means by which both metals can be kept in circulation.

The gold unit is not responsible for the fall of prices. The prices of labor and property, when taken together, have not declined. Mr. Harvey utterly failed to show the fall in the price of a single article which is not fully accounted for by cheaper cost of production, improved transportation, or increased supply. He bases his contention on the assumption that gold has appreciated. As gold measures the value of commodities, wages and land, so wages, lands and commodities measure the value of gold. Commodities have fallen eight per cent; wages have increased fifty-eight per cent, and lands have increased ninety per cent in value since 1850, when Mr. Harvey contends we were on a bimetallic basis. These facts utterly annihilate the claim that gold has appreciated.

During the discussion Mr. Harvey cites Roman history with its many evils. But he inadvertently makes an admission as to the great value of banking facilities which refutes all his other assertions against such systems. After portraying the bad conditions existing in the Roman Empire he says: "It is a significant coincidence that the first glimmer of light only came with the invention of bills of exchange and paper substitutes, through which the scanty stock of the precious metals was increased in efficiency." He said that in connection with a statement that at that time the metallic money of the Roman empire had shrunken from eighteen thousand millions to two hundred millions. This admission alone saves me from using another word in defense of the banking systems of the present century.

The condition of the masses of the people in the United States has improved more rapidly since 1873 than during any similar number of years since the nation was born, as Mr. Mulhall has conclusively shown.

Mr. Harvey quotes the European geologist Suess to show that the world can produce only about as much gold as is required for consumption each year outside of coinage. He conceals the fact that Suess wrote his essay several years ago, and that the production and coinage of gold in the last three years proves absolutely that Suess was entirely wrong. The facts are that during the last three years the world has produced $470,000,000 of gold, and during those years it has coined, exclusive of recoinage, over $380,000,000.

Mr. Harvey endeavored to prove decreasing wages in the United States since 1873. He introduced only one statement in support of his position; that was the evidence of a single man for one trade in the city of Omaha. On the other hand, to prove that they are advancing, I introduced the investigation of the United States commissioner of labor, and Mulhall, who show that the average annual wages in manufacturing industries have risen from $288 in 1870, to $563, for each person, in 1890.

During the fifth day of the debate Mr. Harvey challenged me to name more than the one error in his book which I had pointed out and which he admitted. On the sixth day I pointed out eight glaring misstatements, none of which he successfully denied. Mr. Harvey gave the foreign indebtedness of this country as more than three times the real amount. He has been repeatedly called upon to tell when and how that vast sum reached us. No such enormous amount could have come without some record of the transaction.

Mr. Harvey virtually admits that the action which he proposes will put this nation on a silver basis and drive gold out of this country. His statement that the gold dollar should be cut down until its value be no more than the commercial value of the silver in the standard dollar is a complete admission of this point. Hence I have a right to assume that his plan contemplates such a result. I showed conclusively that this would work injury to 17,000,000 people who work for wages. I also showed that the injury would extend to all pensioners, savings and other bank depositors, and the holders of insurance policies, aggregating 12,000,000 of people, and to every person in the United States who has any money except gold coin.

Mr. Harvey said nothing to offset my proposition that such action would destroy the credit of our people and lead to business disaster in every community in the United States. Good money may rightly be called the life blood of the nation, but credit is the atmosphere of business life. The perfection of credit is the glory of modern business methods. Repudiation in any form is abhorrent to honorable men. On this account the business men are almost a unit against this scheme. Go where you will, merchants, bankers, managers of great enterprises, successful farmers, intelligent mechanics and workingmen are opposed to injuring the country and themselves simply to benefit a few. I have from the beginning arraigned this scheme as being class and sectional legislation of the most obnoxious kind. What has Mr. Harvey said to disprove my statements? Absolutely nothing.

The debate settles in my judgment the following propositions:

That gold and silver is the money of the constitution. Mr. Horr did not controvert this. As token money silver performs none of the functions intended by the constitution. Since this debate the press dispatches report the supreme court of Ohio as deciding that a municipality cannot issue bonds payable in gold alone; that such bonds should be payable in either gold or silver. There is no doubt in my mind but that the United States supreme court would have decided unconstitutional the act of 1873. What the United States supreme court would do now is more doubtful, as I am inclined to believe that they are, as a whole, as much under the influence of the bondholders as the supreme court of 1850 was under the influence of the slaveholders. A test case would now probably result in a Dred Scott decision.

That the silver dollar was the unit of value in our coinage system fixed by the act of 1792. Mr. Horr admits this. See official report. That silver and gold both were the measures of value of all other property till 1873 and the debtor had a right to pay in either metal. See Mr. Horr's answer to Mr. Motsinger. That the act of 1873 was surreptitiously passed—what Garfield, Blaine and others said upon this subject will be found in the Congressional Record during the discussions. A letter from ex-Attorney General Pierpont, under President Grant, to Hon. George Merrick, Denver, Colo., stating that Gen. Grant told him that he was deceived by the act of 1873, is in my possession and I will cause it to be printed and get general circulation.

That for all time of which we have a knowledge gold and silver were treated equally as money; both had a right to enter the mints in all the countries of the world until 1816, when England closed her mints to silver, and 1873-4 when the United States, Germany, France and the Latin Union followed. And until 1873-4 the commercial value of the two metals were substantially at a parity with the legal ratio. That this condition made both metals available for use as primary money, and the demand for primary money was relieved by the volume of both metals.

That prices of all property are now measured in gold alone and are substantially at the present time one-half what they would be under the bimetallic system.

That there were $143,000,000 in silver coined at our mints prior to 1873, all of which coined prior to 1853 was primary money, and since 1853 the silver dollars were primary money. That all the silver coined since Feb. 12, 1873, has been token money, representing gold; is not exerting an influence as a measure of values, and is not performing the functions of primary money.

That Mr. Horr found no errors in Coin's Financial School except the statement on page 9 where it stated that the silver coined prior to 1873 was $105,000,000, which we both agree should read $143,000,000, and that was not an error affecting the principle involved.

Mr. Horr stated that Jefferson did not stop the coinage of silver dollars in 1806 and direct that all silver seeking the mints be coined into fifty cent pieces and less because of the scarcity of small money, as stated in the School, but virtually receded from this claim (page 144). The exportation of silver dollars should have also been coupled by me with this statement in the School. The reason for this exportation was not, however, on account of a premium on silver over gold, but because our silver dollars circulated as money in other nations, where their familiarity with the dollar would cause it to do so; whereas they were not familiar with our fractional coins, and thus the latter more readily staid with us.

Mr. Horr said that when gold or silver was the unit the quantity in a dollar could not be worth either more or less than a dollar, more or less than itself, and criticised my statement in the School that it could be worth more. I refer him now to recent market quotations in New York when gold bullion was selling at a small premium, which was accounted for at the time as purchases made by a syndicate to prevent gold from going to the mints. I also refer him to the unit I gave him, the old-coin dealers' quotation on which is $7.

Mr. Horr's frequent references to a change in the ratio prior to the formation of this government is answered by this: That these changes were not to make less money, but to make more money. In no instance is it known that silver was disturbed by increasing the size of the coins. These changes were made in the gold coins and were made to make more money. When these changes were made in the legal ratio the commercial ratio soon conformed to the legal ratio.

It is admitted by the other side that our long-time debts, including national, state, municipal, corporate, and including farm and home mortgages, amount in round figures to $20,000,000,000. It is also admitted that this does not include current business accounts and notes, nor the enormous sum that hangs over the army of debtors who have gone out of business since the repeal of the last bankrupt law, and that may still be within the statute of limitations. Neither does it include debts due from individual to individuals that are not on record, and that cannot be classed as debts coming under the head of business or traders' debts. Nor does it include debts coming under the following heads: Pawnbrokers, chattel mortgages, partial payment sales, maritime debts, overdrafts, judgments and taxes. If I had had time in the debate I would have justified by detail and with authorities the $40,000,000,000, at which I had estimated the aggregate indebtedness of the people of the United States.

The great danger of relying on bank credit to make up for us the insufficient supply of money, aside from the heavy tax—approximately $200,000,000 annually—on the people, is the power of the banking fraternity controlling this credit system to bring on panics by shutting off the supply at pleasure, as they did in 1857, 1873 and in 1893, when they used it to assist Mr. Cleveland in what they called "teaching the people an object lesson."

The world, time out of mind, has had business panics. That our present civilization has not removed the possibility of these recurring panics, and that to a large majority of the people on this earth their almost exclusive attention and labors are given to acquiring a living with, in most instances, indifferent and discouraging results, will be admitted by every one. It was once supposed that labor-saving improvements and inventions would lessen the necessary toil of man, and was a promise of a day to come when with little labor all would be provided for, and humanity as a whole would be benefited. Has it had that result? All will answer that it has not. The lines of demarkation between the rich and the poor are more marked than ever.

And yet if there were no defect in our civilization inventions would have the effect first intended for them. That the passageway to a new era is blocked by a defect in our civilization, should be admitted by all. The first obstacle in the way is selfishness. The promotion of self and personal interest at the expense of others pervades nearly the whole of mankind. Property has come to be in our laws, our habits and our morals, the thing of first importance. Under such teachings we can see men and women suffer from hunger and pass them by without concern.

Thus we are in a commercial age where inventions, education and all forms of human skill and ingenuity are made to promote the personal ends of men or combinations of men. Such an age promotes selfishness in all things. It is this era of selfishness that made it possible for selfish men, wise in their own interest, to demonetize silver and increase the value of their holdings as measured in other people's property.

Mr. Horr's final rejoinder was as follows: I stated that when either a gold or silver unit is being used as a measure of value the one so used can never be above or below par. When one is quoted at a premium it is never in actual use, but is measured by the other which is in use. This is self evident.

While preparing his summary it occurred to him [Mr. Harvey] that there is one honorable body in the United States which he had not vilified, the supreme court. Hence he goes out of his way to slander that tribunal, bent upon his general plan to prove that there is nothing but rottenness in this republic.

His summary, like his debate, attempts to disparage honest industry, thrift and solvency. His whole system is at war with the best achievements of civilization, and clearly aims at the destruction of law, individual development and social order, if need be through revolution.

His whole case rests on an indictment against humanity, and he seems unable to detect anything but bad odors in a world full of sweet fragrance. Out upon such wicked misrepresentation!

I have shown that Mr. Harvey is devoting his life to deceiving the people, and that such boys as "Coin" are fitly described in Psalm lviii: 3: "They go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies."

Mr. Harvey's reply to Mr. Horr's summary is as follows:

I supported my proposition that primary money only is the measure of values as will appear on pages 269, 270 and 276 as now published in the official report.

Mr. Horr shows that he does not yet know what bimetallism is. The cheaper metal mostly in use does not mean monometallism. Because a metal is not actually and constantly in circulation does not mean that it is not regulating our currency. If he were right in that we are now on a paper basis, for gold is not in actual circulation.

He is exceedingly mixed as to the order in which I presented the crime of 1873. My claim was that the bill was surreptitiously passed, not that any one was bribed. This I fully sustained, so strongly that no one can reasonably doubt there was corruption.

His 8 per cent. fall in prices is 1891 (date of Aldrich report) compared with 1860. The prices of 1873 is the proper comparison; prices have fallen 9 per cent. since 1891.

The book by Suess was written in 1891, and the reader by turning to pages 99 and 190 of the book on Coinage Laws and Statistics will get the answer to his $380,000,000 gold coinage statement. His statement is not true. Couple also with this the further fact that a large percentage of the gold used in the arts are gold coins.

Statistics prove that nearly two-thirds of all the letters carried by the postal service of the world are written, sent to, and read by the English-speaking people.

The whole of the land on the globe above water level if shoveled into the Pacific ocean will only fill one-seventh of it.

More than one thousand people earn a living in Paris by fortune-telling, and their total earnings are estimated at [illegible]000.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

(First pub. July 25, '95.)
(Last pub. Sept. 5, '95.)

NOTICE is hereby given that Charles L. Hoff and Anine Hoff, his wife, did execute and deliver to J. W. Smith their mortgage, dated the 22nd day of April, 1887, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 25th day of April, 1887, at 9 o'clock A. M., in book 30 of Mortgages, on pages 471 to 475, which said mortgage and the debt thereby secured were by assignment, dated the third day of June, 1892, and duly recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds on the 29th day of June, 1892, at 8:45 o'clock A. M. in Book 67 on page 566, duly sold and transferred by said J. W. Smith to the undersigned, Olaf O. Searle, who has ever since been and now is the owner and holder thereof. And default having been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the nonpayment of the sum of Three Hundred ($300.00) Dollars, and interest thereon at 8 per cent per annum, from April 13rd, 1892, secured thereby, and the amount now actually due and claimed to be due thereon at the date of this notice is the sum of Three Hundred and Seventy-eight and 80-100 ($378.80); and no action at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover said debt or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFOR, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, the premises described in said mortgage, situated, lying and being in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: The East half of the Southeast quarter of Section twenty-three, and West half of the Southwest quarter of Section twenty-four, in Township one hundred and forty-seven, Range forty-two, West of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty acres, more or less, according to the government survey thereof, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, at the front door of the court house in the City of Crookston, County of Polk, State of Minnesota, at 10 o'clock A. M., on Saturday the 7th day of September 1895, to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage, and $25.00 attorney's fees provided for in said mortgage, and the costs and charges of notice and sale.

Tennyson's Gruffness.

There are many stories of Lord Tennyson's peculiar gruffness of manner. On one occasion he was at a garden party, and somebody offered him a sandwich. He was laboriously munching this when the hostess rushed up to him with anxious inquiries about his health and entertainment. "Thank you, madam," he said. "I am eating a sandwich. Are your sandwiches usually made of old boots?"

A Reasonable Mistake.

"Young man," said the nearsighted passenger, "would you mind getting up and giving this old gentleman a seat?"

"Sir!" exclaimed the bloomer girl and the bearded lady simultaneously.—Chicago Tribune.

In 1855 extremely cold weather prevailed in the United States. Mercury froze and forest trees were killed by the frost.

NEWS IN MINNESOTA

Judge Smith T. Barnes of Blue Earth City is dead.

The new woolen mill at Pillsbury has opened for business.

September 1 will be celebrated at Winona as German day.

Gilbert's store, at Buffalo, was burglarized of goods worth $500.

A receiver has been appointed for the St. Cloud Street Railway company.

The Pine Tree Lumber company has voluntarily paid into the state treasury $4,600 for trespass.

A 9-year-old son of Dan More, a prominent farmer near Fountain, lost both his legs in a binder accident.

Battery A of the Minnesota national guard has been mustered out of the service by order of Adjutant General Muehlberg.

There is said to be some doubt that A. W. Rankin of West Superior will accept the position of inspector of graded schools. The salary is said not to be sufficient.

The attorney general holds that the census results may be given out in bulletins at the discretion of secretary of state; also that a daily newspaper need not be published on legal holidays.

The Eastern Minnesota railroad company has been sued for the amount of losses paid by insurance companies at Thompson. It is claimed the fires were caused by the railroad company's negligence.

The Catholic retreat at Winona closed Friday. The sessions were held in the Winona Seminary. Besides the other divines, Archbishop Ireland of St. Paul and Bishop Cotter of Winona attended the retreat.

The Rockefellers have settled the suit brought by the McKinleys against the Lake Superior Consolidated mines. It is said the amount paid was in the neighborhood of $200,000. The suit was for $600,000.

At the last meeting of the state high school board it was decided to appoint A. W. Rankin inspector of graded schools. George B. Aiton, inspector of high schools, had his salary raised from $2,000 to $2,500 a year.

Driving on the Rum river has again commenced, with fine prospects of getting the logs down as far as Milaca, at least. Foley Bros. & Guthrie expect to run their big mill day and night. Their cut will come close to 20,000,000 feet.

The Ironton Structural Steel company, which has completed the erection of a big steel rolling mill and open hearth furnace at Duluth, has begun work. It employs 150 men and rolls a 36-inch steel beam, the largest turned out by any mill in the United States.

Governor Clough has appointed G. G. Hartley and Alex McDougal of Duluth, and J. H. Sutherland, members of the commission from Minnesota to confer with a similar commission from Wisconsin, with a view to annexing Superior to Duluth. The governor himself is a member of the commission under the joint resolution.

The dry spell at Mapleton is unbroken. Two of the former saloonkeepers have come to the conclusion that the council will keep the license at $750, and have opened up lunch counters and are selling soft drinks. The fight between the saloonmen and the council has been a bitter one, and a great deal of ill feeling now exists.

Conductor McManus of the Duluth road, says he is absolutely sure that the J. V. Wheeler, who is reported to have been drowned in Forest lake recently, paid him a cash fare from Wyoming to Duluth on the night the alleged drowning took place. Mr. McManus gives a close description of Wheeler, and is positive that he is not mistaken in the man.

LIVE STOCK ASSOCIATION.

Movement of Importance to the Farmers of Minnesota.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 13.—It is proposed to form a live stock association for the state of Minnesota during the week of the state fair, and Professor Shaw of the state experiment farm at St. Anthony Park has issued a circular letter setting forth the objects and benefits to be derived. The proposal originated with a committee appointed by the board of trade of Minneapolis, of which Mr. P. V. Collins is the chairman. The committee was appointed for the purpose of devising measures calculated to promote the live stock interests of the Northwest. Mr. A. L. Crocker, the president of that body, has taken an active interest in the movement from the first.

Some time ago Mr. Collins and Professor Shaw, on behalf of the committee, interviewed the members of the state fair board at a regular meeting of the same, to negotiate with them for the appointment of a day and hour for a meeting of farmers and citizens, to effect, if possible, the establishment of live-stock organizations representing the various live-stock industries of the state. The board heartily endorsed the proposal, fixed upon 9 a. m., of Thursday, September 12th, as a suitable time for holding the proposed meeting. It will, of course, be held in the agricultural hall on the state fair grounds.

The letter of Professor Shaw further sets forth the advantages of organization and the great possibilities of Minnesota as a stock raising state, closing with an appeal to farmers and business men to be present at the proposed meeting.

To Reform Sioux City.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., Aug. 12.—Dr. Carlos Martyn of Chicago, national secretary of the Christian Citizenship league, is in the city to form a central organization of the league and advise with the Ministerial association relative to a plan of campaign against the evils of the place.

JUSTICE FIELD'S GUESS.

Dickinson or Lindsay May be Named as Justice Jackson's Successor.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 10.—Associate Justice Stephen J. Field, in speaking of the successor of the late Justice Jackson of the supreme court of the United States said:

"Of the four gentlemen spoken of, Postmaster General Wilson, Senator Lindsay of Kentucky, Don M. Dickinson of Michigan, and Secretary Carlisle, it is very difficult for me to select the one who will receive the appointment. If Carlisle accepts he will have to give up his presidential aspirations and of the three Lindsay is far the more efficient jurist, although all of them are capable and would be a credit to the United States and themselves. Don M. Dickinson is a warm personal friend of the president and so is Wilson. Therefore under the present circumstances, it would be a rather difficult matter to name the man. Any one would be good, but I would not be surprised to see either Dickinson or Lindsay receive the appointment, although I would not care to venture that as anything other than a mere personal opinion."

"When will the appointment take place?"

"Some time before the second Monday in October, and there may be a special session called to confirm the president's nomination, as a justice would not care to sit in the supreme court of the United States unless his nomination was confirmed. Besides there are a great many important cases coming up before the next court, and it is necessary there be a full attendance.

General Greely's Pun.

General Greely of arctic fame is as distinguished in the social circles where he is known as in the field of polar exploration. Brave and gallant, he is a great favorite in society, but it is doubtful if he has anywhere a more ardent admirer than one small maiden to whom he stands as a knight "sans reproche."

She was the host's daughter at an afternoon reception when General Greely was the lion of the occasion. The belles of the town were directing all their volley of superlative and bewitching glances at the hero, who, however, ignored these enticements and asked to accompany the 12-year-old miss to the dining room. Delighted beyond measure at this unexpected attention, the child accepted and went proudly off, scarcely knowing whether the salad he brought her were chicken or sawdust. The crowning joy came, however, when, talking to her as if she "had been Mrs. Cleveland," to quote her own words, her companion asked how many brothers and sisters she had.

She replied, "One brother and one sister, the boy between," and added, "Some persons call us a sandwich, but I think that is rather hard on us girls, because everybody likes meat so much better than bread."

"Ah, my dear," said the general, with a bow, "not when it is so well bred."

Can any sneerer at puns drive from the maid's memory her exclusive pleasure in this one?—New York Times.

When Tears Are Dangerous.

M. S. Gregory, sheriff of Amador, was telling some friends the other evening about a plucky deputy and wound up by saying: "When you find a man as cool and steady as a rock in the face of danger, you can bet on him. But the most dangerous men are those who laugh or cry when they have a dispute on hand. I knew a man named Drew, down in Texas, who was noted as a very bad man. When he was doing any shooting, he would laugh loudly—a hard, demoniacal laugh, without any merriment in it. Up at Indian Diggings, many years ago, two men named Archer and Pawson had a dispute with a German about a claim. When they claimed the property, he broke down and cried, and they, supposing they would have no trouble in taking possession, marched on the ground. The German took up a broken pick and laid them both out. Archer was badly hurt and was a long time getting over his injuries. After that whenever he saw a man start to cry he got out of the way."—San Francisco Call.

AUTHORS AND MARRIAGE.

The Single State, It Is Said, Is the Best For Literary Men.

When we compare the restrictions of married men with the opportunities of the bachelor, we see that the latter has well nigh boundless possibilities for going into the social world. He has scores of invitations which will never reach his married friends, and he is generally sought after in society until he is almost threescore and ten. Even married women are more interested in him, whether they have a candidate for his hand or not. They talk with him on a wider range of subjects, in which they know he is surer to be interested than those whose chief thoughts are wrapped up in their families. He may have no more invitations to the most notable gatherings than famous married men, but it is in the less pretentious places that most is learned of human life, and he can call where husbands cannot, and so easily study types denied to them. The world lies open in all directions to him. He is not tethered to a stake. He wishes to study the society of a certain city, to write a novel with a local flavor, and he removes there at his own sweet will. He stays abroad as long as he likes, and if he wishes to study the lower classes there he can live in lodgings among them where he would never take his wife.

When we come to investigate the lives of the greatest authors, we shall find that the majority either did not marry, or they were unhappily mated, and hence thrown on the world for consolation and enlargement of knowledge, or they laid the foundations for greatness before marriage.

Among those we may mention in the class of unmarried authors are Alexander Pope, Thomas Gray, Oliver Goldsmith, Edward Gibbon, Charles Lamb, Lord Macaulay, Washington Irving, Wilkie Collins, Charles Reade. We ought also to add to this list the giant satirist, Dean Swift, for he never lived with his wife, and Lord Byron, who had only about a year's experience of married life.

We find some great names among the list of the unhappily married. The most enthusiastic advocates of matrimony could scarcely have the assurance to say that it aided or was anything else than a clog to Chaucer, Shakespeare, Dickens or Thackeray.

It would be wearisome to give the names of all those authors who laid the foundations of greatness before marriage, and we shall instance only Milton, Goethe and Dante.—Mid-Continent.

A TRAIN IN PERIL.

Great Northern Overland Narrowly Escapes Destruction by Fire.

BLOCKED IN BURNING FORESTS.

Coolness of the Train's Crew Prevent a Shocking Calamity.

SPOKANE, Wash., Aug. 21.—Passengers on the westbound Great Northern train had a narrow escape from death. The train had passed through a fiery furnace of burning forests for a distance of 10 miles and when it reached the Little Spokane river, about 20 miles east of this city, a huge tree fell across the track from the mountain above just as the train was passing. The engine struck it, causing the train to stop so suddenly as to throw the passengers violently from their seats. The burning tree was dragged partially under the cars and for a moment the train toppled to one side until it almost went into a deep chasm on the other side. So intense was the heat from the forest fire that and almost took fire. The passengers for a time were panic stricken and but for the coolness of the train crew they would have rushed into certain death. The burning tree set fire to the mail and baggage cars, but the flames were extinguished with water from the stream. With axes the track was cleared and the train succeeded in reaching here badly damaged.

The fires have now reached south along the line of the Great Northern and continue with unabated fury. Millions of feet of timber have already been destroyed. In the section where the flames are now burning are several small settlements, and a good many settlers are scattered throughout the timber and for their safety. In the Northern Panhandle of Idaho, a wild and uninhabited wilderness, the fire is rapidly licking up the vast timber. Never before in the history of the Northwest have the fires caused so much havoc.

Mr. McCreary, superintendent of bridges of the Northern Pacific, has arrived here. He confirms the report of the death of four men. They were bridge carpenters and had gone out on a long bridge to extinguish the fire, and failing to do so they sought to return, only to find their retreat cut off. They leaped from the bridge into the chasm 136 feet below and were dashed to death.

HEAVY MARSH FIRES

Destroying Large Areas of Meadow in Several Wisconsin Towns.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 21.—Heavy marsh fires, running under the sod and breaking out in unexpected distant places, are burning on what is known as the "Big Marsh," in Palmyra, Hebron and Cold Spring township, covering an extent of thousands of acres. Much valuable hay of this year's crop has already been burned, and more must go. The extent of burned ground is ruined for years to come, as the fires penetrate deep, destroying its fertility. Men and boy volunteers are fighting the fire that only long, heavy rains will extinguish.

HOLMES' CASTLE FIRE.

It Is Believed to Have Been of Incendiary Origin.

CHICAGO, Aug. 21.—Discoveries made by the police lead to the belief that the fire in the noted "castle" of H. H. Holmes was of incendiary origin. Several people living near the burned building saw two men enter the house before the fire broke out and leave in great haste. A search of the building revealed a half can of gasoline in the secret stairway leading to the basement, and a search is being made for the men who are suppose to have started the blaze.

Big Cooperage Mill Burned.

AITKIN, Minn., Aug. 21.—The mill of the Aitkin Cooperage company burned during the afternoon. The cause of the fire is not known. The mill belonged to George W. Knox, was leased by the cooperage company and was worth $20,000. Mr. Knox being away the amount of the insurance can not be ascertained. Both mill and machinery are a total loss, but the stock of staves and headings was saved.

The Bridge Gave Way.

BIRMINGHAM, A.a., Aug. 21.—While a pleasure party of 20 people was crossing a bridge that spans Five Mile creek at Brookside the bridge gave way with a crash and precipitated its occupants into the water below. Alfred McPherson, aged 10, was probably fatally hurt by falling beams. All the others were more or less bruised, among them being several women and children.

Farmers Neglect to Settle.

GREAT LOSS OF LIFE

BY THE BURNING OF THE GUMRY HOTEL, DENVER,

Which Was Wrecked by an Explosion. Battery of Boilers in the Basement Supposed to Have Blown Up—The Ruins Burned Fiercely and Firemen Were Unable to Rescue the Imprisoned Unfortunates.

DENVER, Aug. 20.—A portion of the Gumry hotel, the scene of Sunday night's frightful disaster, is still standing, gaunt and sinister, constantly threatening to crash down upon those delving in the ruins at any moment. The search for victims has been carried on with the utmost energy constantly, with the aid of 20 arc lights. Flames have broken out afresh and engines are pouring on water, still further impeding the work of rescue. The list of dead and missing now numbers 25, making the disaster the worst that ever occurred in the city. So far only seven bodies have been recovered, being those of Manager Grenier and his wife, clasped in each other's arms; Gors Burt, a Rock Island railroad conductor; Mrs. George R. Wolfe and daughter, Fred Hubbell and Will Richards, the elevator operator of the hotel.

The Engineer Probably Dead.

Among the missing is now included Elmer Pierce, the night engineer, who is said to have re-entered the hotel just before the explosion occurred. It is to this man's carelessness that the disaster is attributed. The bodies of Peter Gumry and General Adams are still in the ruins. Judge James Glynn, who was at first supposed to have been in his room at the hotel, turns out to be at Holyoke, Colo., where he was spending Sunday with friends.

A vast throng surrounds the building on every side, pressing forward as far as the fire ropes will allow. The police are constantly guarding against any one slipping through the lines on account of the great danger that the front of the building may fall. The list of victims is as follows:

The Dead.

PETER GUMRY, owner of the hotel.

R. C. GREINER, manager of the hotel, son-in-law of Peter Gumry.

MRS. R. C. GREINER, clerk of the hotel, daughter of Peter Gumry.

Child of Mr. and Mrs. Greiner.

GENERAL CHARLES ADAMS, Manitou, Colo.

A. L. BLAKE, Pueblo, Colo.

MYRON E. HAWLEY, Union Pacific railroad clerk, Denver.

FRED HUBBOLD or HAUSER of Elizabeth, Ia.

GEORGE BURT, passenger conductor, on the Rock Island, Colorado Springs.

MRS. WOLF and daughter.

Two chambermaids, names unknown.

One bell boy, name unknown.

The Missing.

—— GREINER, father of R. C. Greiner, manager of the hotel.

BUD BURNS, Colorado Springs.

W. J. CARSON, Pueblo.

F. E. FRENCH and BERT LARCH, both of Central City, but not positively known to have been in their room.

E. F. M'CLOSKEY, Canon City, Colo.

J. L. KIRKE, Omaoa.

J. A. BROWN, Omaha.

ELMER PIERCE, engineer of the hotel.

A Score Probably Escaped.

Out of 50 or more people who were certainly in the building, a score got out safely, and six others were rescued with more or less serious injuries. The firemen labored all day and night in the work of excavation, but the progress is slow, and perhaps days will elapse before the uncertain horrors of the heap of destruction can be fully told.

Before fire added to the horrors of the explosion, the firemen were appealed to piteously by men and women and babes whose lives were being crushed out in the ruins. Then the fire broke out and that ended it. Exactly how many were saved it is impossible to state, but it is known that several who were in the back part of the building managed to escape in some manner.

Engineer Was Drunk.

There is no doubt the disaster was caused by a boiler explosion. Elmer Pierce, the engineer, it is said, was intoxicated, and after turning a quantity of cold water into the hot boilers, left the building ten minutes before the explosion occurred. The police are looking for him.

R. E. Irwin, the night clerk, says Pierce, who was only 17 years old, was drunk when he went on duty, and that he was in the habit of neglecting his duty.

Irwin was pinned beneath some heavy timbers at his desk, and was rescued by a fireman. He has scalp wounds and internal injuries, but will recover.

AN AGED JURIST DEAD.

Ex-Associate Justice Strong Dies at Lake Minnewaska, N. Y.

LAKE MINNEWASKA, N. Y., Aug. 20—Ex-Associate Justice Strong of the United States supreme court died here at 2:10 p. m.

Martin Assumes Tammany Leadership.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—The statement is printed here that ex-Police Commissioner James J. Martin has assumed the leadership of Tammany Hall, and that the friends of Richard Croker have sent him telegrams urging his immediate return.

Near the Frost Line.

Pretty cold nights for the last half of the week made farmers feel somewhat nervous and apprehensive of frost, which, however, did not materialize. If no frost occurs this week, everything except, perhaps garden stuff, will be entirely out of danger.

Mebbe She Wood.

A southern editor talks to his delinquent subscribers in the following style: "Wagons cannot be run without wheels, boats without steam, bull frogs jump without legs, or newspapers carried on everlastingly without money noy more than a dog can wag his tail when he has none. Our subscribers are good, but what good does n mon'e good do him when it don't do any good? He thinks, no doubt, that everyone has paid except him, and as we are a clever fellow and his is a little matter it will make no difference."

Pearls.

From the most ancient times, pearls seem to have been highly valued for purposes of adornment. Twenty-two centuries before the Christian Era, the Chinese cultivated the pearl mussel, and at this day they are ahead of other nations in this respect. Carefully opening the valves of the fresh water mussel, the operator inserts small pieces of wood sometimes carved into fantastic images, which in the course of a year or two are coated with a deposit of pearl. The largest known pearl in the world is one in the Kensington (England) museum, weighing three ounces, and being four and a half inches in circumference: the most perfect one is in the Moscow (Russia) museum, weighs 28 carats, and is a perfect globe. The principal fisheries for sea pearls are in India and the Persian Gulf, though the Australian coasts are developing strongly. Fresh water pearls are found in many rivers of our country, the best being on the Little Miami, in Ohio. where they are worked systematically. Pearls have also been found at various points on the Wisconsin, and at Lytle, on the Black river, both localities being easily reached by the fast and elegant trains of the Burlington Route, the Mississippi scenic line. For tickets, maps and rates call on your home ticket agent, or for further information address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

STEENERSON EXPLAINS.

Speaking to Sheriff Steenerson in relation to the reports that have been circulating in the Twin City dailies, he said: "The report that I said I saw 'hoppers flying over in numbers sufficient to eat up all of Polk county if they should alight, is very much overdrawn. What I did say was that I saw a number of 'hoppers on the ground that looked like the regular Rocky Mountain 'hopper and it seems that the newspapers have gone to work and scared up more 'hoppers and made them to fill the air with untold millions. It is not right and it is doing an injustice to this country to have such sensational stories floating around with no more foundation, in fact, than this one has and all papers who care for the welfare of this country a little bit, should not be so fast to give it a black eye. There is nothing in what I saw or said to cause any serious apprehension."

Getting Ready.

Almost every day the railroads bring in from one to two threshing outfits, and on Monday the freight on the Great Northern road put the cap-sheaf on by bringing in twelve complete new threshing rigs—engines, separators, and all. It took several flat cars to bring the outfit. That looks as if there would be no lack of machines to thresh out the bountiful crop now being harvested.

In Your Blood

Is the cause of that tired, languid feeling which afflicts you at this season. The blood is impure and has become thin and poor. That is why you have no strength, no appetite, cannot sleep. Purify your blood with Hood's Sarsaparilla, which will give you an appetite, tone your stomach and invigorate your nerves.

Hood's Pills are easy to take, easy in action and sure in effect. 25c.

THE DEAL IS A GO

CLOUGH CONFIDENT HILL WILL GET THE NORTHERN PACIFIC.

Matters Are Progressing Nicely, He Says, and the Bondholders and President Hill Are of One Mind on the Subject Bondholders Made the Overtures.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 17.—Colonel W. P. Clough, vice president of the Great Northern, returned at noon from a six weeks' visit in the East. A reporter saw Colonel Clough shortly after his arrival at his office. The colonel was not anxious to talk much on the business which took him to the East, but allowed, in reply to a question from the reporter, that it was in connection with the Northern Pacific deal. He said that there was little that could be said at this time. He finally consented to tell the reporter all that was ready for publication.

"The Northern Pacific is trying to get Mr. Hill, and not Mr. Hill the Northern Pacific," said the colonel.

"The Northern Pacific stockholders have put the road into bankruptcy, and the bondholders are trying to put it on its feet again. They have decided that Mr. Hill is the man to do this, and have made certain overtures to him."

"Are you at liberty to state what these overtures are?" he was asked.

"No, I am not," was the reply. "All I can say is that they have reached an agreement with Mr. Hill, and both sides are satisfied."

"Then you think that in time Mr. Hill will have entire charge of the road?"

"I certainly do."

"How soon will the change be made?"

"That I cannot say now. In fact I have nothing further to say on the subject."

STRONG LANGUAGE

By Federal Judges in Deciding a Northern Pacific Case.

CHICAGO, Aug. 20.—Another sensational chapter in the Northern Pacific receivership case was opened in a decision by the United States court of appeals. This is the court of final jurisdiction. The opinion was prepared by Judge Caldwell and assented to by Judges Sanborn and Thayer. Referring to the original appointment of Northern Pacific receivers by Judge Jenkins, the opinion says:

"It is obvious that if an individual or private business corporation had conveyed its property to another for the same purpose and upon the same trusts that the court was asked to take this property and did take it, the law would have stamped the conveyance as one made to hinder and delay creditors, and fraudulent and void for the reason."

Aids the Ives Interest.

Under any circumstances this would be strong language. When used by the court of highest jurisdiction in the United States it will undoubtedly be made the basis by the Ives interest in the Northern Pacific in a suit to have the appointment of the receivers vacated. The language of the court was used in the decision of a suit brought originally by Charles Scott against the Northern Pacific. On the suit he recovered judgment for $3,115.50. Satisfaction of the judgment was resisted on the ground that the road was in the hands of receivers, and Scott's judgment was thrown out by the lower Dakota court on this ground. Right here another very important legal question was finally settled, the court deciding that the Dakota court had full powers to satisfy judgments and aid in the collection of debts on all such property of the company as was not embraced in the mortgage under which the receivers were appointed.

GETS FIVE YEARS

Sentence of the Court Pronounced on W. W. Taylor.

PIERRE, S. D., Aug. 17.—Judge Gaffy has sentenced W. W. Taylor to five years in the penitentiary.

Taylor at Liberty.

PIERRE, S. D., Aug. 17.—Ex-Treasurer Taylor's attorneys, Homer & Stewart, secured the $30,000 bond required by the supreme court for his appearance Aug. 6, about 9 p. m., and it was approved in open court by the full bench.

Civil Service in Morton's Bureau.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 19.—The extension of the classified civil service to practically the entire force of the agricultural department is formally announced in a circular issued by Secretary Morton.

KEEPING UP THE RESERVE.

Bond Syndicate Deposits More Gold in the Sub-Treasury.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—United States Treasurer Morgan has received a telegram from Assistant Treasurer Jordan at New York, stating that the bond syndicate had deposited $1,656,000 in gold in exchange for legal tenders, and later in the day another telegram was received stating that $1,150,000 in gold had been withdrawn for export to Europe. This leaves the gold reserve at the close of business $102,431,061. This second deposit by the syndicate confirms the officials in the belief that it fully intends to see that the $100,000,000 gold reserve is not invaded.

Let Us Have a Big Exhibit.

Polk county will have a big tent of her own on the State Fair grounds next month for the display of her cereal and vegetable products, and every farmer should be represented. Now is the time, before the wheat, oats and barley are in the stack to secure a sheaf of these cereals for exhibition. Every farmer who takes any interest in the upbuilding of his town should make this a personal matter, and see that his town is duly represented by a sample of everything it will raise. Samples may be left with Mayor McKinnon, Louis Fontaine, Lewis Ellington, P. J. McGuire or Allan McKinnon, who will see that they are properly forwarded and placed where they will do the most good. Such a year as this Polk county should have an exhibit that will do her a vast amount of good. And she can with a very little effort on the part of those who should be interested.

The New Parliament.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—A special to The World from London says a census of the parliament just assembled shows that only 190 out of 668 are new members. As to occupations, 150 are lawyers, 54 are manufacturers, 88 are mechanics, 10 professors in universities, 31 journalists, 12 skilled laborers, 19 brewers, distillers and wine merchants, 46 army and navy officers in active service, 146 gentry, peers' sons and peers' brothers.

THREE HUNDRED KILLED.

Artillery Barracks at Toula Destroyed by an Explosion.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—The Daily News has a dispatch from Vienna which says that Trieste papers report that an explosion destroyed the artillery barracks at Toula, Russia, and that 300 men were killed, including many officers. The barracks were found to be completely undermined. Many arrests have been made.

Big Failure at Helena.

HELENA, Mon., Aug. 20.—I. L. Isreal & Co., wholesale liquor dealers and proprietors of the Boston clothing store, have made an assignment. The liabilities will amount to over $100,000, but the assets are thought to be ample to cover all indebtedness. Preferred creditors include mostly relatives of Isreal who advanced him money.

Lumber Yard Destroyed.

OWATONNA, Minn., Aug. 21.—Fire broke out in the Winona Lumber company's yard, and the entire plant was destroyed, together with George D. Holder's tub factory. The loss on the lumber yard is about $15,000; loss on tub factory, $2,500.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., Aug. 21.—The coal handlers strike has been settled and the men are fast returning to work. About 700 men were out.

LARS K. AAKER.

This Prominent Minnesota Politician Dies at his Home in Alexandria.

A BUSY LIFE.

Alexandria Post-News: Lars K. Aaker, one of the most prominent and influential Scandinavians in Northern Minnesota, died at his home in this village on Wednesday morning, August 14th, at 3:45 o'clock. He had been ill for several weeks and had been confined to his house since Sunday, the 4th inst., when he was able to be out. The immediate cause of his death was apoplexy. Mr. Aaker was a native of Norway, where he was born September 19th, 1825, at Lardal, Telemarken. He was a graduate of the Hviteseid Normal school. In 1845 he came to Dane county, Wisconsin, and after remaining five years with his father, he engaged in farming and took an active part in the affairs of that community, being a delegate to the first republican state convention. In 1857 he pre-empted land in Holden, Goodhue county, from which district he was elected two years later to the legislature, and was re-elected in 1861, but before resuming his duties enlisted in Company D of the Third Minnesota infantry as first lieutenant, under Capt. Hans Mattson. In the spring of 1862 he was honorably discharged because of physical disability and returned to his legislative duties. In 1867 and 1869 he was again elected representative and in the latter year was appointed receiver of the United States land office, then located in this village. In 1875 political differences lost him this office and he engaged in the general mercantile business here with Mr. L. Johnson, whose interest he afterwards purchased, and in 1879 formed the partnership with Mr. C. A. Christie as L. K. Aaker & Co., which continued until his death. In 1880 he was elected to the state senate from this district and in 1884 became receiver of the U. S. land office at Crookston, which office he held through two administrations until the beginning of Mr. Cleveland's second term. After losing this office he returned to Alexandria to his home, and devoted the last year of his life chiefly to his farm, which is beautifully located on lake Darling and lake Cowdry, one of the most picturesque spots in the county. Last year he completed a handsome residence in this village, which his family now occupies.

Mr. Aaker's death removes one of Alexandria's best citizens and closes a useful life. Personally he was a charming man. Of gentle disposition and kindly manner, though firm, he was also a man of excellent judgment and rare good sense. He was well educated, a teacher in his native country, companionable, courageous and a staunch friend. In manner he was very quiet, his voice was low and pleasing, and in dress he was plain, caring nothing for show. He was a Lutheran and a regular attendant of that church, and in politics always an ardent, consistent, working republican.

The family was quite large, and a brother, Mr. Nels Aaker, and two sisters, Mrs. Wadneson and Mrs. Solberg, of Goodhue county, and a third sister, Jargo, of Deerfield, Wisconsin, survive him. He was twice married, and by his first wife has three daughters living, Mrs. Theodore Bordson, of this village. Mrs. Steensland, of Madison, Wisconsin, now here on a visit, and Miss Clara. By the present Mrs. Aaker he has had three children, Kathrina, Lawrence and Ruth who is but an infant three and a half years old.

The funeral occured on Friday afternoon at three o'clock from the Norwegian Lutheran church and the Rev. Mr. Sattre officiated. The pallbearers were Senator Knute Nelson, and Messrs. Christie, Van-Hoesen, Sime, L. J. Brown and Sundblad.

East Grand Forks Items.

[From The Courier.]

Prof. and Mrs. Christy are in Canton, Ohio.

Threshing operations will commence next week.

The N. P. yard is being filled with empty cars in anticipation of a big harvest.

Harvest hands are getting from $1.25 to $1.50 per day, and many refuse to work at those figures.

A great number of farmers were forced this season to purchase new binders.

It is safe to say that by to-morrow evening one-half the grain will be cut. Threshing operations will commence on Monday of next week. Farmers this season will have an opportunity to do their plowing early.

A few days ago Henry Osterloh, Jr., of Keystone township, while meandering along the streets reading signs had his pocket picked by a man giving his name as John Murphy. Mayor Rhinehart witnessed the manipulations of Murphy and arrested him. As the Mayor walked off with Murphy toward the city hall a pal of his named C. W. Conway made an attempt to rescue Murphy, but assistance was soon rendered the mayor and both of the smooth ones were jailed. Justice Dwyer gave each ten days at the county jail.

Fertile Items.

[From the Journal]

The school house job is nearly completed.

Farmers are harvesting full blast this week.

Will Vannet spent Sunday with his parents in Fertile.

The foundation for the Johnson block is being laid.

Miss Maggie Vannet returned home from Devils Lake, N. D., Saturday night, after several weeks visit with relatives at that place.

W. A. Marin, of Onstad, was a caller at this office Tuesday. He reports crops out his way as far above the average and thinks harvest will be general the latter part of the week.

Marshal Rasmuson arrested a hobo Monday who was in the act of stealing a coat from another hobo who was the worse for liquor and lodged him in the cooler. He was afterwards released and given a limited time to get out of town.

Theo. Nelson told us a strange story concerning a young girl living close by him, by the name of Stucky. The young lady was returning home from Fertile one night last week and when near home was confronted by a huge monster, with large fiery eyes. She ran with all her might for home, followed closely by the beast, and was nearly crazed with fright on reaching the door of her home. The young lady is still confined to her bed and is in a pitiful condition and steadily sticks to the story about what she saw. A physician was called and pronounced the young lady suffering from a fright of some kind.

FOSSTON ITEMS

(From the Thirteen Towns.)

Frank Gravel, the hustling salesman for Anthony Kelly & Co., came up on Friday's flyer.

Miss Susie Monroe, of Crookston, is visiting with her sister, Mrs. A. McArty, of this place.

Sheriff A. Steenerson was in town on business on Tuesday, leaving on Wednesday for Crookston.

John Mittum started up his threshing rig Tuesday, on the Monson farm and threshed out 400 bushels of barley.

A cavalcade of Redlakers came into town last Saturday with blueberries which the market absorbed without taking breath.

Mr. John Lohn, of Towner, N. D. and Charles Lohn, of Crookston, came down on Monday's train to attend Mrs. Lohn's funeral. They returned Wednesday morning.

The Rev. Jackson is doing his best to reorganize the Congregational church and to put it in the way of permanently employing a minister. The good people were so long without a preacher before he came that the task is a trifle difficult, as the elements are a mixture of four or five denominations, but it is hoped that they will be able to pull together under one heading.

McINTOSH ITEMS.

(From the Times.)

The curfew bell now tolls the knell of departing day and the kids scamper for home at 9 o'clock.

C. F. Page closed a deal last week whereby the Drews become the owners of his Virginia avenue property.

The new mill at Erskine is being pushed rapidly forward and the building will soon be ready for the machinery.

Guy E. Pratt and family returned Wednesday from a two weeks visit with Mrs. Pratt's parents at Crookston.

Erskine is to have a drug store. Dr. McKinnon, of Argyle, has been looking over the field and will probably locate there.

W. E. Kelsey spent several days in this vicinity last week looking for "skip jacks."

C. F. Page left yesterday morning to make the rounds of the county in the interest of the fair.

A. A. Miller, one of Crookston's most trustworthy and successful attorneys, was in the city Friday evening on legal business.

Mrs. A. A. Miller, of Crookston, returned Saturday morning, having spent nearly a week visiting with her brother, C. F. Page, of this city.

Ole Narveson returned home Wednesday, much improved in health. He is well pleased with his trip and thinks Norway a very pretty place to visit. He was accompanied home by his son.

Ole J. Vaule, who is said to have designs on the office of county attorney, transacted business here Tuesday evening and returned to Crookston Thursday.

J. P. Foote spent several days last week looking after his interests in this vicinity and improved the opportunity to speak a good word for the cheese factory project. He returned to Crookston Thursday.

The sneak thieves who pilfered Osmund Sunnes' granary, were rounded up in short order and the stolen property recovered. The parties implicated were Knute Olson and S. G. Starlsson, of Paaperville.

THIEF RIVER FALLS ITEMS

[From the Press.]

H. O. Gilbertson has closed out his drug business here and will remove in a few days to Hayfield, Minn., where he will engage in business with his brother.

The little four-year-old daughter of Ben Anderson, who was so seriously injured a week ago last Sunday by the accidental discharge of a gun, and whom it was at first thought could not recover, is now improving right rapidly.

It was at first thought that the heavy rain and wind storm Tuesday night had done much damage to standing grain but upon later investigation very little damage is found. Oats that were blown down have raised up again and are now ripening very fast.

Gilbert Olson, of Norden, sustained a serious injury to his left arm by getting it caught in some way in the harvester. It was at first feared that amputation would be necessary but now there is no doubt but that it will soon get well.

H. O. Hansen has completed a deal whereby he will enter into the general merchandise business at Stephen, his former home and where he is now considerably interested in a business way. This will necessitate closing his business here, which he will do at once. His stock will be removed to Stephen next week and his family will follow in a few days.

Geo. W. Mason, a prominent lumberman of Eau Claire, Wis., has been in the city for several days looking over lumber manufacturing possibilities here. He will leave for the lakes today for the purpose of ascertaining the accessibility and amount of timber in that region and upon his return will doubtless conclude to commence operations here.

Public Spirited Citizens

Should take a delight in adding anything to our town or county in the educational line which is valuable, unique and is not found in other communities. Our townsman, C. E. Misner, tells us he has an opportunity to place in our city a fine three and a half inch astronomical telescope, which will be for the educational benefit of our citizens. There is not as fine a telescope anywhere in our state, except at Carlton college, Northfield, where they have a fine astronomical observatory. Mr. Misner says that Prof. Hicks' paper, Word and Works, of St. Louis, offers him this fine instrument if he will get up a club of 800 subscribers to the paper. He is willing to put in a considerable part of his time and make a great effort to secure this fine telescope. If our citizens give him proper support it will not be a very hard matter to secure it. Word and Works is a fine monthly magazine and is well worth $1 a year, the subscription price. Mr. Misner will take subscriptions to this paper and every subscriber will have the privilege of looking through the fine telescope, which will be put up at Lynae's photograph gallery, free of charge. You get your money's worth if you do not look through the telescope, for Word and Works is a splendid family monthly and cheap at $1.00, but you have the satisfaction of knowing also that you have contributed toward the addition to our county of a fine instrument, not to be equaled by anything in northwestern Minnesota. Mr. Misner, or his agent, will be around to see the people of the county within the next six weeks and we hope he will receive encouragement wherever he goes. [15-tf]

STOP THE TREMOLO.

A Nuisance In Music Which Destroys Good Singing.

Can any one explain to me the secret of the popularity of the detestable mode of singing which is now practiced so extensively in our city? I need scarcely add that I refer to what is commonly called the tremolo. It came into fashion about 40 years ago and is it not time that that fashion should die a natural death? Mme. La Grange was the first who introduced it here. She was much heralded, and therefore was believed to be a fine singer—to the extent that she drew fair audiences for a short time. But people soon wearied of her peculier style and ceased going to hear her. She was passee when she came to this country, and it was said that it was to cover a broken down voice that she had recourse to the now hackneyed vibrata. However, many deluded singers, considering that her style must be one of the good things which come to us from Europe, strove, but too successfully, to imitate it.

When I was studying vocal music, great care was taken to impress upon my mind the extreme importance and beauty of a firm, pure and steady tone, with its gradual crescendo and diminuendo. Ah, with what infinite pains I tried to produce my notes without a shadow of wavering or change of quality! And now to think that the beautiful sostenuto is considered of but small account by so many people who, I maintain, ought to know better! I have seen a roomful of people moved to tears by a pathetic song rendered by a well sustained voice, and with distinct enunciation of the words. Yet who would ever dream of weeping over the most touching ballad in the world when sung in the miserable, shaky style now in vogue, which leaves the listener in doubt as to whether he is hearing sung C sharp or D, F sharp or G?

Among the best of vocalists belonging to our city and its vicinity this tremolo is often adopted. For some reason sopranos and baritones use it most frequently, and I may add ad nauseam. It is more than disagreeable on the stage and in the parlor. It is beyond endurance when it obtrudes itself in the church service. No place or occasion is safe from its impertinent intrusion. I have heard a soprano of good standing profane the lofty strains of "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth" by her tremulous rendering, obnoxious as it was inappropriate.—Cor. New York Tribune.

The Powder Making Family.

A strange heritage was that bequeathed to his children by Eleuthere Iranee Du Pont de Nemoure, when, driven from France by the revolution, he came to the faraway state of Delaware, and with skill in chemistry, acquired under the great Lavoisier, set to work in 1802, making gunpowder for America and the civilized world, if a world can be called civilized that uses so much of it. Vast wealth he prepared for his descendants, the family fortunes today uniting into nearly $100,000,000. But along with the riches he left a dread responsibility that presses down relentlessly upon every son and grandson. "Thou shalt not rest; thou shalt not fear," is written on the brow of every Du Pont child, and read in the life of every Du Pont man. If ever a family was brave, it is the Du Ponts; if ever a family had need of bravery, it is they.

The Du Ponts monopolize the gunpowder business of America, controlling 28 of the 32 mills in this country. They do this by confiding to no one, not even to the archives of the patent office, their secret methods of composition, their specially devised machinery, and all the lore of gunpowder making that has come to them through generations. This inherited knowledge is the family treasure, and to guard it inviolate the Du Ponts must be their own mechanics, chemists, superintendents and engineers, must spend hours every day in the mills, must live with the menace of sudden and frightful death always about them.—McClure's Magazine.

THE "DEVIL'S NOOSE."

A Gigantic Flesh Eating Plant That Is Found In Nicaragua.

Carnivorous plants are certainly among the curiosities of the vegetable world. The poetical and religious Linnæus, who had occasion to study the fly catching peony, found, in his astonishment, no other name to bestow upon it than this—Miraculum naturæ (prodigy of nature). Since the illustrious Swedish botanist, the mechanism of carnivorous plants has been well studied, and particularly by Darwin, who has devoted to these plants a remarkable work. They are usually of small dimensions, and do not attain the size of one described in the "Bolletino del Naturalisti."

M. Fabiano Cerlo tells there of a gigantic carnivorous plant that has been discovered on the shores of Lake Nicaragua by a naturalist named Dunstan. He discovered this curious plant in the following manner: Traveling with his dog, he heard the animal give vent to cries of pain. He advanced and found his dog held by three black, sticky hands, under which the skin was chafed till it bled. These hands were the branches of a new carnivorous plant, which Dunstan calls the "land octopus." The branches are flexible, polished, black, without leaves, secreting a viscous fluid and furnished with a great number of suckers by which they attach themselves to their victims. It might almost be believed to be an octopus transformed into a plant.

To extricate his dog Dunstan tried to cut the branches, and succeeded, though not without difficulty, and after having his hands severely injured by the tentacles of the "land octopus." As may be realized, observations under these conditions were not convenient to make, and the naturalist was able to get few facts concerning this odd plant. He proved the presence of numerous suckers, and found that the fetid odor of the black sticky fluid that covers the branches serves to attract prey to the plant. He also was able to note similarity of character with other carnivorous plants. For instance, the "land octopus" abandons its prey after having sucked out the nutritive elements. The natives of Central America call this singular plant by the appropriate name of "the devil's noose."—Paris Cosmos.

A MONSTER FACTORY.

One of the sights of Seville which no tourist misses is the cigarette factory, in which the government employs nearly 2,000 women and girls. The showing about of visitors is accordingly looked upon as a regular source of income by the porter and matrons. After getting permission to enter you are placed in charge of a matron, who shows you through her own department and then passes you on to another, and so on, until your stock of pesetas and half pesetas, put aside for fees, is exhausted.

These matrons accompany the visitors, not in order to prevent the girls from flirting with them—nothing could do that—but to see that no tobacco, picadura or cigarettes may disappear. Before entering each room a bell is rung to warn the girls, who are in great dishabille on account of the sun, to put on their wrappers, and as the door opens scores of round arms and pretty shoulders are seen disappearing, while several hundred pairs of coal black eyes are fastened on you.

The passages are lined with cradles, and the young girl mothers to whom they belong implore you with eyes and hands for a penny for the Murillos of the future lying in them. These girls are more frank than subtle in their flirtations. There is not one in the crowd who will not be immediately conscious of a man's gaze fixed on her, nor will she be the first to turn her eyes away. Some will wink and even throw a kiss from a distant corner at the rich Inglese—all foreigners are supposed to be wealthy Englishmen.

They are a merry lot on the whole, these poor girls, the quickest of whom make only 2 shillings a day, for which they have to toil 10 to 12 hours. They are allowed to smoke if they wish, and they make use of this privilege. They are remarkably deft at rolling the cigarettes, but not all seem eager to make as many as possible, for some are idling and others are asleep, but no one cares, as each one is paid according to the number she twists up, aided only by a piece of specially made cartridge paper and a small tin affair on her little finger.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

English Tramps and Their Babies.

On arriving at York we went at once to Warmgate, the kiphouse district, and picked out the filthiest one we could find. The inmates were principally in pairs. Each moocher had his July (wife), and each little kid had his little Moll (sister). These children are the very offspring of the road, and they remind me very much of monkeys. Yet one has to feel sorry for them, since they did not ask for life and yet are compelled to see its meanest and dirtiest side. Their mothers love them, when they are not drunk, and when they are their fathers have to play mothers, if they are not drunk themselves. Never in my life have I seen a more serio comic situation than in that York kiphouse, where two tramps were rocking their babies to sleep. Moochers—bohemians of the bohemians—fondling their babies! I should far sooner have looked for a New York hobo in clergyman's robes. But tramping with children and babies is a fad in English vagabondage.—Josiah Flynt in June Century.

Famous Living Pictures.

"Living pictures" cannot be called an invention of "these modern days" since it is claimed that they were first employed by Mme. de Genlis for the purpose of educating the Duc d'Orleans' children, whose governess she was. With the help of several famous artists she arranged pictures of historic scenes which ladies of the French court posed for.—Ladies' Home Journal.

BIRDS LIKE TO TRAVEL.

The Reason They Annually Leave Northern Climes and Fly South.

Why do the birds flit southward each autumn and return again with every spring? No one knows, but science, in the person of Professor Wang, the eminent Austrian ornithologist, has just disclosed that the usual flippant answer to this question, "Because they like to travel," is not far out of the way, after all.

In a lecture that Professor Wang recently delivered at Vienna he gave some extremely interesting details regarding the migrations of birds, all of which migrations resemble one another in two respects: They follow the most direct line southward, and are made with almost incredible rapidity. Numerous observations have been made at Helgoland, which is the principal halting place of birds of passage from northern countries, and of Egypt, which is the winter home of many, and these observations have established some facts hitherto unknown. The bluebirds traverse the 400 nautical miles which separate Egypt from Helgoland in a single night, which is at the rate of more than 40 geographical miles per hour. The swallow's speed is over 2½ miles per minute, or nearly three times that of the fastest railway train. Even the younger birds, 6 or 8 weeks old, accompany the others in their journey.

Professor Wang asks himself what is the impulse which causes the birds, after the brooding and molting season is over, to quit our northern climate. He does not think it is fear of cold—for many species quite as delicate as those which migrate southward easily withstand the rigors of the winter—but that they have an irresistible humor for traveling. This is his idea of the fact, but he can give no explanation.

FIRST SHOT OF THE WAR.

Fired by the Cadets of the South Carolina Military Academy.

The first shot in the late war was fired by the cadets of the South Carolina Military academy, which occupies a spacious and formidable looking building called the Citadel, which was originally constructed for an arsenal. The organization and curriculum are similar to those of the United States academy at West Point. After the ordinance of secession was adopted the cadets were ordered to report for guard duty and were manning a battery on Morris island, when, on Jan. 9, 1861, the Star of the West attempted to enter the harbor with supplies and re-enforcements for Fort Sumter. The impulsive boys took the responsibility of driving her back, firing a shot across her bows to give warning. The steamer immediately ran up the United States flag and increased her speed. The shots fell thick and fast around her, and when one struck her in the stern the commander thought it prudent to retreat and turned his vessel seaward. The cadets of this institution believe that act entitles them to the homage of the south, and the prestige thus acquired has made them the objects of envy throughout that whole section.—Charleston Letter in Chicago Record.

Iron Tonic For Orange Trees.

G. W. Prescott of Highland, who took the medal for the best box of packed oranges at the late California State Citrus fair, has been experimenting with iron filings in his young orchard. Being master mechanic of the Santa Fe system in southern California at San Bernardino, he knew more about iron filings than he did about guano or any other fertilizer, and knowing that a certain amount of iron in the soil was essential to a healthy growth of the tree and the production of fruit he put five pounds of this material around each tree, and as a result he has a highly colored orange, where before he had a pale colored fruit.

The cost is insignificant. A thousand trees on ten acres will require 5,000 pounds of filings, which costs $4 per ton—$10 for the ten acre orchard. Of course this application of iron is not intended to supersede all other fertilizers, but simply to supplement them in order to give a good color to the fruit and enable the grower to put an attractive orange on the market, and incidentally to assist him occasionally in winning a gold medal. The railroad shops at San Bernardino can furnish one ton per day of this material, and other shops can also assist in supplying the demand.—Producer.

Cost of Living In Europe's Capitals.

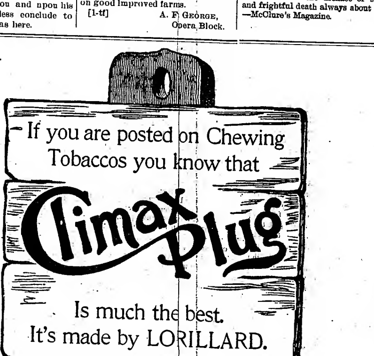
An investigation into the comparative cost of living at the various European capitals results in the following interesting facts: At Vienna the prices of most articles of food are lowest. At Madrid they are dearer than in any other capital, and such things as bread, meat, sugar and coal are very expensive. At St. Petersburg also the price of bread is so high that white bread is still considered a luxury above the means of the working classes. Next to Vienna, Brussels is an inexpensive city. Paris is a little higher in the scale, but London is "terribly expensive."—Westminster Gazette.

The Pleiades.

Those timekeepers the Pleiades have been used to mark the days from the most remote periods. Mr. T. W. Fewkes, describing the fire ceremonies of the Pueblo Indians of Tusayan, says that, having been present on two such occasions in 1892 and 1893, he found that the error of time made by the Indians as to the 13th of November in those two years was insignificant. It was the culmination of the Pleiades which told the Indians the proper time for the beginning of their rites.—New York Times.

Overeating.

Overeating is generally condemned on the ground that by stuffing the digestive organs or by giving them too much to do the food taken is prevented from properly nourishing him who takes it. It is possible, however, that one may suffer from too much nutriment as well as from too little, even when it is properly assimilated.



The ever-increasing popularity of CLIMAX PLUG can only be attributed to its high quality, delicious flavor, and satisfying substance—three features which all judges of Chewing Tobacco know to be essential.

Many men ask for a certain brand of tobacco through force of habit, without stopping to think whether there is anything better to be had for the same price. If you want the best, ask for CLIMAX PLUG.

MARKET POULTRY NOTES.

By a Man Who Has Made the Business a Life Study.

Market poultry experts generally agree that the most profitable way of conducting the business is to combine egg farming with broiler raising. In this way a regular income can be maintained the entire year. But just how the combination should be conducted all do not agree.

Some say make egg farming the prime object, and only hatch broilers when there is no sale for eggs. We cannot exactly understand that logic, as there is constantly, every day in the year, a call for this article, and the supply does not equal the demand. It must be that the writer has reference to the retail trade.

In some sections of the country eggs take a decided drop as soon as spring opens, while in other sections the prices remain good until summer. Where contracts are made at a certain figure for the entire year, of course it becomes another matter.

To our liking, we should say, sell eggs as long as prices are good and turn them into broilers when the price declines. We should sell them so long as the retail figure did not get below 20 cents a dozen and begin incubation when that price was reached. We believe that it will pay better to turn eggs into carcasses than to sell at less than 20 cents a dozen.

Some writers claim that to produce an egg costs 1 cent. This would make their cost 12 cents a dozen, and anything over that would be clear profit. They will sell eggs so long as they can get 18 cents or over that. At 18 cents they have 50 per cent profit, and they are content with that.

Supposing that a dozen eggs cost 12 cents, and out of that dozen only four chicks were raised up to a marketable weight, and the total cost, including price of eggs, would be $1 for those four broilers, and they brought $1 a pair, the usual price in the New York market, there would be an even $1 profit. Of course in some sections of the country broilers would not bring $1 a pair, but then generally in such localities feed is cheaper, which would about equalize it, and besides we have given a very low percentage of hatch and rearing.

There is money in the broiler business, but it is a branch that must be entered carefully, managed diligently and perfectly understood, if success is to result. No amateur should start this branch on a large scale. He should begin at the very bottom of the ladder and carefully climb up. There is so much to know: First, how to run the incubator so that it will require less responsibility and do best work; second, how to brood the chicks so they will not become chilled and die from bowel troubles; third, how to feed so that they will attain the desired weight without being subject to leg weakness and other troubles. All these matters must be carefully studied and watched. There is a big responsibility, and the work requires "eternal vigilance."

Egg farming is the easiest branch to follow. Start with that and let the broiler department be an adjunct.

James Rankin believes there is more money in raising roasting fowls than broilers. Some others prefer capons, but we are inclined to think that the latter branch never will make any headway in this country. There is not enough demand for the capon to make it an object.

Squab culture, properly speaking, comes under the head of market poultry, and quite a number of market farms are adding the work to their line.

There is money in raising ducklings for market, but it is a branch that requires more real hard work than any other. On Long Island, up in Massachusetts, in New York, in Pennsylvania and in other parts of the country, quite a business is being established in this line, and on many duck farms is made the combination of hen egg production for market.

Turkey rearing is profitable, but a good range is necessary. So with goose farming. On this account we think these fowls are neglected on many farms.

On farms where fancy fowls are reared and eggs sold for hatching it is not always advisable to sell pure bred eggs in market for table purposes, as they do not always reach that end. So these fanciers add broiler or roaster raising as an adjunct; the birds being killed and dressed before going to market, there can be no chance of falling into the hands of undeserving parties who would use them for breeding purposes.

There was a time when the fancier hated the marketman as much as one rival in business could despise the other, but after they became acquainted, after they found out that neither could do without the other, they combined, and today there are more fancy farms with market additions than farms on which the fancy alone is allowed.

It was a good change. After all, the only purpose for which poultry was created was for food. Fine feathers and high scores may attract the eye of those who love the beautiful, but if this beauty is gained at the sacrifice of the utility qualities it is only a matter of time when the breeds will drop down and out. Take, for instance, the once famous Black Spanish fowl. What more noble bird could have been created? What breed can give us the sized eggs for which they were noted? Where are they today? A foolish standard called for a large, white face, the larger the better, and today the Black Spanish is way in the background, and we say it is a most unfortunate affair. No breed ever made such a happy hit as did the Black Minorca, when it stepped in right at the time the Spanish were going backward. A call for a huge crest likewise injured the once popular Polish fowl.

Now, these remarks are not made to stir up a controversy, but are honestly given by who one has made poultry culture a study and who devotes his entire time to the cause. We believe in poultry for revenue, and the only way to get it is to come down to common sense business principles and methods.—Poultry Monthly.

AN UNLUCKY SPARK.

The Greatest Explosion of Gunpowder the World Has Ever Known.

The greatest explosion of gunpowder the world has ever known took place at the Du Ponts' works on the 7th of October, 1890. With their usual cautious policy the Du Ponts have never stated just how great a quantity of powder exploded at this time, but it is certain that three magazines and three mills in the upper yard were blown up, one after another, and a safe estimate will put the quantity of powder exploded at 150 tons. In this explosion 13 men and 1 woman were instantly killed, while 22 men and 9 women were injured, some fatally.

The explosion occurred a little after 8 o'clock in the afternoon. It began in the magazine for hexagonal powder, the kind used in large guns, and the most dangerous, being made not in grains, but in reddish, six sided cakes about an inch and a half in diameter, and an inch thick, with a small hole running through the center. These cakes look like nothing so much as the nuts on a wagon wheel. At the time of the explosion cakes of powder were being packed into large wooden boxes lined with tin, each box being about 8 feet square. The tin linings projected above the tops of the boxes about two inches, and when a box was packed were folded down over a tin cover fitted closely upon the cakes of powder. It was the duty of one of the workmen, William Green, to solder these tin edges down upon the tin cover, a hot iron being used for this purpose.

On the day in question what he had feared came to pass. A fellow workman, William McGarvey, was bringing him the hot irons from a charcoal brazier about 25 yards distant. Green stood at the door of the open magazine, and all around him were uncovered boxes filled with the hexagonal powder ready to be sealed and stowed away. There were also dozens of boxes that had been sealed. Just what happened will never be known, for neither Green nor McGarvey was left to tell the story. But the probability is one of the soldering irons was a little too hot, and by touching a particle of dirt on the tin cover produced the deadly spark.—Cleveland Moffett in McClure's Magazine.

WHAT THEY BELIEVE.

The God of the Scientists Is a Real, Living God.

Raoul Pictet, the learned Swiss physicist whose researches in low temperature—in the very domain of sympathetic vibratory physics—have brought him out of the "impenetrable cloud," in which materialistic science has wrapped the mysteries of nature, into the light of religious science after listening to "a wholesale" condemnation of scientific research from a Roman Catholic bishop, said to him, "Have you ever seen God?" "Of course not," the bishop answered. "Then I have this advantage as a researcher of truth over theologians," replied Professor Pictet, "for the longer I study the phenomena of nature the more distinctly I see God in all of nature's operations."

When Edison was asked, "Do you believe in a personal God?" "Certainly," he answered. "The existence of God can, to my mind, almost be proved from chemistry."

"The reason for skepticism and unbelievers is not to be wondered at," writes Thornton, "when men interested in scientific research find no evidence, from their experiments, of the presence of God in the universe. How could this be otherwise? God has to man but a subjective existence, which could never be reached by any known mode of experiments. Therefore man must get outside of himself, which means that he must 'die' to know God and the reality of things."—Mrs. Bloomfield Moore in New Science Review.

The Name Aroused Her.

Mr. Rudolf Lehmann declares that he once found political animosity of great service to him in painting a portrait.

His sitter was a London lady who belonged to a family renowned for its stanch political opinions. It was the height of summer and very hot. The lady was inclined to be stout, and under the influence of the heat she now and then fell into a nap, to the serious annoyance of the painter.

Her husband, who knew her weakness in this regard, asked Mr. Lehmann in the lady's absence if he had experienced any trouble of this kind. Mr. Lehmann could not deny it.

"Very well," said the husband, "the next time it occurs you just mention Mr. Gladstone, and you will have no further difficulty."

The artist took the hint, with immediate effect. Henceforth the lady was almost too wide awake.—Youth's Companion.

Lifting Power.

"The growth of a few tiny rootlets," observed the teacher of the botany class, "has been known to lift a heavy rock from its place, and the root of a tree growing out under a stone sidewalk will sometimes push it up and break it. Other cases of a like nature showing the strong uplifting power of vegetable growth have occurred, I doubt not, within your own observation. Is it not so?"

"Yes'm," said the boy with the faded hair. "I've heard my paw say his last year's corn crop lifted a mortgage off his farm."—Chicago Tribune.

The Big Sandy river in Kentucky was so called on account of its sand bars. The Indian name Chatteroi has a similar meaning. One tribe called it We-pe-poco-ne-ce-pe-we, another the Si-ke-a-ce-pe. or "Salt river."

What can be more foolish than to think all this rare fabric of heaven and earth could come by chance, when all the skill of art is not able to make an oyster?—Jeremy Taylor.

Guinea was named from a west African word meaning "abounding in gold."

CONQUEST OF THE NORTHWEST.

It Was Acquired From the British by Force of Arms.

In 1776, when independence was declared, the United States included only the 13 original states on the seaboard. With the exception of a few hunters, there were no white men west of the Alleghany mountains, and there was not even an American hunter in the great country out of which we have since made the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin. All this region north of the Ohio river then formed a part of the province of Quebec. It was a wilderness of forests and prairies, teeming with game and inhabited by many warlike tribes of Indians.

Here and there through it were dotted quaint little towns of French creoles, the most important being Detroit, Vincennes, on the Wabash, and Kaskaskia and Kahokia, on the Illinois. These French villages were ruled by British officers commanding small bodies of regular soldiers or Tory rangers and creole partisans. The towns were completely in the power of the British government. None of the American states had actual possession of a foot of property in the Northwestern territory.

The northwest was acquired at the time of the Revolution only by armed conquest, and if it had not been so acquired it would have remained a part of the British Dominion of Canada.

The man to whom this conquest was due was a famous backwoods leader, a mighty hunter, a noted Indian fighter—George Rogers Clark. He was a very strong man, with light hair and blue eyes, of a good Virginian family, who, early in his youth, embarked on the adventurous career of a backwoods surveyor, exactly as Washington and so many other young Virginians of spirit did at that period. He traveled out to Kentucky soon after it was opened up by Boone and lived there for a year, either at the stations or camping by himself in the woods, surveying, hunting and making war against the Indians like any other settler. But all the time his mind was bent on vaster schemes than were dreamed of by the men around him. He had his spies out in the Northwestern territory and became convinced that with a small force of resolute backwoodsmen he could conquer it for the United States. When he went back to Virginia, Governor Patrick Henry entered heartily into Clark's schemes and gave him authority to fit out a force for his purpose.—Theodore Roosevelt in St. Nicholas.

WOMEN IN FRANCE.

They Are Not Only the Stronger but the Better Half In That Country.

Women are the stronger as well as the better half of France. They do everything but build houses. The best inspector in the French custom house is a woman. She is in the Havre office, and she has a nose that can detect dutiable goods without opening a lock. She is naturally amiable and slow to anger, but woe to the foreigner or countryman who provokes her ire.

There is no sadder spectacle in the republic of France than the women shoe polishers, who doze under the sheds of the markets and quay, one eye shut and t'other fixed on the bootbox over the way, patiently waiting for trade. They ask 5 cents and accept 2 cents for their unwomanly work.

At Thiers, the blackest town in France, the women sit outside of the grimy little machine shops mating scissor blades and polishing knife and scissor handles. The stream that turns the 10,000 little mill wheels is blacker than the Chicago river, and as the furnaces never burn without belching the toilers and their devoted lifelong apprentices are sometimes Malay and sometimes Mongolian, but seldom Caucasian in color.

Not long ago a college woman went down to Thiers to teach school for the winter. The promise of 80 pupils was a temptation, but on reaching the colony of soot begrimed and smoke stained smithies she found that the position paid $5 a month, and the teacher was expected to furnish the fuel for the winter.—Philadelphia Times.

Sweet Peas.

Whether sweet peas can be successfully planted in autumn depends largely on the latitude, says Garden and Forest. In the southern states fall planting is a necessity, for this is the only way to give the plants a cool soil in which to make a strong, early root growth. Coming farther north, fall planting is safe up to perhaps the latitude of Washington, where the chances are about equal between planting in late autumn and in February. In southern California peas must be brought into bloom as early as February, although the nights are so cool there that they may be planted during any month in the year. The rule observed by the large seed growers is to plant just ahead of the rainy season. Indeed they have acres of volunteer sweet peas—that is, from seed which were scattered on the ground during the harvest—and 45 miles south of San Francisco these volunteer plants are in bloom by the 1st of May and often early in April.

Dr. Wilde's Queer Will.

By the terms of the will of one Dr. Wilde of St. Ives parish, Huntingdonshire, England, his trustees were directed to expend £50 in the purchase of a piece of land in St. Ives, the annual rent of which was to be set aside for the purchase of six Bibles at a cost of 7 shillings each. To decide who shall have them he requested his trustees to "prepare a saucer with three dice upon the altar table of the parish church and let the Bibles be raffled for."

SUBSCRIPTION RATES

One Dollar and Fifty Cents, if paid in advance to any address inside of Polk County. If outside of Polk County 15 cents must be added for postage. If not paid in advance $2 per annum to any address.

WE notice that tobacco has dropped ten cents. Well, well! We didn't realize it would make THAT difference when we quit using it.

IT is said that coal will be only two dollars per ton in New York the coming fall. Wonder how that interests us up here in Minnesota?

IT cannot be POSSIBLE that for the want of a few dollars Crookston will see the annual fair laid on the shelf such a year as this——CAN IT?

The city is plastered from hither to yonder with bills announcing the Fosston fair, the McIntosh fair and the Fertile fair, but where, oh, where! are the big posters announcing the coming of the Polk County Agricultural Fair? Echo answers—where.

IT is said that Capt. H. A. Castle has inaugurated the Davis boom for president. It would be a joke if Minnesota should furnish the next president——but she wont be allowed to do so. However there exists no better presidential timber than C. K. Davis.

THE JOURNAL acknowledges the receipt of a complimentary to the fair of the Polk and Norman County Fair to be held on Sept. 18, 19 and 20th. We are now anxiously awaiting receipt of a little card of invitation to the Polk County Agricultural Fair to be held at Crookston——when?

SOME democrats are patting themselves on the back and saying that now that business is reviving the democratic party will gain another cinch on the American people. Business is reviving a little in spite of democratic misrule and will take a boom when the dems are fired body, boots and br—anches.

LANS K. AAKER, who died at his home in Alexandria left many friends in this city who will regret to read the notice that appears elsewhere in this issue. Mr. Aaker was a very quiet man, but his influence was always felt in the political arena. He was a life-long Republican and a hard worker in the political field and his influence will long be missed.

FARGO is boasting because its city council has decided to pave two miles of her streets: Moorhead took the lead in that improvement, likes what she has got and is going to put down more this fall. Owing to the rolling nature of the ground Crookston does not need paved streets as badly as a level prairie city does but gravelled streets would be about the proper thing.

SHALL we have a fair is a question that the city of Crookston should answer in the affirmative. It will cost about $1000 to make it a success but it should be held even if the cost were double that sum. With every little village in the county holding a fair this fall the city of Crookston cannot afford to let the county fair go by default and we believe she will not if the matter is properly presented. The benefits are too obvious to need discussion and the only question to consider is will we put up for it.

THE city of Grand Forks is putting forth great efforts to get up what is called a street fair, and the citizens are taking hold and subscribing liberally. A business of that kind is not worth half as much to a place as is a rousing good county fair, and yet there seems to be a plenty of money forthcoming for it in Grand Forks. About the only good it can do is to advertise Grand Forks and a thousand dollars or so is not considered of much account when used to enhance the material interests of their city.

PRINTERS INK, a tradejournal published by the Geo. P. Rowell advertising agency sneers at the efforts of Minnesota publishers to break away from the thralldom of those eastern advertising houses, that for years have taken the cream of advertising from western publishers, and hopes by derision to strangle our efforts to get what there is in eastern advertising for our own publishers. That Rowell concern has been built up on the labors of newspaper publishers and no wonder they kick but they will find that Minnesota publishers are alive to their own interests.

Orange Judd Farmer:—The "creamery shark" is still in the field. His scheme is to induce farmers who don't know much about the business to rush into it without investigation and pay him $3000 to $6000 for an outfit that ought not to cost over $1500 to $4000. Of course a butter or cheese factory started under such auspices is pretty sure to fail. In spite of the repeated warnings and exposures of this game in the Orange Judd Farmer and other papers, the sharks have not only devastated the west but have got quite a foothold in the middle and eastern states. Cooperative dairying is a magnificent success when engaged in by intelligent men, but what can we say of dairymen who swallow all they are told by a creamery promoter and don't even get prices from other creamery outfitters! At least half a dozen big concerns will be glad to quote prices on whatever is needed for a butter or cheese factory, and will usually send a man to give full particulars. It is also easy to visit representative factories run on the different systems, and also to visit the patrons of such factories, so as to get at the real truth of the matter without depending solely upon the word of an agent who has an outfit to sell. No community will be swindled by the creamery sharks if the farmers read the papers, and when they don't know enough to take an agricultural paper they deserve to be robbed!

Beware of Ointments For Catarrh That Contain Mercury.

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten-fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

TUBERCULOSIS TEST.

(Farm, Stock & Home.)

A test for tuberculosis in cows was made at the Minnesota State Experiment Station a few days since, by Dr. Reynolds, veterinarian of the Station, and those that were shown to be affected were slaughtered and examined in the presence of several physicians and other spectators. "Tuberculine,, is administered to the suspected animal, and if it produces a decided increase in the temperature of the animal within a few hours it is accepted as good evidence of the presence of tuberculosis, or consumption. Six cows were killed that had been previously tested and declared by the test to be diseased. Post mortem examinations revealed the presence of the disease in every case and established the reliability of the test. It is unfortunate, in fact calamitous, that while the presence of the disease can be detected there has as yet been found no remedy for it. The only way so far known to eradicate the disease is to test all animals and kill those that are affected, for the disease is infectious and hereditary.. But the general application of such a remedy would be a very serious matter, for the disease is undoubtedly more general than is suspected, for cattle often have it and show no external signs of disease, and slaughtering them would prove a very serious loss, to be borne by their owners.

The milk and meat of the diseased animals are believed to plant the germs of consumption in the consumers of them, especially those who are at all consumptively inclined, but this point has not as yet been definitely settled. It is reasonable to assume, at all events, that milk and beef are not more unhealthy now than they have been for ages. Tuberculosis in cattle is not a new thing; the method of detecting it is new, hence we have means of knowing how widespread the disease is, but it is probably not more widespread now than it has been for many years, and therefore milk and meat are not more unhealthy. Scientific discovery has abolished that ignorance that enabled us to eat and drink in bliss the meat and milk of animals affected with tuberculosis. It is fortunate, however, that the scientists will allow us to eat meat and drink milk, and live, if the first is thoroughly cooked, and the last heated to about 150 degrees before using, and to be on the safe side it is best to abjure rare steaks and heat all milk as suggested.

These be busy days for the farmers in the Red River Valley. The harvest is now in full blast, and on every hand the hum of the harvester may be heard binding up the sheaves of one of the most bounteous harvests ever known in the Northwest. Good times are in store for the people of this valley if this crop is safely housed.

A phenomenon was witnessed at Mallory, Wednesday evening about 7:30. What appeared to be smoke was forcing its way out from the under ridge of the roof on the St. Anthony elevator. The alarm was at once given and Messrs. Hunter, Simmonds and others were quickly on the spot, when, on closer investigation the alarm quickly subsided—the smoke being nothing more alarming than a dense cloud of flies hovering about in exact imitation of smoke and observable for 200 yards. Much relief was felt on the result of this investigation.

Bicyclers' Day at the Minnesota State Fair.

The bicycle is so much in evidence at this time, and there is so much interest in bicycling and bicycles, that the managers of the Minnesota State Fair, which is to be held at Hamline, on Sept. 9th to 14th inclusive, have arranged to open the fair with a bicycle carnival. A series of liberal prizes will be given to the various clubs, either social or racing. There will be prizes for the best uniformed and best drilled clubs; the largest family riding wheels, the most graceful lady rider, and the lady wearing the most attractive and appropriate lady's bicycle costume. There will be a parade of the various clubs on Monday, Sept 9th, preceded by the bicycle band of St. Cloud. This is one of the most unique organizations in the country. The members ride wheels and play their instruments. They ride well, and what is quite as important, play well, and this is as true of the man who plays the cornet as the man who plays the base drum. It is expected that there will be thousands of bicyclers present from all over the country. Members of regularly organized clubs that enter for any of the prizes will be admitted free. A merely nominal entrance fee is to be charged. In addition to the parade of clubs and the club contests, there will be a hot lot of racing for the Class A men, under the authority of the A. W. L. Arrangements are also being made for an exhibition of trick riding. The whole affair will be unique and ought to be of interest to the thousands of people who are interested in and are enjoying bicycling. There will be one fare for the round trip to St. Paul and Minneapolis on all of the railroads during the week of the fair.

Alexandria Post-News: The Republican party should declare itself squarely on the financial question in the next campaign. If it is for a single gold standard, bimetalism based on an international agreement, or for go-it-alone, 18 to 1 free coinage bimetalism, it should say so. The Republican party should never shirk or straddle a great principle and whatever horn of the financial dilemma a majority of the party might declare for, its leaders are wise enough, strong enough, prudent enough to test it so as to bring to the country the greatest benefits if right and the least harm if wrong.

Interfering With Natural Selection.

For countless ages hand to hand combat has been the means of selecting the most hardy and robust individuals to perpetuate their race. Now, however, the magazine rifle and smokeless powder will probably exercise a potent influence in the reverse direction. Not only is the smallest and most insignificant individual now capable of inflicting as much injury upon the foe as the most robust, but he offers a much smaller target to his adversary, and has therefore a better chance of escape.—Westminster Review.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOLS

—AT—

WINONA, MANKATO, ST. CLOUD AND MOORHEAD.

These schools are organized for the training of teachers for the public schools of the state.

ORGANIZATION.—Each school comprises two departments—the Normal Department and the Training Department or Model School.

The Normal Department embraces:

(A) An elementary Course of two years for teachers of rural districts and elementary grades.

(B) An Advanced Course of five years for teachers of advanced grades.

(C) A Professional Course of two years for graduates of high schools

(D) A Kindergarten Training Course (at Winona, St. Cloud and Mankato.)

ADMISSION.—Graduates of high schools and colleges, and teachers holding county superintendents' first and second grade certificates are admitted without examination. All others are required to pass an entrance examination.

EXPENSES.—Tuition is free to all who pledge themselves to teach in Minnesota. Text books are furnished at a rental of $3 per year. Provision is made in each school for economical living. The average cost of furnished rooms with board is about $3 per week.

The new Dormitory at Moorhead, and the Ladies' home at Winona furnish similar accomodations at a slightly higher price. Winona accomodation $3.50 per week.

The next school year opens at Winona September 2nd; at Mankato, September 2nd; at St. Cloud, September 3rd; at Moorhead, September 3rd.

For free catalogues and circulars, giving full information, address the presidents as follows:

IRWIN SHEPARD, Winona,

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL

—AT—

WINONA, MINNESOTA.

President's Office.

Winona, Minn., Aug. 14th 1895.

To the Editor.,

Dear Sir:—

My attention is called to an error which appears in the advertisement of the State Normal Schools, published in your paper.

I do not know who is responsible for the error; but as it misrepresents the school at Winona, I have no doubt that you will willingly call attention to the correction.

The advertisment states that the cost of board at Winona is higher than at St. Cloud, being $3.50 per week at the Winona Ladies Home.

In fact, it is the same as at St. Cloud,—viz. $3.00 per week, and may even be made less by taking meals at the Home table at $2.25 per week and rooming with a private family.

The advertisment states that there is a "Professional Course of two years for graduates of high schools.

It should state that there are two courses for high school graduates; one course of one year leading to the Elementary Course Diploma, and the other, of two years leading to the Advanced Course Diploma.

Thanking you in advance for making the correction, as well as for other courtesies which we have received through your columns, I am,

Very truly.

Irwin Shepard,
President.

FALL EXAMINATIONS.

Teachers' examinations will be held on the following dates:

Aug. 23 and 24 at Fosston and Thief River Falls;

Aug. 30 and 31 at Crookston and East Grand Forks;

Oct. 25 and 26 at Crookston and Red Lake Falls.

An average standing of 70 per cent will be required for 3d grade certificates and 80 per cent for second grade certificates.

Private examinations will not be granted under any circumstances.

School officers should know before hiring a teacher that she holds a valid certificate in this county.

An important move in the affairs of the North Dakota Milling association has developed, when creditors here received a letter concerning the immediate disposition of the property The latter states that at a recent meeting of the creditors, held in St. Paul, a committee of three was appointed to present a plan for the disposition of the property. This committee, composed of W. R. Merriam, Charles M. Harrington and C. B. Little, suggest that all creditors petition the court to instruct Receiver Lyon to make a sale of the property immediately, and, for the protection of the creditors, also suggest that a syndicate among creditors be formed to buy the property. Those not wishing to join the syndicate are asked to sell their claims against the association at 50 per cent.

R. A. Wilkinson returned from a trip to Seattle, last week and stopped off to see if the pumpkin crop was ready to thresh.

H. A. Libby, of Park River, N. D., a former Polk county attorney, was in the city last week and spent one night at the new hotel.

Francis Riel died suddenly at his home in Fairfax on Saturday, of heart disease. He was one of Polk county's leading farmers and an old settler.

Joseph Smith laid aside the cares and perplexities of the land office long enough to spend the Sabbath with his family, who are camping out awhile.

Rev. Fraser will occupy the pulpit at the Congregational church next Sabbath evening. Mr. Fisher is expected home by the following Sabbath to take his accustomed place.

Chas. Durrant was brought in from White Earth on Saturday by Deputy Marshal Morrison to interview Judge Christianson on a charge of selling whiskey to Indians.

Miss Alice Carpenter, daughter of L. D. Carpenter, formerly of Crookston, arrived from Devils Lake last week on a visit to old time friends and is the guest of William and Mrs. Kistenmacher.

The Sons of Vets gave a pleasant hop at the new G. A. R. hall on Thursday evening of last week, which was a very enjoyable event. At least they all say so who are wont to indulge in that pastime. They will try another some time in the near future.

Miss Katie Kyle was united for life to Geo. Kern, at Grand Forks, on Saturday. Both of the young people are residents of this city where they have hosts of friends who will unite in wishing the young couple a long and happy life. The bride is a sister of our handsome police officer, Mr. John Kyle.

H. P. Luse, representing Dun's commercial agency, was in the city last week. Herbert used to run over occasionally when his father was agent at the White Earth agency, always had a warm spot in his heart for Crookston and made many friends here who are always glad to welcome him when he comes. He acquired a farm or two while here, from which he is now coining much shekels.

Very significant was the fact that many farmers were in the city last week for feed and there was no feed. And yet you hear many farmers complain that "wheat don't pay to raise!" Every year feed has to be shipped in from below and farmers about this time are paying big prices for it. A word to the wise ought to be sufficient.

Latter part of last week it looked very much as though the supply of twine would be exhausted before the crop was properly cared for but we are told that that threatened danger has been averted and there will be twine enough to tie up Polk county's magnificent crops.

Not one complaint has ever been made by those using Ayer's Sarsaparilla according to directions. Furthermore, we have yet to learn of a case in which it has failed to afford benefit. So say hundreds of druggists all over the country. Has cured others, will cure you.

John Tiedeman came down from Euclid on Monday and went to Collins & Creamer for a new binder to help in that big crop. It beats all natur' how the big crop does defy the old machines to handle it. Never saw anything like it before. So say we all of us.

Isaac Sanders drove in from the farm on Monday and bought a new binder of Collins & Creamer. No use talking, he couldn't cut all that heavy grain with the old machine. Mr. S. came from Michigan a short time since and is making good money on the farm.

Another Craver 12-foot binder was put to work in a field of grown wheat north of the Fair grounds, on Friday of last week. This machine seems to do its work all right, will do the work of three ordinary binders, six horses and two men, with only four horses and one man. It costs double what an ordinary binder does, but even at that there is a big saving if the machine proves practical and reliable in every particular.

The farm buildings on the experimental farm will be put up this fall and everything will be all ready for business at the farm next spring.

The new binders in town were nearly all sold out last week so great was the demand. The big crops call for more machinery than was anticipated.

If you are in the city about meal-time, after repairs, don't forget that you can get the best meal in town at McKinnon's restaurant on Second street.

E. T. Bigelow was in the city from Fosston, on Saturday. Years ago he owned one of the finest farms at Euclid and was a happy and contented granger.

Mrs. Andrew Hebert left Thursday evening over the N. P. road for Rochester to attend the marriage of her niece Miss Gilhaa of that city, and visit relatives and friends.

W. F. Kelso, the bonanza farmer of Kittson county, went north to his home from St. Paul on Friday morning. Says the crops in that county are better than for several years.

The brick work on the new school house will soon be done and the balance of the work will then be completed as circumstances will permit. The new addition will fill a long felt want.

Fosston is making great preparations for the 4th annual fair of the Thirteen Towns Agricultural Association, on Sept. 25th, 26th and 27th. They will spare no expense to make it a big success.

Mr. Anglim telegraphed on Tuesday that he would arrive Saturday evening with the body of his wife; also requested that arrangements for the funeral to occur on Sunday, be made.

Vacation Time

Is at hand and is gladly welcomed by all, especially those whose duties in life have caused them to greatly run down their system to meet the requirements, physical and mental, forced upon them. With these and others, it is important, whether at home, at the sea-shore or in the country, that some thought be given to diet, and as further assistance to nature, a good building-up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla had best be resorted to. If the digestion is poor liver deranged and frequent headaches seems to be the rule, Hood's will change all this and enable everyone to return to their home and business in a refreshed state of mind and bodily health.

On Friday afternoon Mr. Wm. Anglim received a dispatch from Seattle stating that his wife, who had gone there for the benefit of her health, was lying in a precarious condition and not expected to live. Mr. A. left on the Northern Pacific at night but before he left, another dispatch was received announcing that she was somewhat better, so he felt more encouraged. Her friends here are all awaiting the next news with a great deal of anxiety.

Mine Host Westerberg, of the Scandinavian hotel, finds his business growing to such an extent that he is obliged to enlarge his hotel and will add a big, three-story building, 22x60 feet groundspace. The kitchen part of the old Sands house is being moved back to make room for the new improvement. Charlie is very evidently doing a rushing business and this is the third time he has been obliged to add to the original house. Next you know he will have the whole 75 feet built over.

Elias Steenerson went down to his farm on the west side to harvest one of the biggest crops he ever raised and when he had got fairly well started to work a machine busted and then another with the result that he had to send for a new binder. He dispatched a man to Fisher but on the way the man was told that there was not a new binder left in Fisher so he came to Crookston instead and went to Larson & Carpenter for one. Carp sat up all night, nearly, to get one ready to go out and help Elias in his 400 acre wheat patch.

Geo. Crocker was in the city last week greeting old-time friends. Mr. Crocker was one of the first druggists of this city, coming in the boom period that began in '78. Ole Lothe opened the first drug store in Crookston, on Robert street, and Mr. Crocker, on his arrival in the city, bought out that business and later built the building on the corner of Broadway and Second now occupied by Sam Wallace, where for a long time he did a good business, but the real estate fever, prevalent in those days, broke out in his system—and he had it bad. He went to St. Hilaire one day just for fun, liked the place and thought he would build one just like it, so he went two miles beyond, laid out a townsite, built a fine little village and got immensely—busted.

Mine Host Funk, of the Minnesota house is putting in a new floor in order to keep up with reviving business.

Bill Davis came down from Warren on Monday evening where he had been engaged as deputy state boiler inspector.

It is said that Receiver T. A. Dunlavy has taken unto himself a new wife and will be home again soon. Here's our congratulations, Capt.

Mrs. F. X. Gravel and Mrs. F. W. Bazille, of St. Paul, mother and sister of Frank Gravel, are visiting in the city this week, guests of Mr. and Mrs. Gravel.

Quite a number of Crookston young people went on the excursion to Detroit on Sunday. The Fertile cornet band also went along and furnished excellent music.

In Judge Christianson's court on Monday, Chas. Durant, charged with selling whisky to Indians, was bound over to appear at the next term of the U. S. court.

The shrill whistle of the thresher engine is again heard in the land, and will continue to be heard until the last bushel of the magnificent crop now being harvested is threshed.

It is rumored that a prominent business man of Crookston will start a clothing house in McIntosh this fall. If this is true we can congratulate that village upon the new acquisition to its business interests as the gentleman in question is a rustler from 'way back.

Rudy Burkhardt and family, Will Hoch, and the Misses Ida Voelker, Julia Webber and Minnie Moeckel took a drive out to Louisville and from there south as far as the town of Russia on Sunday. They took a basket along containing various and sundry good things to eat and enjoyed a regular picnic on the prairie.

As illustrative of how the grain is yielding this year John Tiedeman tells the JOURNAL that he threshed seven small loads of barley last week that he thought would yield about 150 bushels and was surprised when it panned out 225 bushels—75 bushels more than he calculated on. This seems to be the case everywhere so far as reports have reached us.

An accident at the mill on Monday caused a delay long enough to get a new main drive belt from below. The belt broke and was whipped to pieces before the machinery could be stopped. Fortunately no one happened to be in its immediate vicinity at the time or we should have had a very different story to tell.

S. L. Collins: "It does beat all what a stand of grain we have this fall! I frequently hear farmers say that after they finish cutting a piece of grain they find it difficult to get their binder out of the field, the shocks stand so close together. The straw is not only tall and stout but the heads also are long and well filled and I prophesy that we will have more wheat to the acre than any year since I came to this country. If wheat should go to 75 cents our farmers would be out of sight this fall."

Henry Rodman was in from Lambert on Monday with four nice fat young steers for this market. Says he don't believe in raising just wheat alone and finds that a beef critter to turn off for beef every now and then helps out wonderfully. Says there are a great many oats in his neighborhood this fall—more than ever before. Crops all look splendidly out there and are about half in shock. Wheat never looked better and he thinks will turn out from 20 to 25 bushels per acre of nice plump 64 pound wheat.

Complaints reach us that some of the town clerks, either through ignorance of the law or some other reason, are making very serious blunders in the way in which they are filing chattel mortgages. Under the law, if farmer A., who lives in Fairfax, or any other town, buys a horse or a binder, or any article of personal property of a dealer in this city, giving a chattel mortgage as security, the original has to be filed with the city clerk, who gives a certified copy of said mortgage; that certified copy must then be filed with the town clerk in the town in which the purchaser lives. Business men here usually send the certified copy to the town clerk, together with a copy to be returned by the clerk to them, and we are told that some clerks send back the certified copy instead of the one they are requested to send, and we hear that some clerks even refuse to file a certified copy, claiming that they must have the original copy. If such clerks would take the pains to look up the law in this matter, they might save themselves a good deal of future trouble, for town officers are supposed to know enough about the law to properly attend to the duties of the office to which they are elected, and a plea of ignorance of the law is not a valid excuse. This is a question that interests every man who is on a town clerk's bond, for if the clerk is not financially responsible for his little mistakes, the bondsmen are held for the damages that may arise.

Taken as a whole one could hardly expect finer harvest weather than we have had this season so far—but Hicks says that there will be a wet spell early in September. This need not worry the farmer who has his grain all in stack by that time and nearly, if not quite all of them, can have.

John C. Wells was up from Fond du Lac looking after his Polk county interests and spent Monday in the city. Says his crops on the big farm at Edna are finer than for many years. Says that Mr. Scott, (who bought the farm last winter) is one of the best farmers in the county and as a result has one of the best crops in the county.

Ed Wile came down from the lake on Saturday evening and was chatting with his old-time friends, as jolly as ever. Ed. does not look a day older than he did when he lived here several years since. He will return home to Chicago last of this or first of next week. Says he notices some valuable improvements in Crookston especially the new hotel.

Mr. D. McMillan was up from Edan on Saturday. Says he has just finished threshing his winter rye and it did not yield very well. Says he sowed too light, only one bushel per acre and then the grain winter-killed badly. Thinks he would sow the same as for wheat hereafter. His wheat and other grains are immense this year. Will finish cutting this week.

Mrs. Tom Morris is home again this week and now Tom is happy again. He turned himself loose while she was away, took up the carpets and "shuck" 'em and indulged in a general fit of housecleaning—and has been eating dust ever since. Tom says if there is any one thing more than any other he'd rather (not) be, it's a hired girl—especially house-cleaning time.

You cannot say that you have tried everything for your rheumatism until you have taken Ayer's Pills. Hundreds have been cured of this complaint by the use of these Pills alone. They were admitted on exhibition at the World's Fair as a standard cathartic.

Not long ago, being unable to find them here, S. L. Collins sent below for a carload of oats to supply the wants of his livery stable, and what do you think? No sooner had he got them here than his farmer friends began to come around and beg of him to sell them "just a few till I thresh!" Being naturally very good natured he kept selling and selling until he had nary an oat left and had to send below for another carload. The point to this, that we wish our farmer friends to note, is that every fall you hear farmers say: 'It don't pay to raise oats as you can't get anything for them in the fall." May be not, but during the time since 1872 that the writer has been in this Red River valley there has not been a spring yet when oats have not been shipped in from below for feed, and we have seen them sold in this market to farmers for feed for 75 cents per bushel. Farmers who sold their oats last fall did not make such an awful lot of money on them, but those who had oats to sell this spring did very well out of them, and even if they only had just enough for their own use, that is better than to buy, even at present prices—40 cents per bushel. After awhile our farmers will tumble to the situation—maybe.

When Your

Is All Dough

When your cake is heavy, soggy, indigestible, it's a pretty sure sign that you didn't shorten it with COTTOLENE. When this great shortening is rightly used, the result will surely satisfy the most fastidious. Always remember that the quality of COTTOLENE makes a little of it go a long way. It's willful waste to use more than two-thirds as much as you would of lard or butter. Always use COTTOLENE this way, and your cake and pastry will always be light, wholesome, delicious.

Genuine COTTOLENE is sold everywhere in tins, with trade-marks—"Cottolene" and steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every tin.

MORTGAGE SALE.

(First pub. July 18, '95.)
(Last pub. Aug. 29, '95.)

DEFAULT has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Ezra L. Smith and Lucy A. Smith, his wife, mortgagors, to James H. Barnum, mortgagee, dated the sixth day of February, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Polk, in the state of Minnesota, on the 23d day of April, A. D. 1888, at 8 o'clock A. M., in book 22 of mortgages, on page 237, on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of six thousand, six hundred twenty-four and 90-100 dollars, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. That the default above described consists in the non payment when due, of ten promissory notes, each for the sum of $500.00, and interest at eight per cent. per annum, payable annually, all being dated Feb. 6, 1888, and all executed and delivered by said Ezra L. Smith to said Jas. H. Barnum and all being secured by said mortgage. Said amount above described as being due contains also the sum of $125.87 taxes for the years 1892, 1893 and 1894, which said mortgagee on the 12th day of July, A. D. 1895, paid on the Southwest quarter of the land below described.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, at public auction, by the sheriff of said county or by his deputy, duly appointed as agent in said instrument for that purpose, on Friday, the 30th day of August, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and one hundred dollars attorney's fees, provided by statute and stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: All of Section twenty-nine (29), in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty-seven (47), west of the fifth principal meridian, containing six hundred and forty (640) acres of land, more or less, according to the government survey.

Dated at Moorhead, State of Minnesota, this 16th day of July, 1895.

THAT DOG NAPOLEON.

HE GREW UP WITH HIS YOUNG MASTER, WHO WAS FOND OF HIM.

Did Some Things Like All Dogs and Other Things Besides—How He Frightened Aunt Chesterfield and Earned a Quarter For His Owner.

I paid a man $2 for him when he was a little pup—the dog, I mean—and he told me—the man did—that if I would treat him kindly and give him plenty of corn bread—give the dog—he would guarantee—the man would—that he would grow up—the dog would grow up—to be an honor to him—to the man.

Napoleon got to be the largest dog and did it in the quickest manner of any dog I ever knew. I wore long curls at that time, I remember, into which boys used to cast burs, which hurt me a good deal, especially when Napoleon would take his claws and try to run them through my locks, although the locks never opened in that way. They were combination locks, I suppose, and I didn't yet have my letters in my head to set the combination on. He also grew very strong, Napoleon did, so that I found it difficult to keep him at home unless I tied him, and even then it bothered me if another dog happened to be going by. Catching sight of that dog, Napoleon would utter a glad cry and bound over the fence, utterly unmindful of the rope or me at the other end of it. Down the street he would prance, giving vent to short barks and drawing the attention of people after him, also myself. Neighbors coming to the windows used to marvel at the black and white streak we made in passing by. Sometimes I wouldn't get home till long after mealtime, which in those days was quite a detriment to me, though not to Napoleon, whose appetite soon became celebrated throughout the whole town, for when he couldn't get a pair of rubbers or a fur muff to slake the gnawings of hunger he would go out and collect the loaves of brown bread that bakers had left upon the adjacent stoops. I wouldn't like to print the things that people used to say about him at such times.

We grew up together—at least Napoleon did, for he had two feet the start of me. We were inseparable. Neighbors said they never saw anything more so, but that was chiefly because I couldn't get the rope unfastened in time.

It was Napoleon's appetite that ultimately accomplished his ruin, just as it has many another man's. Aunt and Uncle Chesterfield came to visit us that fall. They lived at Jay Corners, and really ought never to have gone anywhere else, but there they were, getting out of the stage at our front gate, and what could we do? I heard father say that to mother as they stood looking out of the window together. Uncle Chesterfield wasn't really our uncle, you understand, but just an old friend of father's—I don't know how old, but he looked every day of it, and more. We called him uncle because he appeared that way. Aunt Chesterfield had tic douloureux, which used to cause her to make up the awfulest faces. I realize now that it was from pain, but at that age I used to laugh, whereupon she said I was a wicked boy. She also had a brown wig and rheumatism. Uncle Chesterfield didn't have anything but just warts—I think I counted 70—and Aunt Chesterfield. But I heard father tell mother that was enough.

Mother put them into the spare chamber, where the old fashioned canvas bottom bed was with the white valance. There were also some green worsted lamp mats on the bureau. We all said good night, father wound up the clock and everybody went to bed. I was always a sound sleeper as a boy, so you must know that Aunt Chesterfield had to shriek pretty loud to get me out, but she did it, and could have fetched me, I think, if I had been dead. I got right up and ran into the spare chamber before anybody could stop me.

Aunt Chesterfield was sitting in the middle of the bed in a red flannel nightgown. I didn't know her at first, because her mouth was wide open, shrieking, and her face twisted with tic douloureux, and the whitest, shiniest head you ever saw, which I remembered with copious locks of brown. But I saw how that was in a minute, for there was Napoleon over in the corner with a brown wig in his mouth, which he was tossing and worrying and carrying on dreadfully. Uncle Chesterfield you couldn't see at first, but by and by you found him with his legs stuck through the arms of a rocking chair, and every time he moved Napoleon would growl, not being acquainted with Uncle Chesterfield, and he was almost scared to death.

They took the stage back to Jay Corners the very next day. Mother was dreadfully shocked, but I noticed that father didn't get excited.

"I wonder who let that dog up stairs?" he said musingly after the stage was gone.

I intended to say that I didn't know, but I got to stammering and mixed myself up, and before I realized what I was doing I blurted the truth right out and said that I did. Father gave me a quarter. I didn't know what for, but I supposed at the time that it was for telling the truth.

"But the dog must go," he added. "His appetite is growing too indiscriminative."

So we sold him to a man who kept a farm, and who soon afterward shot him for biting a calf on the legs. Napoleon used to do that to book canvassers when he was with us, and nobody found any fault with him, but on a farm it is different.—W. O. Fuller, Jr., in Rockland Tribune.

WHY HE SUCCEEDED.

A SENATOR'S GOOD FORTUNE BEGAN WITH A GAME OF POKER.

A Boyish Prank That Made It Necessary For Him to Go West and Grow Up With the Country—Members of the Bar Who Tried to Beat the Pet Law of the Town.

"My seat in the senate and all I have besides had root in a game of poker."

Here the senator gazed benignantly about his small audience. He was in a reminiscent mood. He was a wise, deep sea. little senator, as sapient as ever went into executive session. Now and then he liked to talk about the past.

"It sounds queerly to say it," the senator continued, "but it was a poker game which lost me to the east and gave me to the west, to become in time a senator. This is the story:

"I was born and brought up in a town in Kentucky. It was a small town. You could throw a lariat about the whole outfit and drag it with a pony. But it was a highly moral town. As a community it had a pet law. It made a specialty of enforcing the statutes against gambling. No games of chance could thrive in that community. And no matter what the position in life of an offender, were he guilty of gambling he would be dealt with. Such was the impartial boast of the town. Indeed, as one citizen observed:

"'They would admire to catch a judge or prosecuting attorney violating the law merely to demonstrate the Puritan fairness of local sentiment.'

"It was the June term of the circuit court. There was a crowd of lawyers in town. The judge himself was from down the Ohio river. During the noon hour a quiet game of poker was talked over as one of the happy methods of passing the pending evening. The town had a habit of going to bed at 9 o'clock, and it all promised to be graveyard dull to the visiting lawyers and the judge. Whispered word went about, therefore, that a game of cards, with a meek and lowly limit, would be a good way to ward off care. But there was no place to play.

"The hotel would never do. A light in any room after 10 o'clock would have provoked the most baleful surmises and investigation as well. The prosecuting attorney was one of the foremost in arranging the coming speculation. It was he who, in the fertility of his nature, suggested the flatboat. His father was proprietor of a flatboat of ample cabin accommodation. Just then it was moored, bow and stern, at the foot of the levee. A couple of games were programmed to come off that evening in the cabin of the flatboat. It would be out of sight and bearing of the testy little burg which made a specialty of punishing gambling.

"It was 10 o'clock. The night was as dark as the interior of a cow. Two games were going on in the cabin of the flatboat. The judge, the prosecuting attorney and some nine members of the bar were engaged. It made two nice tables. Everybody was bending to the game with all of the native ardor of a Kentucky gentleman. It was about this time when, in company with a friend, I strolled on the levee in the vicinity of the flatboat. I was 20 years of age and had no money. My friend was equally well fixed. Our youth and our poverty forbade anything like poker so far as we were concerned. On discovering the old folks thus charmingly engaged a taste to be humorous swept over us. We were law students; they were lawyers. That was reason enough for the joke. As the boat rose and fell on the swell and slackened the ropes we cast her loose. Silently she drifted away over the dark bosom of the river. The jovial gamesters drew and filled and straddled and raised and called, all unconscious. At 2 o'clock in the morning Colonel Stebbins had won $70. It was in Mexican money, and he had sinkered it about his honest old frame in half a dozen pockets. It was about all of the money at that table, and Colonel Stebbins concluded he might better go. He murmured something about cold feet and promising his wife to come up to the hotel early and arose to go. The rest jeered mildly and made invidious remarks after the fashion of losers at poker just as the game breaks up. But Colonel Stebbins was inflexible. He put on his hat, bid everybody good night, stepped out into the inky darkness and carefully picked his way overboard.

"The water was 20 feet deep. The silver all but drowned the colonel, however. At last he was fished out and laid across a barrel to evict the Ohio river from his system. The whoops and yells of the voyagers at last brought a sleepy little tug to their aid. They found themselves 17 miles below the town. For $80 of Colonel Stebbins' gains the tug towed the party back.

"They arrived at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and found the town sullenly lining the levee waiting for them. They were one and all promptly indicted. In the frank enthusiasm of youth my friend and I related how we had cast these poker games adrift on the Ohio. We made a grave mistake when we told this story. Publicly we were threatened with indictment; privately we were menaced with death by the gentlemen we had betrayed to the river. We took counsel of our woes and without awaiting the worst went west. This was all long ago—48 years ago. My partner in sin is now a United States judge, while I am in the senate. We often discuss our destinies and lay everything to that flatboat poker game."—Washington Post.

A Sty on the Eye.

When you feel the pricking pain on the eyelid that announces the coming of a sty, make a very strong application of black tea, or simply the tea leaves moistened with a little water put in a small bag of muslin and placed on the eyelid. As it dries moisten again, and if used before the sty gets under way it is said to be a sure cure.

THE EMPTY HOUSE.

The ancient apple tree that stands
Beside the black, decaying eaves
Once more has both her crooked hands
Half full of Maytime flowers and leaves.
But the old gray house where the gold haired children
Blossomed out from window and door
At the early kiss of the warm May sunshine—
The old gray house will bloom no more.

In that old apple tree again
Their loving nest the bluebirds fill;
They warble to the mild spring rain.
With music soft the mornings thrill.
But the old gray house with her vacant windows,
Where never a rosy cheek is pressed,
Where all is silence and void and shadow,
No birds come back to her empty nest.
—Irene Putnam in Good Housekeeping.

WHAT FIREMEN FIND.

They Pick Up Curious Articles Sometimes. A Touching Incident.

"Well, sir," said a stalwart looking fireman the other day, "we fellows don't have much time for looking about for finds when a house is burning and perhaps people's lives are at stake, yet we do come across things occasionally.

"A brother wearer of the brass helmet used to tell how he was once at a fire—and a big one, too—and in making his way through the house positively saw bank notes burning away like so many pipe lights. He picked up as many as he possibly could, stuffed them in his pockets and went on with his work. After the conflagration had ceased the man who was left in charge picked up among the embers an old fashioned pepper box—black and charred—filled with silver dollars, and a further search brought him to a number of rare old silver spoons.

"I have myself found two or three checkbooks, and once a set of false teeth, which I popped in my pocket and soon after was able to return to the owner, who proved his right to possess them without a doubt. I once brought out a genuine Stradivarius—a violin worth several hundreds of dollars—while diamonds and other jewelry have been saved in plenty.

"Indeed there are a thousand and one things a fireman finds and saves, though perhaps that which gave me the greatest satisfaction was an old rag doll. It was a touching little incident and quite true.

"It happened at a big fire, and in the midst of the excitement—which I assure you few people realize—the word went forth that a little child was up stairs. I don't want to boast, but away I went. I found her on the second floor, asleep in her little crib, with this old doll by her side. I caught the child in my arms and—she awoke. She looked up in my face and seemed to understand that I was saving her from the flames.

"'Dolly! Dolly!' she cried.

"The next instant—aye, quicker than it takes to tell you—I had the old rag doll, and my pals told me that if any artist could only have painted us as we appeared—me with the youngster in my arms, and she cuddling up her treasure—why, there wouldn't have been another picture in the land to touch it!"—Boston Traveller.

Didn't Understand Twins.

A festival in the family drew homeward the scattered kindred. The boys, twins, had been long parted, and meanwhile one had married and in his widowerhood reared his little son, now 7 years old. To him, by name Bobby, newly arrived in the house, enters the uncle whom he had never seen, so perfect a corroboration of his father that Bobby runs to him at once, clings to him and hugs his knees. A moment later, when his father really came and the laughing company were on the brink of comment and explanation, the poor little man, giving him one mortally shocked glance, fell to the floor, sobbing, "Don't want—two—papas!"

The resident puppy, familiar with the bachelor brother, had almost as disturbing an experience. He stared and stared at Bobby's father, upon their introduction, sniffed at his garments, wavered and stared again. Then he leaped upon his own friend and next upon the image and echo of him bewildered, and finally backed into the corner, after making a brave stand against the supernatural, his insulted eye upon both men, barking and growling and indulging generally in the doggerel for thunder.—Chap Book.

Brummel and Byron.

Byron, while walking along Piccadilly one bright summer morning, encountered Beau Brummel, who was returning from his tailor's.

"How are you, Brummel?" said the poet.

"Pretty well, thank you," returned the beau. "I've been reading 'Don Juan.'"

"Yes?" said Byron, with a smile.

"There is some clever rhyme in it."

"So?" observed Byron, with affected surprise.

"And some pretty good versification."

"Ah?" returned the poet.

"Why don't you try your hand at poetry, Byron?" asked Brummel.

The two never spoke to each other again.

Followed Orders.

"How so?" inquired his friend.

"Why, I told him the other day that I wanted engraved on the engagement ring the letters 'from A. to Z.'—'from Arthur to Zenobia,' you know—and the idiot went to work and put in the whole alphabet!"—Elmira Telegram.

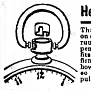
Non-pull-out

is an arbitrary word used to designate the only bow (ring) which cannot be pulled off the watch.



Here's the idea

The bow has a groove on each end. A collar runs down inside the pendant (stem) and fits into the grooves, firmly locking the bow to the pendant, so that it cannot be pulled or twisted off.

It positively prevents the loss of the watch by theft, and avoids injury to it from dropping.

IT CAN ONLY BE HAD with Jas. Boss Filled or other watch cases bearing this trade mark—

All watch dealers sell them without extra cost.
A watch case opener will be sent free to any one by the manufacturers.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 369 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. THE HEART IN OLD AGE.

A Misconception That Causes Humanity Needless Anxiety.

A story told by Dr. G. W. Balfour in his book on "The Senile Heart" well deserves the double purpose of marking the practical process which scientific medicine has achieved within the past 50 years and of administering a much needed word of comfort and encouragement to those numerous workers who, as age approaches, begin to feel uncomfortable about the regions of the heart.

"Many years ago," said Dr. Balfour, "a gentleman of 77 consulted me as to severe fainting fits to which he was liable. A distinguished consultant, since dead, had told him that these attacks were due to fatty degeneration of the heart and that treatment would be of no avail. The heart's impulse was imperceptible, the sounds faint, but pure, the arteries firm, but neither hard nor tortuous. I told the patient that experience had taught me that hearts supposed to be fatty were often weak. * * * The result of treatment was a steady improvement in health and in force of heart beat, and the patient lived to be 90 and did not die of heart failure in the end, but from senile asthenia." To many people "fatty heart" is a perfect bugbear. But this is what Dr. Balfour has to say about the diagnosis of the disease: "It is absolutely impossible to diagnosticate fatty degeneration of the heart.

"We may surmise its existence, but we can only be certain of its presence when we see it post mortem." If many middle aged and old men could but have this written deep upon the tablets of their consciousness, what loads would be lifted from their minds. Yet doctors of small experience roll out a diagnosis of fatty heart with enormous satisfaction, unheeding that to many a trembling father of a family it is like the sound of a deathknell. On the question of treatment Dr. Balfour is equally decided. "We are often told," he says, "that there is danger in treating a fatty heart. * * * Yet the result of treatment in the case recorded was a cure, proving that a heart supposed to be fatty was only weak and that a life supposed to be over only wanted the fillip of a few minims of digitalis to carry it on to almost the extreme of human longevity." So, true is it, even in scientific medicine, that a little experience and common sense outweigh many shiploads of mere abstract theorizing.—London Hospital.

DIAMOND THIEVES.

The Trick They Use to Circumvent the Ever Watchful Dealers.

A diamond dealer recently interviewed gave some of his experiences as follows: "A few weeks ago a foreigner came into my store and desired to see rings. After choosing for a long time he picked out one valued at $18. He made me a ridiculously low offer, which I naturally refused. He then desired to see two other rings—one a sapphire and the other a diamond ring—exhibited in the show window. While I reached into the window for them I observed in the mirror on one side of the window how the stranger slipped away two rings, each worth $150. I did not turn around, but went to the door, opened and then locked it. If I had turned around, the thief would have thrown pepper and sand in my eyes and ran away with his booty. A policeman was soon in the place. The thief had the pepper and sand ready for use in his hand.

"Another time a thief dropped two rings into his umbrella, and at another time another slipped one into a hole in his glove. A very common trick of diamond thieves is to ask to be shown loose stones, which are thereupon handed to him lying upon a waiter. He breathes upon them, and thereby seeks to get one or more into his mouth. Others study the rings lying in the show window and have one made exactly to pattern described. The gold is good, but the jewel is paste. They then come in twilight into the store and seek to exchange their imitation for the genuine."—Jewelers' Circular.

Light Persons Poisoned by Ivy.

Mr. I. Ten Bosch writes from Rochelle Park, N. J., to Garden and Forest, saying:

"Whenever I see a tree in the embrace of a poison ivy, I take my knife and cut the vine. On the grounds of a few friends and on my own I have cut vines from 1½ to 2½ inches thick, sometimes at the root and sometimes as far up as I could reach, and then tearing down the stems have uprooted them with my hands. I have done this at all seasons, and when my hands were torn by blackberry thorns, but I never had a trace of poisoning. A friend to whom I mentioned my immunity said, 'Of course you are not poisoned, because you are dark.' Since then I have been thinking that in the cases of poisoning which had come to my knowledge the victims had been light haired. A younger brother of mine, who is very fair, has been severely poisoned."

Population of the World.

German geographers have made a careful estimate of the population of Africa, and place the total at 168,953,000, which is 42,210,000 more than the aggregated population of North and South America. Europe and Africa combined have a population of 521,382,000, though their area is not greater than that of all America. The new world has plenty of room for many times its present population of 121,713,000. The German estimate of the population of the world now is 1,480,000,000, and one of the best authorities of the Royal Statistical society says it will be increased by the year 2517 to 33,580,000,000.

NOT APPRECIATED.

JOHN BULL'S MEANNESS TOWARD A FOREMOST INVENTOR.

All Things British Tried Hard to Crush the Discoverer of the "Bessemer Process"—The Great Change Wrought by the Invention—Bessemer's Safety Stamp.

The inventor of the celebrated "Bessemer process" is the most modest of men, shunning rather than courting observation. A few years since he was sometimes to be seen taking a "constitutional" in the neighborhood of his unpretentious abode at Denmark Hill, in England, but the venerable gentleman with the benevolent face, in the old fashioned frock coat and voluminous, many folded choker neckcloth, is now rarely seen even by his immediate neighbors.

The British public, the British government and British manufacturers did their very best at one time to crush one of the most useful men ever born in Britain, and failed ignominiously. Sheffield laughed at him, and Woolwich gave him the official cold shoulder, but Sheffield and Woolwich would be crippled indeed at the present time were it not for "Bessemer steel." Yet, even now, although foreign potentates have showered crosses and stars upon him, the English government has not conferred upon him any honor more important than an ordinary knighthood, and this in spite of the fact that he has created one of the largest and most important industries in the world.

Some fascinating calculations, made by Sir Henry himself, prove that one year's production of Bessemer steel might be represented by a solid column 16½ times the height of St. Paul's cathedral, and as thick through as an ordinary gasometer—about 100 feet.

Henry Bessemer, son of the late Mr. Anthony Bessemer, was born in Hertfordshire in the year 1813. His earlier years were devoted to art, and we find that he was an exhibitor at the Royal academy at the age of 20. At this early age he had discovered a means by which impressions of the designs on coins, medals and other reliefs could be reproduced in any numbers on cardboard. Some of his work in this line is still extant, and when specimens come into the market they bring high prices.

This led him indirectly to a more important invention. He discovered that the government of the time was robbed to the tune of £100,000 per annum by unscrupulous persons, who were in the habit of removing the embossed duty stamps on legal and other documents and using the same again. Young Bessemer invented the useful little contrivance by which the stamp is embossed on the paper or parchment of the document itself, and submitted it to the then chief of the stamp department at Somerset House.

The potentate in question saw the advantage of this system at a glance, and soon afterward the authorities expressed their willingness to make use of it. A pretty little story is connected with this invention. When his model was completed, Bessemer showed it to the young lady to whom he was then engaged. Her first comment upon it showed that she was well fitted to become the wife of an inventor. She said:

"Yes, I understand this, but surely, if all stamps had a date put upon them, they could not at a future time be used again without detection."

This proved a very valuable suggestion, for Bessemer soon hit upon the idea of a steel die with a space for a movable date, and in that form his invention was adopted by the authorities. Will it be credited that he never received a solitary farthing from the government for his services or the use of his invention?

Such is nevertheless the fact, and when he hinted mildly at legal remedies he was told by the solicitor to the stamp department that he was entitled to no compensation, inasmuch as he had presented his invention to the government gratis! This was at a time, too, when he was by no means well off, when indeed he lacked the necessary money to set up housekeeping with the clever young lady whose brilliant suggestion had resulted in a perfect stamping machine! He received many generous promises from various ministers, of course, but one government went out of power after another, and to this day he has never been compensated in any shape or form.

A man of vast wealth now, Sir Henry Bessemer can afford to regard the troubles of that period of his life with comparative indifference, though he has since had more ample reason to cherish a dislike for all British governments and politicians. But his disappointment in this instance taught him a very salutary lesson. When he made the great discovery of his life—that by which it is possible to convert pig iron into steel by a simple and inexpensive process—he kept his discovery a secret. To some extent it is a secret to this day. The importance of the discovery can hardly be overestimated.

Before the Bessemer process came into use steel could not be bought under £50 a ton, and its price prohibited its use in numberless departments of industry where it is now considered essential. At that time, too, only 51,000 tons of cast steel were produced in Sheffield in a year. In 1892, 33,548 tons of steel were manufactured in the world every day according to the Bessemer process, the selling price per ton averaging £8 perhaps. It is chiefly due to Sir Henry Bessemer that one is almost as safe on a modern ocean steamship as on land, and that the modern structure of steel is nearly as impregnable as the Pyramids.

Such a discovery, it might be supposed, would be hailed with enthusiasm by those interested in the iron trade of Great Britain. Not a bit of it. Bessemer met with every possible discouragement. The steel manufacturers of Sheffield were dead against him from the first, and the government ignored him.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

THE MAYA WOMEN.

THEY ARE INTELLIGENT, SWEET TEMPERED AND BEAUTIFUL.

In the Olden Times These Wives of the First Owners of America Were the Mothers of a Courageous Race, and They Never Looked Into a Mirror.

An unfamiliar word, but as old as the hills almost, is this word Maya. Among the Brahmans it means illusion and is the name of the earth, the material world, which, according to the Brahmanical doctrine, is nonexistent—an illusion. Maya Devi was the name of the beautiful mother of Buddha. Maya in the feminine energy of Brahma and the mother of all the gods, even of Brahma himself. Any Greek dictionary informs us that Maya is the good mother of all gods and men. In Japan the goddess Maya is still worshiped. The beautiful Indian poem "Ramayana" tells us about a great navigator named Maya, who in ages long gone by took forcible possession of the countries at the south of the Hindoostanee peninsula and settled there.

The Maya people of America were in olden times a great nation, occupying the territory comprised between the isthmus of Tehuantepec and that of Darien. We know that they were navigators, their boats being depicted in very ancient books and paintings. In 1502, when Columbus came to America for the fourth time, he met on the high seas a large boat, in which were men, women and children. It also had a cargo of merchandise, consisting of weapons, tools, products of the earth and ready made garments. The travelers called themselves Mayas. They were in the habit of traveling to Cuba and other islands to trade with their inhabitants. The Mayas were neatly clothed in white cotton raiment. They were self possessed and courteous. Fifteen years later their land, today called Yucatan, was invaded by the Spaniards, but it cost the white men 25 years of warfare to get control of that country, for every Maya fought like a hero. They were sons of fearless mothers.

In reading the works left by the Spanish chroniclers—priests who accompanied the soldiers—we learn that the Maya women were very good looking, as many are at the present day; that they were charitable, sweet tempered, industrious, modest and so free from vanity that they never consulted the mirror, although their husbands did. In physique these women were large and beautifully shaped.

Their complexion was a light brown, and their silky black hair very abundant. Father Cogollindo, a Spanish priest, wrote, "These women are more beautiful and better tempered than those of Spain." They always dressed themselves, as they do at the present time, in flowing white garments, and in their happier days were greatly addicted to the use of perfumes and flowers. They were industrious, devoted wives and fond mothers, but exacted great deference from their children. Their ideas of modesty were so strict that they did not permit their daughters to look boldly into the face of a man, and if a girl showed a want of shyness the indignant matron would pinch her arms. After the Spaniards were in possession of the land they subjected these women to indignities and cruelty. Among many other things it is recorded that in one village they found two young women of remarkable beauty, one a bride, the other a maiden, and they hanged both, so that there should be no trouble about them. Many young mothers were hung from trees and their infants suspended from their feet. Those who escaped death were enslaved with their husbands and children.

Long ago, as far back as our studies enable us to know anything about that nation, the Maya women seem to have enjoyed the same privileges as the men, to have had equal power in politics and equal authority.

Today, when business is to be transacted, the wife takes the active part, her husband nodding his head affirmatively. It is not that she desires to domineer, but because he looks up to her, relying on her judgment. She complies with admirable moderation and modesty. She is eloquent and forceful without being loquacious, and she never scolds. When her husband gets himself into trouble, she pleads for him, being a more able reasoner than he is. If he gets intoxicated, she guides him home. If he strikes her, she says, "He does not know what he is doing," regarding him with angelic forbearance, so that domestic brawls are quite unknown. It is her pleasure to give him the best of what they have, keeping for herself the worst.

This woman's home has a thatched roof and earthen floor. She has no pretty objects around her. Hammocks serve as seats by day as well as beds by night. There is one low chair or stool on which she sits while her busy fingers make the garments of the family. In one corner stands a bench and grinding stones. Her hands grind all the corn used in that humble abode. The fire is built on the floor between three stones, on which rests the clay pot or the disk for baking tortillas. Outside at the back of the hut there is a long dugout, serving as a washtub, resting on trestles. There she stands for some hours every day, her small feet bare, soapsuds up to her elbows, yet her hands are small and pretty, her voice is sweet and low, her language never rude, and if you approach her hut she welcomes you with such perfect grace and self possession, mingled with cordiality, that you ask yourself if she is not a princess in disguise. She may be, but, alas! the palaces of her sires are crumbling away in the forests where her husband cuts timber for his master, the white man, now owner of the soil. The dying race must bear its fate, and the Maya woman meets it nobly, with resignation and grace.—Washington Post.

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

(First pub. July 25, '95.)
(Last pub. Sept. 5, '95.)

NOTICE is hereby given that Charles L. Hoff and Anine Hoff, his wife, did execute and deliver to J. W. Smith their mortgage, dated the 22nd day of April, 1887, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 25th day of April, 1887, at 9 o'clock A. M., in book 30 of Mortgages, on pages 471 to 475, which said mortgage and the debt thereby secured were by assignment, dated the third day of June, 1892, and duly recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds on the 29th day of June, 1892, at 8:45 o'clock A. M. in Book 67 on page 566, duly sold and transferred by said J. W. Smith to the undersigned, Olaf O. Searle, who has ever since been and now is the owner and holder thereof. And default having been made in the conditions of said mortgage by the nonpayment of the sum of Three Hundred ($300.00) Dollars, and interest thereon at 8 per cent per annum, from April 13th, 1892, secured thereby, and the amount now actually due and claimed to be due thereon at the date of this notice is the sum of Three Hundred and Seventy-eight and 50-100 ($378.50) Dollars, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover said debt or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, the premises described in said mortgage, situated, lying and being in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: The East half of the Southeast quarter of the Southwest quarter of Section twenty-three, and West half of the Southwest quarter of Section twenty-four, in Township one hundred and forty-seven, Range forty-two, West of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty acres, more or less, according to the government survey thereof, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, at the front door of the court house in the City of Crookston, County of Polk, State of Minnesota, at 10 o'clock A. M., on Saturday the 7th day of September, 1895, to satisfy the amount then due on said mortgage, and $25.00 attorney's fees provided for in said mortgage, and the costs and charges of notice and sale.

Dated July 25th, 1895.

Ants as Biters.

Ants are terrible fighters. They have very powerful jaws, considering the size of their bodies, and therefore their method is by biting. They will bite one another and hold on with a wonderful grip of the jaws, even after all their legs have been bitten off by other ants.

Sometimes six or eight ants will be clinging with a death hold to one another, making a peculiar spectacle, some with a leg gone and some with half the body gone. One singular fact is that the grip of an ant's jaw is retained even after the body has been bitten off and nothing but the head remains.—Exchange.

THE CONFERENCE ENDS.

Silver Democrats Issue an Address to the People.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—The silver Democrats devoted a large part of the second day's proceedings to speechmaking, the committee on resolutions not being ready to report when the conference was called to order. The meeting opened at 10 o'clock and it was almost 12 o'clock when the committee on resolutions filed into the conference room and Senator Daniel was recognized to make the report of the committee's proceedings. This was divided into two sections, one consisting of an address to the Democrats and the other of a plan of organization. He said the address in most respects was the same as that adopted by the Democrats of Texas, Missouri and Mississippi. The address was read by Governor Stone.

The address issued disclaims speaking with party authority, the assemblage being a voluntary one, but strongly represents the opinion of the conference that the party should declare for free coinage of silver. The address concludes as follows:

Duty to the people requires that the party of the people continue the battle for bimetalism until its efforts are crowned with success. Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Democratic party in national convention assembled should demand the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold into primary or redemption money at the ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the action or participation of any other nation.

Gold Can Be Cornered.

Resolved, That it should declare its irrevocable opposition to the substitution for a metallic money of a panic-breeding, corporation-credit currency, based on a single metal, the supply of which is so limited that it can be cornered at any time by a few banking institutions in Europe and America.

Resolved, That it should declare its opposition to the policy and practice of surrendering to the holders of the obligations of the United States the option reserved by the law to the government of redeeming such obligations in either silver coin or gold coin.

Resolved, That it should declare its opposition to the issuing of interest-bearing bonds of the United States in time of peace, especially to placing the treasury of the government under the control of any syndicate of bankers and the issuance of bonds to be sold by them at an enormous profit for the purpose of supplying the federal treasury with gold to maintain the policy of gold monometallism.

SHORT CAMPAIGN FAVORED.

Views of National Committeeman on the Presidential Contest.

CHICAGO, Aug. 19.—Concerning the view of the national committeeman on the question of a long or short campaign, The Times-Herald says:

Thirty-eight national committeemen, 20 Democrats and 18 Republicans, have responded to questions asked by The Times-Herald concerning the policy of holding a short presidential campaign. The vote is now full enough to clearly indicate the probable results of the meetings which will shortly be held by the two national committees of the dominant parties.

The Republican national committee will declare in favor of a short presidential campaign.

The Democratic national committee will declare in favor of a short national campaign unless the free silver party dominates the councils of the party. The vote, so far as it has been received and recorded by The Times-Herald, is as follows: Republican national committee—For a short campaign, 14: against a short campaign, 3; non-committal, 1; total votes, 18. Democratic national committee—For a short campaign, 10; against a short campaign, 6; non-committal, 4; total votes, 20.

THE FIGHT IN OHIO.

"Honest Money" Men Claim a Majority of the Delegates.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Aug. 20.—Many delegates are here to attend the Democratic state convention. The fight between the free silver men and the Brice men will occur when the members of the committee on resolutions and other committees in the organization are selected. There are 808 delegates. The silver men classify them as 343 for free silver, 328 for gold and 137 doubtful. The Brice men claim there are 465 for "honest money" and of the 343 claimed by the Thurman men for silver, some are doubtful. It is generally believed, since the last counties selected delegates, that the Brice men will control all the organization and have 14 out of the 21 members of the committee on resolutions.

Kilbourne Declines to Run.

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 20.—James Kilborne, in a letter, forbids the use of his name in the Democratic state convention as a candidate for governor.

DAVIS A CANDIDATE.

The Minnesota Senator May Be Said to Be Out for the Presidency.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 19.—The Dispatch says: Senator Davis is a full fledged candidate for the Republican nomination for the presidency. The announcement was made in an interview The Dispatch had with Captain H. A. Castle, who is acknowledged to be one of Davis' closest friends and capable of speaking with authority.

Do You Want to Stop Tobacco?

You Can Be Cured While Using It.

The habit of using tobacco grows on a man until grave diseased conditions are produced. Tobacco causes cancer of the mouth and stomach; dyspepsia, loss of memory, nervous affections, congestion of the retina and wasting of the optic nerve; resulting in impairment of the vision, even to the extent of blindness; dizziness, or vertigo; tobacco asthma; nightly suffocation, dull pain in region of the heart, followed later by sharp pains, palpitation and weakened pulse, resulting in fatal heart disease. It also causes loss of vitality.

QUIT BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE.

To quit suddenly is too severe a shock to the system, as tobacco—to an inveterate user, becomes a stimulant that his system continually craves. "BACO-CURO" is a scientific and reliable vegetable remedy, guaranteed to be perfectly harmless, and which has been in use for the last 23 years, having cured thousands of habitual tobacco users—smokers, chewers and snuff-dippers.

You can use all the tobacco you want while taking "Baco-Curo." It will notify you when to stop. We give a written guarantee to permanently cure any case with three boxes, or refund the money with ten per cent interest.

"Baco-Curo" is not a substitute, but a reliable and scientific cure—which absolutely destroys the craving for tobacco without the aid of will power, and with no inconvenience. It leaves the system as pure and free from nicotine as the day you took your first chew or smoke.

Sold by all druggists at $1.00 per box, three boxes (thirty day's treatment and guaranteed cure) $2.50, or sent direct upon receipt of price. Send six two-cent stamps for sample box, booklet and proofs free. Eureka Chemical and Manufacturing Co., Manufacturing Chemists, La Crosse, Wisconsin. [17-20]

THE GOVERNMENT INTERFERES.

China Will Not Allow Foreign Consuls to Investigate Massacres.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 20.—A dispatch to The Mercury from Foo Chow says it is reported on good authority there that the Chinese government has refused to allow the American and British consuls, Mr. J. C. Hixson and Mr. R. T. Mansfield, who accompanied the commission appointed to investigate the recent massacres of missionaries and their families at Ku Cheng, to make any investigation into the circumstances of the massacre.

Foreigners Plundered.

LONDON, Aug. 20.—The Times has a dispatch from Hong Kong confirming the Shanghai dispatches containing the report that the Chinese government has refused to allow the American and British consuls to make any investigation into the Ku Cheng massacre.

The Times dispatch adds that soldiers are engaged in plundering the people, who feel that the foreigners are the cause of their suffering and that therefore the latter should be destroyed. Further incendiary placards have been posted at Canton.

Starving Christians Out.

TIFLIS, Aug. 20.—Special advices from Moosh say that the Turkish officials have driven the Christians out of their houses in all the country between Sassoun and Moosh, and have given the houses to the members of the Kurdish tribes. The victims are starving.

GOING BY ALL RAIL.

Soo Road Carrying Wheat to the Seaboard for 12 Cents a Hundred.

DULUTH, Aug. 17.—Minneapolis underselling Duluth at the seaboard by a full cent was the report received from the East during the day by Duluth wheat shippers. The freight war from the Twin Cities has culminated in the greatest slaughter of tariffs that the Northwest has ever known. The Soo road is said to be carrying wheat to the seaboard at the rate of 12 cents per 100 pounds, or only 2 cents more than the lowest all rail rate ever known to be made from Chicago to the seaboard. If the other Van Horne road, the South Shore and Atlantic, makes the same comparative rate or a trifle lower from Duluth, wheat will go East by all rail instead of lake and rail.

TO END LAWLESSNESS

The Residents of Yreka, Cal., Take the Law in Their Own Hands.

Jail Forced Open and a Quartette of Murderers Are Strung Up.

The Little Town Frequently the Scene of Mob Violence Years Ago.

YREKA, Cal., Aug. 28.—Four murderers were taken from the county jail by a mob of 250 men and lynched. A band of citizens, fearing that the law would not be carried out, and angered over the atrocity of recent crimes, determined to take matters into their own hands. The lynching was the ghastly climax to the reign of lawlessness which has prevailed in Siskiyou county for some months past. One of the victims was Lawrence Johnson, who, on the evening of July 28, stabbed his wife to death in the town of Etna. Another was William Null, who shot Henry Hayter in the back with a rifle near Callahans on April 21. Louis Moreno and Garland Seemler, who are supposed to have killed George Seers and Jasper Meierhans at Bailey Hill on Aug. 5, were also hanged.

Mob Gathered at Midnight.

At 11 o'clock p. m. farmers from all the surrounding country began to drive into town, and by midnight the mob was ready to march to the county jail. Before taking a step, however, every precaution was taken to prevent the plans of the lynchers from being frustrated by the officers of the law. The sheriff and one of his deputies were decoyed to another part of town by two members of the mob who were engaged in the lynching and the fire bell was muffled to prevent an alarm being given in that way. When the mob reached the jail Deputy Sheriff Radford opened the door and was immediately held up by the mob, who took the keys from him and entered the jail. Having no keys to the different cells they were compelled to burst the locks with a sledge hammer which they proceeded to do at once. Lawrence H. Johnson, who recently at Etna on Sunday evening, July 28, was the first to receive the attention of the mob. They broke the lock from the door of his cell, and placing a rope around his neck, led him out of the jail and across the street to where the iron rail was laid between the forks of two locust trees. Johnson pleaded for mercy, but the silent gathering gave no heed to his appeals and he was quickly strung up. The mob returned to the jail and broke into the cell of William Null, who shot Henry Hayter at Callahans April 21 in a dispute over a mining property. Null desired to make a statement, but time was too valuable and he was soon hanging alongside of Johnson.

Stabbed His Wife to Death

Louis Moreno, who is charged with having killed George Seers on Aug. 5, was then taken from his cell and soon swung with Johnson and Null.

A Message for His Mother.

The last and youngest of the four murderers to pay the penalty of his crime was Garland Seemler, aged about 19, who, in company with Moreno, was charged with having killed Casper Meierhans at Bailey Hill on Aug. 5. A rope was placed around Seemler's neck and he was led from the jail in his bare feet. Seemler begged for mercy and his last words were, "Tell my dear old mother I am innocent of the crime."

Yreka is a little mining town and years ago was frequently the scene of mob violence. The summary manner in which justice was meted out to the four murderers reminded the pioneers of similar scenes during the gold excitement 40 years ago, when it was not an uncommon spectacle to awaken in the morning and see the body of a notorious criminal dangling from a tree.

COUNTERFEITER CAUGHT.

An Important Capture Made at Whitewater, Wis.

WHITEWATER, Wis., Aug. 28.—Henry Chamberlain has been arrested charged with making counterfeit dollars. He had one of the best outfits for the work ever seen in this state. Many bogus dollars were found on his person. The police have been working on his case over a year, and say they have made a very important capture. Chamberlain admits being in the business for nine years.

The Water Very Bad.

CALUMET, Mich., Aug. 28.—The alarming spread of typhoid fever in Calumet, Red Jacket and Laurium leads to the belief that their water supply is contaminated. The water comes from Lake Superior and when filtered shows organic solids plainly visible to the naked eye.

The lady drummer for a St. Louis vinegar house showed up in fine form on Wednesday. She isn't half as sour as the goods she sells.

J. B. LeBree, who was city marshal in the early day, was in the city this week. He was full of reminiscences of the early day, also full of something of the present day, so much so that his successors in office kindly took him out of the [illegible] for the night, Thursday night.

THE SMOKY CHIEF.

O. L. Larson one of Fosston's enterprising merchants, (familiarly known up there as "the smoky chief") was seen prowling mysteriously about the streets of St. Paul on Monday with an anxious, hunted expression on his mobile countenance. Upon inquiring the cause he remarked: "I am hunting for a little milliner to go up to Fosston and take charge of the millinery department to my store, and let me tell you, my boy, it is a leetle the biggest yob I have tackled for lo these many years, but I am bound to succeed, for what I don't know about the millinery business could be written down in a a very large book and I must have that wood-chuck as it were!" En-passant we note that Larson was also laying in a tremendous fall stock for every department in his store and he casually remarked that all signs point to an unusually big trade this fall. He expected to leave for home on Wednesday evening.

THE TAYLOR CASE.

Validity of the Sentence Argued Before the Supreme Court.

PIERRE, S. D., Aug. 27.—The case of the State of South Dakota vs. W. W. Taylor was argued on habeas corpus before the state supreme court. Attorneys for the state contended that the sentence was valid and if five years' sentence was not valid and the court exceeded its jurisdiction then it was invalid only in so much as it exceeded the jurisdiction of the court. The defense contended that the state was a body politic and that there was no law defining as a crime the taking of money from a body politic.

Engineer Loescher Arrested.

DENVER, Aug. 26.—The police have been notified of the arrest of Elmer Loescher, the missing engineer of the Gumry hotel, at Antonito, in the southwestern part of the state. It is alleged he admits that he and he alone is responsible for the terrible disaster by which 22 lives were sacrificed. Loescher will be brought to Denver in the morning.

Modern Military Camp.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27.—The secretary of war has ordered the establishment of a modern military camp on the Chickamauga battlefield during the continuance of the services incident to the dedication of the new national park at that place. The camp will be composed of eight companies of infantry and one of artillery.

MANITOBA MUDDLE.

Catholics and the Dominion Government Talking Compromise.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 28.—Strenuous efforts are being made by parties representing the Ottawa government and the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba to come to terms with the Manitoba government on the school question. These parties assert positively that the conference between the federal and provincial premiers will be held in Winnipeg in the course of a few weeks, when the basis of settlement will be arrived at. The public is inclined to believe there is something in these statements because of the Manitoba government's delay in taking up the question. It is pointed out, however, that the fact of the representatives of the Ottawa government and the Roman Catholics making such positive predictions of amicable settlement means that they have made up their minds to accept a great deal less than they heretofore demanded. If this is so there is every hope of the matter being quietly settled.

Four Days' Racing at the State Fair.

There will be four days of racing at the Minnesota State Fair which will occur at Hamline, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis, September 9th to 14th inclusive, with a good list of entries in all the races. The passage of the anti-poor selling law by the last legislature has rid the society of the meetings which were held on the grounds during the summer but not under the auspices of the society, and which have been more or less criticized, and the lovers of the trotting horse can be assured that there will be a lot of sport without any of the attendant, and to many, objectionable gambling features. The races will occur on Tuesday, Sept. 10th, and on each day thereafter until Friday. The opening day of the fair will be given over to the bicyclers, and the Press clubs of St. Paul and Minneapolis, in conjunction with the state Editorial Association, are preparing a unique program for Saturday, the closing day. The purses offered to the trotters during the four days' meeting aggregate $5,000.

A SERIOUS CHARGE

MINNEAPOLIS HAS ANOTHER INSURANCE MURDER CASE.

Mrs. Laura Perkins Accused of Killing Her Sister, Who Carried Heavy Insurance—Her Death Caused by a Fire Declared to Have Been Accidental.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 24.—Mrs. Laura Perkins, charged with the murder of her twin sister Lola, was arraigned in the police court during the afternoon and remanded without bail to appear Thursday next for a preliminary hearing. Mrs. Hawkins, the dead woman, expired on the morning of Aug. 9 from injuries supposed to have been received by the accidental explosion of a lamp. The recent developments in the case and the arrest of Mrs. Perkins have caused a sensation in this city second only to the murder of Catherine Ging, and the motive for the crime is said to have been the same in both cases. Mrs. Hawkins carried $7,000 insurance on her life, and her sister, Mrs. Perkins, now under arrest, was the sole beneficiary.

Was Supposed to Be Accidental.

At the time of the occurrence every one supposed it to have been accidental, and no one for a minute ever thought that the sister, still alive and a widow who resides with her one child, was capable of the terrible act of which she now stands accused.

Superintendent of Police Smith, however, looked into the case slightly and finally consulted with County Attorney Nye, and, as a result of their investigations, Inspectors Lawrence and Hoy were detailed to work on the case, and the insurance companies, too, asked to do some investigating before paying the $7,000 insurance. They sent their two medical inspectors to this city, and since that time work has been going on night and day on the case, with the result that Mrs. Perkins was arrested on the terrible charge.

Two Lamp Explosions.

Mrs. Hawkins, the deceased, was injured on two different occasions by lamp explosions. The first alleged explosion simply burned her hands in quite a serious manner. The occasion of the second alleged lamp explosion of Aug. 9 is the one about which interest entirely centers.

The theory of the state is that while the deceased slept, Mrs. Perkins saturated her sister's clothing with kerosene oil and set fire to it with matches; that then she, herself, upset the lighted lamp on the stand to add credibility to the story that Mrs. Hawkins had accidentally overturned it in her sleep. The flames at once and Mrs. Perkins screamed for help. No effort was made by Mrs. Perkins to put out the flames and it was not until the arrival of neighbors that anything was done. Then help was too late to be of any service to Mrs. Hawkins. She was burned almost to a crisp.

Public sympathy is strongly with the arrested woman, and many believe that the authorities and insurance detectives have been too hasty and have worked a terrible and irreparable injury. Others in a position to form a clearer opinion do not for a moment believe County Attorney Nye would issue the warrant did he not have at his hand almost certain evidence of the charge which he has made.

Conflicting Testimony.

MINNEAPOLIS, May 27.—But little that was new was learned in Minneapolis during the day concerning the past lives of Mrs. Perkins or of Mrs. Hawkins, whom she is accused of having murdered. The testimony given at the coroner's inquest was very conflicting.

Was a Well Known Missourian.

WELLSVILLE, Mo., Aug. 28.—Hon. Sol Hughlett, one of the best known men in Missouri, shot and instantly killed himself in Peyton's drug store. He was alone when the revolver was discharged and it is unknown whether the shooting was premeditated or accidental.

The Kenosha Bank Failure.

KENOSHA, Wis., Aug. 28.—An application has been made for the appointment of George Hale as receiver for the Daniel Head bank. This action was taken in accordance with a recommendation of the directors. The bank was closed Saturday.

Have Eleven Jurors Now.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 28.—At Monday's session of the Durrant case two veniremen were passed by both sides and sworn in, making 11 jurors now selected to try the case.

Thieves at Greenwood.

GREENWOOD, Wis., Aug. 28.—Burglars blew open the safe in the store of the Greenwood Mercantile and Manufacturing company, securing about $100 and 30 gold rings.

Out on the Fly.

Will somebody hold our bonnet while we think some good, hard thinks on the subject of flies. Oh! the flies, the pestiferous flies; they walk on our countenance and toy with our eyes; though we're tickled to death to have them around, we could wish the whole shootin' match under the ground; in vain are the screens and the pisen fly papers, these imps of inferno keep on with their capers; till our housekeeper says, with most earnest expression; "Oh! —(drat) the flies!"

SOME OATS,

A fine sample of oats on exhibition in the post-office lobby, this week, shows what Polk county can do in that line when she just gets right up and humps herself. The stalks are fully six feet long, containing heads that will average from nine inches to one foot long, and filled? Well, we should remmick! A man that full would be decidedly uncomfortable—that is if the oats were wild oats, we reckon. A field like that sample would yield not less than 80 bushels per acre. Notwithstanding such illustrations as this we suppose that farmers will still continue to run out of feed about harvest time next year. The sample referred to is from the farm of O. Capistran and is no better than the average farmer can do, no especial pains having been taken in the cultivation of the crop.

Don't Be In a Rush.

This little maxim, which is said to be a safe rule to apply in love as in war has a peculiar significance in the wheat market this fall, for it seems to be a fact that the United States is one of only two great countries that has produced big crops of wheat this year, and the total amount will not begin to supply the needs of the world for the coming year, so it seems reasonably safe to calculate that later prices will be better than present prices are. As soon as the yield of the present crop could be approximately estimated, the price began steadily to decline. Wheat opened this week at 49 cents for 1 hard, and the presence of 800 cars of new wheat on track at Duluth on Monday, together with that already in store, had the effect to cause a slump of one cent, making the opening price on Tuesday 48 cents. It seems to be the opinion of the best judges that wheat will go very much higher if it is not dumped on the market all at once, and the best way to avoid it would be for farmers to stack their wheat, and this very many of them intend to do.

ONE ON CONGRESSMAN EDDY.

Glenwood News.

Congressman Eddy believes in telling a good joke, no matter who it affects. He is now telling one about a fellow taking him for a harvest hand and trying to get him to work on the farm through haying. On the train coming up from Minneapolis were a number of farm hands going west to seek employment, and at every station they would get out and line up on the platform to see who wanted a man. Mr. Eddy becoming weary, also got off the train and walked up and down the platform. At one place a fellow said to him: "Say young fellow, I'll give you a dollar and a half a day to work for me through haying." "No" replied the congressman, "$1.50 is pretty good wages these days, but my fare is paid up into Dakota, and they are paying $2.50 up there; guess I'll go up." The farmer replied: "I'll tell you this, young fellow, Dakota may be all right, but you'll soon wish to God you were back here making hay for me at a dollar'n a half a day, just mind that." Frank "minded" it all right and now laughs heartily when telling how he nearly hired out to make hay.

SOME GOOD CROPS.

Wm. Box, Jr., was down from the farm near Warren on Tuesday evening, chatting with old-time friends. Mr. Box says he is threshing his wheat and it is turning out from 33 to 36 bushels per acre and he thinks the whole 500 acres will go 35 bushels per acre. One of his neighbors, Mr. Southwell, threshed 46 bushels per acre off of 20 acres of his wheat field and this seems to be an average for his entire tract. Mr. Box says while as yet but little threshing has been done in his neighborhood, the wheat all looks good for proportionate yields and he says Polk county will pan out more wheat per acre this year than ever before. It will be remembered that a few years since "Billy" went out to the coast to the then territory of Washington in order to benefit his condition but he soon came back to the old farm and now you couldn't kick him out of Polk county. He will thresh his wheat from the shock but most of his neighbors will stack.

Knute Nelson's Home.

A Swedish Newspaper Man Talks About It.

Minneapolis Times.

In one of the many thousand nooks and corners of that part of Norway which since times long passed by has been known by the name of Telemarken, can be found an old farm house, called Reismyr. In that house was Knute Nelson, ex-governor of Minnesota and United States senator, born and bred and reared until the time when "he found the cottage too narrow." Some time ago the place was visited by a Swedish newspaper man who writes thus about the old home of the present senator.

"The outward appearance of the peasant houses in the northern and western part of Telemarken is poor. They are most times unpainted, but weather and wind have given them a grayish-brown color, and they are closely surrounded by a number of small outhouses, among which may be seen some quite nice "stabburer"—a kind of storehouse with prettily carved corners and door posts. The roofs are mostly made out of bark or peat.

"But in these humble dwellings you may often find things of considerable value. Telemarken is well known as the home of the beautiful silver filigrees, which of late has become so fashionable. Up to this very time there can be found peasant goldsmiths who for the country maidens work out the most exquisite ornaments. We saw many adornments of that kind when they favored us with a look into their well filled chests.

"We were especially surprised when we came to an old house in Grungedal. In outward appearance it was an old-fashioned and simple. The house wife was just busy flattening and baking the peculiar bread which is used by the peasants, and which is prepared in thin, hard sheets, with a diameter of about two feet. A daughter of the house was at once ready to take us into the upper story of the old "stabbar," the whole floor of which was occupied by double rows of gigantic chests, painted in gay colors and containing the riches of the house. A vast number of magnificent quilts and covers in antique Norwegian patterns were suspended from the ceiling, making it rather difficult to find a way through the room. One of the chests was opened, and one beautiful ornament after another taken from its hiding place and exhibited. Among them was one of which had formed part of the dress worn by the house-wife at her wedding. They had been offered 400 crowns for it, but neither was the price considered high enough, nor were they willing to sell the ornament which had belonged to the family for many generations.

"Among the ornaments were found a few of more recent make. They had come from America, and were in value as well as in beauty not to be compared with the other ones. Yet the family seemed to look upon them as the most precious part of other treasures. They had been sent home by an elder brother who had emigrated to America. A big chest containing his part of the inheritance was still waiting for his return. But it seemed little likely that he will come for it. From the neighbors we heard that he had met with an unusual success in the country on the other side of the Atlantic. He had been governor of the state of Minnesota, and was now one of that state's representatives in the senate of the United States. Later we found Knute Nelson Reismyr mentioned among those Norwegian-Americans that have refused to let their names be used in connection with any anti-Swedish demonstrations."

THE LAST OF EARTH.

The funeral obsequies of Mrs. Wm. Aaglim took place on Monday. The Rev. Father Murphy officiating. The church building was filled to its utmost capacity, notwithstanding it was at the time when the storm that prevailed that day was at its greatest height and furiously raging outside. The floral offerings were many and beautiful. All of the prominent business houses in the city were closed during the ceremonies and only for the storm the church building would not have held half the people who would have been there. The funeral procession was one of the largest ever seen in this city. The pall bearers were; Frank Gravel, Alex. McKinnon, Allan McKinnon, P. J. McGuire, R. J. Montague and Martin Lally.

THUNDER, LIGHTNING AND HAIL.

AND ONE THING AND ANOTHER.

This section was visited on Monday by one of the severest rain and hail storms of the season, accompanied by very high winds. Compared with the racket made but very little damage was done to the crops, probably because they were mostly all in shock. The storm center seemed to be in and around this city where the hail fell fast and furiously, and we are confidently assured by some who were eye-witnesses that hail-stones as big as chunks of ice were very much in evidence all around the city. The big Corser farm south west of the city seemed to be the severest sufferer one piece of 160 acres of wheat being whipped out and utterly ruined. Jake Ide in Lowell, also lost some grain and a few of his neighbors suffered more or less. Alex Buraam, on Burnam's creek, says the storm was very severe along the creek but did not seem to injure grain much as it was all in shock. Taken as a whole we have every reason to be thankful that the damage was no greater.

New York Fashion Letter.

The most fashionable fabrics for yachting gowns are serge, linen and duck. Beautiful models are made of white linen with wide Sailor collars of some bright color. The popular ecru linen collarettes and plastrons are used for both cotton and wool dresses. The skirts are gored, lined with silk and have a stiff interlining half a yard deep. Mohair is the favorite fabric for French cycling costumes. The Knickerbockers are very full and strapped over the knee. The skirts are short and made with several side-pleats. The jackets have full skirts, wide revers and large sleeves, which describes as well, the newest coat for early autumn. The cape will continue to be the most popular garment on account of the continuation of the voluminous sleeve. Both capes and jackets, as well as entire costumes in tailor style, will be braided in the same color or black. The new shades of alpaca are also braided. Novelties in woolen fabrics are checked and plaid crepon in the new colors. The most recent importation of silk are all the varieties of faille and corded silk. Velvets and velvet ribbons appear in great quantities and velvet flowers in all varieties and colors will be used by the modistes during the coming season.

The McDowell Fashion Magazines in which one sees many illustrations of these new fancies are very interesting reading for this month. They give both the Paris and New York Fashions and are of invaluable service to the professional as well as to the amateur dressmaker.

"La Mode de Paris" and "Paris Album of Fashion" cost $3.50 each per year's subscription or 35 cents per copy. The French Dress-maker is $3.00 per annum or 30 cents a copy; and "La Mode" $1.50 a year or 15 cents a copy. If you are unable to procure either of these journals from your newsdealer do not take any substitute, but apply by mail to A. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th St., New York.

CAMPBELL IS NAMED

OHIO'S EX-GOVERNOR AGAIN HEADS THE DEMOCRATIC TICKET.

His Nomination Unanimous, and Made by Acclamation, as Were All the Other Nominations—Platform Adopted Endorses Cleveland and Opposes Free Silver.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Aug. 23.—The Democratic state ticket is as follows:

Governor, James E. Campbell.

Lieutenant governor, John B. Peaslee.

Auditor, James W. Knott.

Treasurer, William B. Sholer.

Supreme judge, William T. Mooney.

Attorney general, George A. Fairbanks.

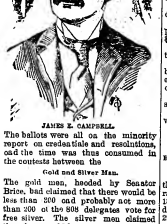
Clerk of supreme court, J. W. Cruikshank.

The Democratic state convention here made all its nominations without opposition. The convention was in session from 10:20 to 2:40 and the nominations were completed in a half hour after ex-Governor Campbell had been drafted for the standard bearer.



JAMES E. CAMPBELL.

The ballots were all on the minority report on credentials and resolutions, and the time was thus consumed in the contests between the Gold and Silver Men.

The gold men, headed by Senator Brice, had claimed that there would be less than 200 and probably not more than 200 of the 808 delegates vote for free silver. The silver men claimed that they would have no less than 300 and probably 350 delegates for free silver. It developed that there were 270 free silver delegates. It was a fighting minority but it did not carry the fight further than on the platform. The nominee for member of the board of public works is said to be the only free silver man on the state ticket, although the silver lines were not drawn on the candidates. There was considerable enthusiasm over the nomination of Campbell. He defeated ex-Governor Foraker in 1889 and was defeated for re-election as governor in 1891 by William McKinley, Jr., the present incumbent. The nomination of Campbell where McKinley is now recognized as a candidate for president and Foraker for senator, the fate of both depending largely upon the pending contest between Campbell and Bushnell for governor. It is generally understood that Governor Campbell was induced to make the race by promises of support for the presidential nomination, in the event of his success next November, in which contingency he again confronts his old opponent, McKinley, should the latter be nominated. And in co-operating with Senator Brice for a Democratic legislature ex-Governor Campbell is also again confronting his other old opponent, Foraker. It is thought the contest between these old leaders in Ohio will overshadow the currency question and other issues.

Means an Aggressive Campaign in Ohio,

Previous to his election as governor in 1889 Campbell had been three times elected to congress in a Republican district and is recognized as the best campaigner of his party in Ohio.

The Platform.

The fight of the day in the convention was on the money question, the majority report favoring "sound money" being adopted by a vote of 525 to 270. The resolutions endorse Cleveland and Brice and point with pride to the work of the last Democratic congress.

CALDWELL INTERVIEWED.

Prefers Not to Talk About the Presidency. His Financial Views.

TOPEKA, Kan., Aug. 27.—Judge Henry F. Caldwell of the United States circuit court is here, to enter a decree for the Santa Fe railroad. He is accompanied by his family and will leave Topeka for St. Paul in the morning. In connection with the mention of his name as a presidential candidate, he was asked, "Would you accept if you were nominated?"

"I would prefer not to talk about the matter and I have nothing to do with it, whatever talk has been going the rounds," he replied, in a manner which indicated that he would not be averse to become a candidate for his party.

His Financial Views.

"The people in the West understand that you are for free silver. That is where you stand is it not?" asked the reporter.

The face of the judge lighted up with enthusiasm as he answered:

"Yes, sir. That is correct. I am for free silver without reservation, or any reference to an international agreement. It is plain to me that there can be no international agreement favorable to silver because England will not agree to accept free silver. What is the use of paying any attention to the foreign countries anyway? Are we not capable of managing our own affairs? I think we are, and if not I am in favor of annexing the United States to Canada or some other convenient country."

Insurgent War News.

TAMPA, Fla., Aug. 26.—Passengers arriving from Cuba report that General Serafin Sanchez engaged Colonel Palanco's forces in Santa Clara, routing the latter and taking a number of prisoners. It is rumored that General Maceo captured Jiguany in Santiago province.

PEARSALL WILL LOSE.

President Hill Talks of the Great Northern—Northern Pacific Deal.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 26.—J. J. Hill when asked regarding the Great Northern-Northern Pacific deal replied that it was still in good shape. When asked if it was in as good shape as it ever was he replied in a trisyllable:

"Certainly."

"What about the legal complications?" he was asked.

"There will be none of a serious nature," he replied. "I see that one of the stockholders has brought suit against us. But that doesn't amount to much."

"You refer to Pearsall of New York?"

"Yes. We shall defeat him on his own ground. He thinks that the proposed deal would be inimical to his and other interests, but he is evidently mistaken. Most of the Great Northern people think otherwise, and we shall defeat him."

"Then you expect no legal obstacles to the consummation of your deal?"

"None. The deal will be carried out as proposed."

"How is the reorganization progressing?"

"It seems to be progressing very well."

No Difference With Morgan.

"What are the differences between you and the Northern Pacific people, as represented by J. Pierpont Morgan?"

"None. J. Pierpont Morgan has nothing to do with this. He may represent some of the underwriters, but they will come in afterwards. People who write about differences between myself and Mr. Morgan are writing for space."

"What is the actual amount of guarantee of earnings of so-called rental?"

"Six million two hundred thousand dollars."

"Is it a fact that the Northern Pacific people demanded $7,000,000 and also $15,000,000 security?"

"It is not a fact, and all reports to that effect are wind."

"Then, after the reorganization has been effected there appears to be no obstacle in the way of your plan for control?"

"There appears to be none. You have sized up the situation correctly."

"You are confident now that the deal will be all right?"

"Perfectly."

BALANCE ON RIGHT SIDE.

Receivers of the Northern Pacific Give Out Annual Earnings.

NEW YORK, Aug. 27.—The report of the receivers of the Northern Pacific railroad for the year ending June 30, 1895, shows gross earnings $17,434,981, decrease $467,095; net earnings $6,115,299, increase $963,864. Surplus $535,974 against a deficiency of $1,281,351 in 1894.

STATE HAS NO RIGHT.

Treaty With Indians Paramount to Wyoming Game Laws.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27.—It has been definitely decided by the Indian bureau that no attention will be paid to the game laws of Wyoming where they come into conflict with the treaty of the United States with the Bannock and Shoshone Indians.

The attorney general, after considering the matter, has informed the secretary of the interior and the commissioner of Indian affairs that the rights of the Indians to hunt on unoccupied lands in his opinion are unquestionable, and that he considers that the State of Wyoming has no power to limit this right.

THE BOND SYNDICATE.

It Will Attempt to Render Gold Exports Unprofitable.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—Wall street learned during the day that the managers of the bond syndicate are ready to pay its members the remaining 30 per cent of the money advanced by them for the purchase in February of the new 4 per cent United States bonds. The money will be distributed Monday. It amounts to between $9,750,000 and $10,000,000. This repayment of the entire original subscription indicates that exchange will surely go down to a point which will make it unprofitable to export gold.

FRANCE WILL JOIN IN

If a Move Is Made to Stop Chinese Outrages.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The Berlin correspondent of The Standard telegraphs that the news that France will join England and America in whatever steps may be necessary to stop the massacre of foreigners in China, has induced some German newspapers to express the hope that Germany will do likewise. Germany has a large squadron in Chinese waters.

CHINESE HAVE YIELDED.

Will Allow Foreigners to Be Present at the Investigations.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—A dispatch to The Times from Shanghai says that the Ku Cheng inquiry has been proceeding since Wednesday, with all the members of the consular commission present, but progress is slow. The dispatch adds that a Mahomedan rebellion has broken out in the province of Kansu and is spreading seriously.

MAKING A TEST CASE.

Saloonkeepers' League at West Superior Would Stop Street Cars.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., Aug. 27.—Warrants have been issued for those who violated the state Sunday closing laws. A street car conductor and motorman were arrested to make a test case against the street railway. The league intends to prosecute until everything is closed tight on Sunday or until saloons and all other places are allowed to open.

Requittal Wins the Futurity.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—David Gideon's Requittal, ridden by Griffin, won the Futurity at Sheepshead Bay Saturday and enriched his owner $53,750 thereby. The distance was three-quarters of a mile and the time 1:11 2-5. Cresendo was second and Silver II third. Twenty 2-year-olds started in the race, the favorites, Handspring and Hastings, finishing in the bunch.

Can Fight in Mexico.

EL PASO, Tex., Aug. 26.—A representative in this city of President Stuart of the Florida Athletic club received from the City of Mexico positive assurance that the Mexican authorities would allow the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight to take place in Juarez, Mex., across the river from El Paso, in case the contest is stopped at Dallas.

BULL FIGHTING IN AMERICA.

Six Thousand People Witness the Mexican Sport in Colorado.

CRIPPLE CREEK, Colo., Aug. 26.—Another bull was killed in the arena at Gillett Sunday in the presence of 6,000 people and the work was done in the style of Spain and Mexico. The first bull turned into the arena was an exceedingly tame animal even after the darts were in him. He refused to fight and the multitude cried for a new animal. Arizona Charley appeared to be equally disgusted and he upbraided the band of cowboys that drove the bull into the arena. The next animal made a fight for his life, but its fight was quickly over. Chieta, the king of the arena in not only Mexico, but in Spain, made two stabs at the animal and then left him practically dead, but the Mexicans with the red cloaks released the creature and made him dart at them. One came within an ace of losing his life and there was great excitement in consequence, especially among the little party from the country to which the individual belonged. Not a few women fainted.

An Exhibition of Cruelty.

At the ring not a single shout of approval was heard. Not an applauding hand was raised. For four minutes, which to many seemed to stretch into 10, the bull had fought with death and men in the full sight of them all, blood squrting from gaping sword wounds just back of his right shoulder, welling from his mouth and nostrils, flecking his own sides and forming great pools on the ground. For over two or three minutes the bull stood motionless almost, save for heaving sides as he gave long gasps for breath, then fell. Only a few seconds he lay quite still. Then he slowly struggled to his feet and leaned against the heavy barrier of the bull ring as if for support, pitifully weak from the crimson streams fast coloring the ground about him. Then he gathered himself and started slowly forward,

Staggering and Waving

from side to side. For 20 feet the bull advanced, weak, bloody, faltering, then fell again, his fresh, warm blood welled up a little over the clotted mass on the animal's shoulder, at every step lessening the pulsation of the heart. A Spaniard in a gaudy costume stepped up to the quivering beast and sent the sharp point of a sword blade into the neck of the animal, snapping the spinal chord. The legs of the animal drew up convulsively and then life, clung to so desperately and long, was gone.

It was simply an exhibition of cruelty and was not enjoyed at all by the crowd.

Over a hundred deputy sheriffs were in attendance and the management was again placed under arrest, but no attempt was made to stop the proceedings.

NEXT G. A. R. ENCAMPMENT.

Indications Are That St. Paul Can Get It for the Asking.

LOUISVILLE, Aug. 27.—Interviews and correspondence with delegates to the forthcoming national encampment of the G. A. R. indicate that St. Paul can have the next encampment for the asking. A strong fight in behalf of that city was made at Pittsburg in 1894, but its advocates were handicapped by the eloquence of Henry Watterson and the fact that they did not inaugurate their campaign until a large number of state delegations had been pledged to Louisville.

Receiver For the F. M. B. A.

SHELBYVILLE, Ills., Aug. 27.—At a meeting of the stockholders of the Farmers' Mutual Benefit association, many of whom are the richest farmers in Shelby county, it was resolved to put the property in the hands of a receiver to wind up its affairs.

CAUGHT UP WITH THE THIEF.

Switch Engine Used to Overhaul a Passenger Train.

BUTTE, Mon., Aug. 26.—A man who gave the name of George Wilkins committed a bold robbery of the ticket office of the Montana Central depot. An excursion train was pulling out for Anaconda when he ran up to the ticket window and grabbed a sack containing about $50, and before anyone could catch him he had boarded the train and was gone. A switch engine with several policemen was soon in pursuit, and after a hot chase of ten miles the passenger train was overtaken and the robber arrested. The money, however, was not recovered, as he had evidently passed it to a confederate.

Do You Want to Stop Tobacco?

You Can Be Cured While Using It.

The habit of using tobacco grows on a man until grave diseased conditions are produced. Tobacco causes cancer of the mouth and stomach; dyspepsia, loss of memory, nervous affections, congestion of the retina and wasting of the optic nerve; resulting in impairment of the vision, even to the extent of blindness; dizziness, or vertigo; tobacco asthma; nightly suffocation, dull pain in region of the heart, followed later by sharp pains, palpitation and weakened pulse, resulting in fatal heart disease. It also causes loss of vitality.

QUIT BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE.

To quit suddenly is too severe a shock to the system, as tobacco—to an inveterate user, becomes a stimulant that his system continually craves. "BACO-CURO" is a scientific and reliable vegetable remedy, guaranteed to be perfectly harmless, and which has been in use for the last 23 years, having cured thousands of habitual tobacco users—smokers, chewers and snuff-dippers.

You can use all the tobacco you want while taking "Baco-Curo." It will notify you when to stop. We give a written guarantee to permanently cure any case with three boxes, or refund the money with ten per cent interest.

"Baco-Curo" is not a substitute, but a reliable and scientific cure—which absolutely destroys the craving for tobacco without the aid of will power, and with no inconvenience. It leaves the system as pure and free from nicotine as the day you took your first chew or smoke.

Sold by all druggists at $1.00 per box, three boxes (thirty day's treatment and guaranteed cure) $2.50, or sent direct upon receipt of price. Send six two-cent stamps for sample box, booklet and proofs free. Eureka Chemical and Manufacturing Co., Manufacturing Chemists, La Crosse, Wisconsin. [17-20]

Public Spirited Citizens

Should take a delight in adding anything to our town or county in the educational line which is valuable, unique and is not found in other communities. Our townsman, C. E. Misner, tells us he has an opportunity to place in our city a fine three and a half inch astronomical telescope, which will be for the educational benefit of our citizens. There is not as fine a telescope anywhere in our state, except at Carlton college, Northfield, where they have a fine astronomical observatory. Mr. Misner says that Prof. Hicks' paper, Word and Works, of St. Louis, offers him this fine instrument if he will get up a club of 800 subscribers to the paper. He is willing to put in a considerable part of his time and make a great effort to secure this fine telescope. If our citizens give him proper support it will not be a very hard matter to secure it. Word and Works is a fine monthly magazine and is well worth $1 a year, the subscription price. Mr. Misner will take subscriptions to this paper and every subscriber will have the privilege of looking through the fine telescope, which will be put up at Lyune's photograph gallery, free of charge. You get your money's worth if you do not look through the telescope, for Word and Works is a splendid family monthly and cheap at $1.00, but you have the satisfaction of knowing also that you have contributed toward the addition to our county of a fine instrument, not to be equaled by anything in northwestern Minnesota. Mr. Misner, or his agent, will be around to see the people of the county within the next six weeks and we hope he will receive encouragement wherever he goes. [15-tf]

THE MAYA WOMEN.

THEY ARE INTELLIGENT, SWEET TEMPERED AND BEAUTIFUL.

In the Olden Times These Wives of the First Owners of America Were the Mothers of a Courageous Race, and They Never Looked Into a Mirror.

An unfamiliar word, but as old as the hills almost, is this word Maya. Among the Brahmans it means illusion and is the name of the earth, the material world, which, according to the Brahmanical doctrine, is nonexistent—an illusion. Maya Devi was the name of the beautiful mother of Buddha. Maya in the feminine energy of Brahma and the mother of all the gods, even of Brahma himself. Any Greek dictionary informs us that Maya is the good mother of all gods and men. In Japan the goddess Maya is still worshiped. The beautiful Indian poem "Ramayann" tells us about a great navigator named Maya, who in ages long gone by took forcible possession of the countries at the south of the Hindoostanee peninsula and settled there.

The Maya people of America were in olden times a great nation, occupying the territory comprised between the isthmus of Tehuantepec and that of Darien. We know that they were navigators, their boats being depicted in very ancient books and paintings. In 1502, when Columbus came to America for the fourth time, he met on the high seas a large boat, in which were men, women and children. It also had a cargo of merchandise, consisting of weapons, tools, products of the earth and ready made garments. The travelers called themselves Mayas. They were in the habit of traveling to Cuba and other islands to trade with their inhabitants. The Mayas were neatly clothed in white cotton raiment. They were self possessed and courteous. Fifteen years later their land, today called Yucatan, was invaded by the Spaniards, but it cost the white men 25 years of warfare to get control of that country, for every Maya fought like a hero. They were sons of fearless mothers.

In reading the works left by the Spanish chroniclers—priests who accompanied the soldiers—we learn that the Maya women were very good looking, as many are at the present day; that they were charitable, sweet tempered, industrious, modest and so free from vanity that they never consulted the mirror, although their husbands did. In physique these women were large and beautifully shaped.

Their complexion was a light brown, and their silky black hair very abundant. Father Cogollndo, a Spanish priest, wrote, "These women are more beautiful and better tempered than those of Spain." They always dressed themselves, as they do at the present time, in flowing white garments, and in their happier days were greatly addicted to the use of perfumes and flowers. They were industrious, devoted wives and fond mothers, but exacted great deference from their children. Their ideas of modesty were so strict that they did not permit their daughters to look boldly into the face of a man, and if a girl showed a want of shyness the indignant matron would pinch her arms. After the Spaniards were in possession of the land they subjected these women to indignities and cruelty. Among many other things it is recorded that in one village they found two young women of remarkable beauty, one a bride, the other a maiden, and they hanged both, so that there should be no trouble about them. Many young mothers were hung from trees and their infants suspended from their feet. Those who escaped death were enslaved with their husbands and children.

Long ago, as far back as our studies enable us to know anything about that nation, the Maya women seem to have enjoyed the same privileges as the men, to have had equal power in politics and equal authority.

Today, when business is to be transacted, the wife takes the active part, her husband nodding his head affirmatively. It is not that she desires to domineer, but because he looks up to her, relying on her judgment. She complies with admirable moderation and modesty. She is eloquent and forceful without being loquacious, and she never scolds. When her husband gets himself into trouble, she pleads for him, being a more able reasoner than he is. If he gets intoxicated, she guides him home. If he strikes her, she says, "He does not know what he is doing," regarding him with angelic forbearance, so that domestic brawls are quite unknown. It is her pleasure to give him the best of what they have, keeping for herself the worst.

This woman's home has a thatched roof and earthen floor. She has no pretty objects around her. Hammocks serve as seats by day as well as beds by night. There is one low chair or stool on which she sits while her busy fingers make the garments of the family. In one corner stands a bench and grinding stones. Her hands grind all the corn used in that humble abode. The fire is built on the floor between three stones, on which rests the clay pot or the disk for baking tortillas. Outside at the back of the hut there is a long dugout, serving as a washtub, resting on trestles. There she stands for some hours every day, her small feet bare, soapsuds up to her elbows, yet her hands are small and pretty, her voice is sweet and low, her language never rude, and if you approach her hut she welcomes you with such perfect grace and self possession, mingled with cordiality, that you ask yourself if she is not a princess in disguise. She may be, but, alas! the palaces of her sires are crumbling away in the forests where her husband cuts timber for his master, the white man, now owner of the soil. The dying race must bear its fate, and the Maya woman meets it nobly, with resignation and grace.—Washington Post.

HALF A CENTURY AGO.

Philadelphia Gentlemen Drank In a Way to Astonish Their Descendants.

Among Americans up to 1855 the use and abuse of strong drink were almost universal, but it certainly affected their health less injuriously than at the present time. The worry and strain of modern business and social life shatter nerves now and lead to dram drinking to repair them. On the contrary, most of the excesses in the old times came after a solid dinner, and three or four hours were spent in rest and conviviality, but the amount drank was enormous. When the exchange was completed, in 1832, a dinner was given, and there was some apprehension that the wine would run out, and a well known broker on the committee expressed his surprise, as the company had not averaged more than three bottles apiece. This would be thought a very large allowance of strong Madeira in these times.

In 1853 the final audit of the accounts of the United States bank was completed, and on behalf of the government James A. Bayard of Delaware, John M. Mason and a Kentucky gentleman named Dukes appeared. It was a mere formality, as the matter had been settled ten years before. John Young acted as clerk. The party met in the northwest chamber of the bank building—now the custom house—at 11 o'clock. A bottle of brandy and six of Madeira were on the table, and after a short inspection of papers the wine was opened, and by 1 o'clock was drank. The day was warm, and a bowl of bishop was ordered, and this was made by the servant with the brandy and a flask of Curacoa.

This was drank, and the three committeemen went to dine with Charles J. Ingersoll about 5 o'clock. They returned, bringing a friend. A dozen Madeira were at hand, and smoking, drinking and whist were in order until 12, when the last bottle was drank, and then Prosser, the cook, brought in cold ducks and a mighty lobster salad. A gallon bowl of brandy punch was made as conducive to digestion. A tumbler of this finished the clerk, who went to sleep and was aroused at daybreak to drink a cup of coffee, and then all went down the steps and walked away in the fresh morning air, none the worse in appearance from the night's potations.

It is apparent that in a life like this it was the survival of the fittest. The steady ones carried off the honors, but gout, gravel and dropsy played havoc with the others, and these complaints were charged to port and Madeira by the doctors, and so the habit of drinking claret and light wines came into fashion.

Gambling was almost universal, and many fortunes of old Philadelphians disappeared in this way.—Philadelphia Times.

Keeping Everlastingly at It.

Genius is really only the power of making continuous efforts. The line between failure and success is so fine that we scarcely know when we pass it—so fine that we are often on the line and do not know it. How many a man has thrown up his hands at a time when a little more effort, a little more patience, would have achieved success! As the tide goes clear out, so it comes clear in. In business sometimes prospects may seem darkest when really they are on the turn. A little more persistence, a little more effort, and what seemed hopeless failure may turn to glorious success. There is no failure except in no longer trying. There is no defeat except from within, no really insurmountable barrier save our own inherent weakness of purpose.—Electrical Review.

FRENCH BARBARITY AT YAFA.

Thousands of Prisoners Were Shot Down After the Surrender.

No French victory was ever marked by such unbridled license as that which the victorious troops practiced at Yafa. But what followed was worse, for the prisoners of war were too numerous for the ordinary usage. For some days they were treated according to the terms of quarter they had exacted. On the 17th a council of war unanimously voted that the old rule under which no quarter is given to defenders in an assault should be applied to them. For three days Bonaparte hesitated, but on the 20th his decision was taken. A few Egyptians were sent home and the remainder of the prisoners, together with the 800 militia from El Arish, were marched to the beach and shot. In the report to the directory the number was put at 1,200. Two eyewitnesses estimated it—one at 3,000, the other at 4,000.

"I have been severe with those of your troops who violated the laws of war," wrote the author of the deed to Jezzar. No mention of the fact or excuse for it was made in any of his other correspondence at the time. All winter long he had been dealing as an oriental with orientals, and this was but a piece of the same conduct. The code of Christian morality was far from his mind. In January, for instance, he had ordered Murat to kill all the prisoners of a hostile tribe in the desert whom he could not bring away, and in the same month identical orders were issued to Berthier concerning another existing horde.

The plea which is made by the eulogists of Napoleon and by some recent military writers for this wholesale execution is that among these slaughtered men the garrison of El Arish, which had surrendered, had been found again with arms in their hands; that they were deserving of death according to all the laws of war, and that, as to the rest, there were no French prisoners for whom to exchange them and no provisions to support them, consequently their presence with the army would jeopardize its success, and it was therefore justifiable to diminish the enemy's resisting power by their execution. Those who believe that war, whether just or unjust, justifies any barbarity which will lead to speedy victory will agree with that opinion.—Professor W. M. Sloane's "Life of Napoleon" in Century.

BUSINESS along every line begins to feel the impetus of the big crop just harvested, and the prospects are that as soon as the republican party can get hold of the affairs of government we shall be right on deck again.

AWHILE ago the Thirteen Towns nominated Levi P. Morton for president, and would have no other. Now they are busy scratching Cush Davis on the back and exclaiming: Lo! and behold, Cush is the man and the Thirteen Towns is his discoverer!

IF our good old Uncle Samuel has a spark of the spirit of '76 left in his anatomy he will investigate the Chinese outrages and bring those murderers of missionaries to book for their dastardly deeds. Reckon Grover is too busy investigating pension frauds to mind a little thing like this, however.

The Agricultural Editors of the Country to Meet.

An International congress of the agricultural editors is to be held during the week of the Minnesota state fair, on the grounds at Hamline. The editors of all the leading agricultural papers of the country will be in attendance. The session of the congress will be held in Institute hall on the grounds and the discussions will be open to the farmers and others who may be interested. In inviting the editors to come to Minnesota the managers of the fair were confident that they would be able show them one of the most comprehensive fairs held in the country, and agricultural products of which any state might well be proud. The invitation went out before the crop was known to be as large as it has since been found to be, and apparently the people of the whole state have set to work to show the editors and the public what Minnesota can do when she tries. More than the usual number of county exhibits are to be made this year and the agricultural feature of the fair will be great. The St. Paul & Duluth Railroad, which has not in previous years made an exhibit, is preparing a very extensive one, and some of the communities which were devastated by fire less than a year ago are going to make exhibits of the crops which they have secured to show how the burned out communities are getting along. Pine county, where the fires did more damage than anywhere else, promises to make the biggest exhibit of the lot.

Atlanta Expo.

A movement was begun by the exposition management, a few days ago, to bring all school children above the grade of grammar schools to the exposition, and it is believed that at least a quarter of a million will come. There are a half million boys and girls in the high schools seminaries and academies of the southern states, and it is estimated that fifty per cent. can be brought. Dr. Charles W. Dabney, Sr., chairman of the government board, who spent many years of his life in educational work, holds that this is the greatest educational opportunity of the generation, and the government exhibit alone, when properly studied, will be better than a school term. Principals of academies, seminaries and colleges complain that their schools will be demoralized by the exposition this fall, and to meet the case, an organized effort will be made to get all such institutions to give one week vacation, and bring their schools in a body to the Exposition, so that afterward the pupils can go on with their work without interruption. A number of schools have already decided on their own accord, to do this. If it can be done on a large scale, quarters may be secured at a very moderate cost. This may be done in case of the boys, by providing tents. For the girls better accommodations will be secured, either in boarding houses or hotels specially constructed for the purpose. Through the co-operation of the departments of publicity and promotion, public comfort and education, the matter has been started.

Of the cause of better times the Minneapolis Tribune says: "Our democratic cotempories are now attempting to make out a case in favor of their party by attributing the revival of business, so far as it has been experienced, to the tariff legislation of the late congress. This is something like an attempt to make black appear white. The democratic tariff legislation and the anticipation of further legislation in that direction, was largely responsible for the panic and the business depression. If we have made a recovery since, it is because it is known that the people have placed an obstruction in the way of further mischief. It should be carefully noted that the signs of returning prosperity, the revival of trade, increase of wages, etc., were not noticeable until after last fall's elections. The returns from that election showed that a spoke had been put in the democratic wheel; that the party had lost its control of congress, and that the democratic administration had been rendered harmless, so far as influencing legislation is concerned, by the overwhelming republican majority in the lower house.

The beginning of the return of prosperity was coincident with the indication afforded by the big republican majorities everywhere, that the republicans would return to power in all branches of the government. The people made up their mind that they could endure the democratic tariff so long as they knew that its duration was fixed and determined, and that no further reductions would follow. This knowledge has enabled the country to renew its courage and endeavor to make the best of things until the change for the better, which we know is coming, ensues."

Last Publication Oct. 10, 1895.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed by Henry M. Secord and Mabel A. Secord, his wife, mortgagors, to MINNESOTA SAVING FUND & INVESTMENT COMPANY, mortgagee, dated March first 1890, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Polk, on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1890, at 10:50 o'clock A. M. in Book 52 of Mortgages on Page 110, conveying and mortgaging the following described land and premises, situate in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: Lot Twenty-eight (28) in Block Four (4) Traill's Addition to East Grand Forks according to the plat of said Addition now on file or of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk county.

And whereas, by reason of said default, the power in said mortgage has become operative, and the mortgagee has paid out the sum of Thirty and 32-100 Dollars ($30.32) for taxes past due on said premises, and there is now claimed to be due and is due at the date hereof on said mortgage and the debt secured thereby and for taxes, the sum of Six hundred and twelve & 97-100 Dollars ($612.97) and no action or proceeding at law has been instituted to recover said mortgage indebtedness or any part thereof

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale therein contained and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of said above described premises by the sheriff of said Polk county at public auction, at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston, county of Polk, state of Minnesota, on Saturday the 12th day of October A. D. 1895, at ten o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount which will then be due on said mortgage and the debt secured thereby, together with the amount paid for said taxes and the costs and charges of foreclosure and Fifty Dollars ($50) attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage.

[From The Courier.]

Tomorrow will see about the last of the grain cut. The yield is phenomenal, even for the Red River Valley.

Last week P. A. Byrne bought a four-year-old broncho for $30. The broncho is perfectly sound and docile.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Jarvis rejoice over the arrival of a son, born late last week. The little fellow at birth weighed 13 pounds.

An occasional beggar stands upon the streets, or upon DeMers avenue and solicits a quarter with which to get a meal. Those are the fellows who do not work.

The poor chicken is catching it with a vengeance this week, on the Dakota side of the Ruby. Some men are so anxious to shoot that they will even hunt for feathers.

Owing to the great abundance of everything in the vegetable line truck farmers find it impossible to secure fair rates for their output this year. While potatoes here are a drug in the market, we understand that in the more southern states there is a great scarcity, which later on should have a tendency to raise the price here.

John Sanders reports that his grain is all in the shock, and next week he purposes threshing.

James Ryan claims to have cut 108 acres of heavy wheat in four days with one binder and five horses.

Many farmers have been compelled to replenish their supply of twine owing to the crop being heavier than they expected.

The contract for the new woolen mill, which will be built of brick and located in the Forks, has been awarded to F. J. Brown.

The finest specimen of wheat we have seen this season so far was taken from Miss Mollie Aldrich's farm, near Kempton, on the Dakota side of the river. Many of the heads are nearly, if not quite six inches long, and all are well filled.

A farmer on the point cut and threshed 1,000 bushels of wheat from 20 acres, on Monday. The wheat when cut and threshed was not thoroughly ripe, and the farmer stored it in his granary. Yesterday steam was noticed issuing from the granary, when it was found that the entire crop had become heated and practically was ruined.

W. H. Pringle and the writer rode some forty miles on Wednesday through this part of Polk county on a tour of inspection. At no time during a residence of fourteen years in the valley have we ever seen anything to compare with the present outlook. In all directions farmers are at work levelling the golden grain. In all directions as far as the eye could reach were binders at work. By to-morrow night most of the grain will be in shocks, and on Monday threshing operations will commence. Many farmers have already finished cutting.

Dandruff is an exudation from the pores of the skin that spreads and dries, forming scurf and causing the hair to fall out. Hall's Hair Renewer cures it.

T. B. McManus, of Crookston, was in the city Monday accompanied by L. B. Carson, an inspector of the internal revenue service.

Jos. Lobsinger met with quite a painful accident at Detroit Lake Sunday, by stepping on a spike and running it into his foot to a considerable depth.

Judge and Mrs. T. A. Sullivan accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Sullivan, were one of the many hunting parties who participated in the sport Tuesday.

The congregation of the Memorial Presbyterian church were again favored with two fine sermons by Rev. Z. B. Taylor, of Alleghany, Pa., last Sunday. Mr. Taylor is a fluent speaker and by his engaging manner has already made many friends among the young people of the church.

Mrs. Strong intends visiting Crookston in a day or two, and will make the trip on her bicycle.

Harvesting is pretty well under way and threshing will commence next week.

No appetite? Then do not try to force food down; but use the most scientific means for restoring tone to the stomach. How? Why, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and in a surprisingly short time, your appetite will come again and come to stay.

Mrs. Paesman, Mrs. Peterson, Miss Anderson and Julia Anderson, of Crookston were in the village Sunday the guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Anderson.

Miss Lizzie Zarracher and Misses Minnie and Lizzie Lommen, of Crookston, were in the village Wednesday, the guests of Mrs. M. Sanaker and Mrs. E. D. Kingsland.

W. F. Zutz, a former well known resident of this village returned here last Saturday from Duluth. He is at present "subbing" at Laughlin's store. We understand that he has accepted a position with Gervais the Hustler, Crookston, and will commence his duties about Sept. 1st.

Fisher has purchased a No. 2 Watrous steam fire engine and hose cart with hose and everything complete. Since the Crookston telephone line was extended to this enterprising little town an exchange has been established and Fisher is getting to be quite metropolitan.

Born, Wednesday morning, August 21st, to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bain, Jr., a girl. Robert says he has three of a kind now—all queens.

Henry Reinhardt has resigned his position as miller in the Fisher mill and as soon as it has been accepted he will move with his family to Richwood where he owns a flour mill.

Did You Ever Think

That you cannot be well unless you have pure, rich blood? If you are weak, tired, languid and all run down, it is because your blood is impoverished and lacks vitality. These troubles may be overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla because Hood's Sarsaparilla makes pure, rich blood. It is, in truth the great blood purifier.

HOOD'S PILLS cure liver ills, constipation, biliousness, jaundice, sick headache, indigestion.

Washburn and Addicks.

Duluth Commonwealth.

Senator Washburn has explained what he meant by saying Gas Addicks ought to be killed. It was because he was responsible for the defeat of a Republican senator when one might have been chosen from Delaware, that Washburn was constrained to declare him a pestilent factor in politics.

That explains it. We didn't see what Washburn meant by calling Addicks black. We didn't see what Washburn was doing reproaching another man for having debauched elections and made politics of his neighborhood more sordid and dirty than he found them. We couldn't understand how Washburn should find fault with a man for breaking into politics with no qualifications but an open faced barrel. We understand now. It was to none of those things that he referred. It was for the Republicans to be defrauded of what was theirs when if he had yielded his personal ambitions the state might have been saved.

We don't blame Addicks so much for that. According to his view Delaware belonged not so much to the Republicans as to Addicks. He didn't shed his money in Delaware—of which he is not really a resident, for the sake of the Republican party but with the object of getting into the most exclusive club in the world. The Republican party can be blessed for all him.

Minnesota Tribune:—The only country in the world that has a 'bumper' crop this year is Minnesota and North Dakota. Other states have good crops or fair crops, or in good areas, but to the country of No. 1 Hard, alone will the world look for its surplus."

This was the opinion of C. A. Pillsbury yesterday. "The small surplus whatever it may turn out be, will fix the price of all the wheat in the market, and the price will drop until that is gone," he said.

The great fact in connection with the low price of wheat is the amount of the surplus. Now, it has occurred to me that there should be no surplus; then wheat would go to a fair figure. If, by some great mischance, every bushel of wheat going to England should be lost in the Atlantic until all the nominal surplus had disappeared wheat would be worth a dollar a bushel. Now suppose that every farmer having wheat would agree to use a quantity equal to his proportion of the surplus in raising hogs or beef, or feeding horses, the same result would be accomplished. Why don't the farmers get together?

Minneapolis Times:—Judging from the arguments, language and temper of its organs the sole hope of the Populist party is to bury all the economic and industrial questions of the day beneath a vast waste of verbiage, to mystify them by statements of propositions and by wild assumptions that nobody can verify or understand, and to blind the eyes of the people by chaff, fustian and fiction.

If you are in the city about mealtime, after repairs, don't forget that you can get the best meal in town at McKinnon's restaurant on Second street.

Keep Up the Standard.

St. Paul Pioneer Press.

The addition this year of over eighty creameries to the number that Minnesota already possessed and the erection of large numbers of others in North and South Dakota, Iowa and Wisconsin will present to thoughtful leaders in these enterprises a suggestion for their profitable operation. If properly managed there is no reason to fear overproduction, and proper management will consist in manufacturing a product that will be noted in the highest market quotations. The incentive for the erection of creameries has come from the wonderful success of Freeborn, Steele and other counties in Minnesota, and of Dane county, in Wisconsin. The dairy industry has made the farmers of those counties independent. Their output, however, is quoted at about the same price which Elgin butter brings, and in the estimation of experts is just as excellent a grade, lacking only the sentimental value of the older name. In this high standard lies the secret of permanent success. There is always a demand for the best grade of creamery products and, if the farmers of Minnesota who are wisely diversifying their work will aim to use only the most improved methods, there is no danger that a profitable market will be wanting for anything they wish to sell.

How intimately the quality is connected with the price has been shown in the production of Minnesota cheese. Even after the butter had secured its reputation and was quoted at high figures, the cheese made in this state was of the soft variety, which could obtain only a local market, and the price was consequently at the mercy of the dealers. The farmers have recognized this and have begun to improve their methods. There is no reason why they should not eventually produce cheese that can compete successfully with the best foreign product. Certainly the materials are here and the methods can be secured by continued effort. Canada realized the value of the best methods and the Dominion government some years ago secured the most scientific instructors available at his own expense. The value of their work was seen when the exports of cheese to the states multiplied many times.

The cheese object lesson has been understood by the farmers because their product had no chance in competition. The value of every improvement is less likely to be appreciated in butter making because there is a less striking margin between the best and a fair price, but the time for every creamery to establish a reputation is at the beginning of the enterprise. Their joint reputation will be in the possession of the state, but will redound to their individual profit.

There is very little American butter exported, but there is no reason why it should not compete successfully in foreign markets, if its quality will meet the test. Denmark twenty-five years ago shipped 9,000,000 pounds of butter to England; last year it sold in English markets 110,249,300 pounds at the highest price. Its principal foreign competitor was Australia, which had to send its consignments beneath the blazing sun of the tropics to reach the customer. Should the growing American market ever fail to profitably absorb the output of the northwestern creameries, of which there is no present indication, there is no reason why it should not be sent across the water to compete in English markets. It certainly ought to be able to displace the butter from the antipodes, and will do so if its quality is such as to command a higher reputation.

If the farmers of Minnesota will see that, in their wise and vigorous efforts to diversify their products by increasing the number of creameries and the amount of their output, the high standard already established by the southeastern counties is attained, or even surpassed if possible, there is no ground at present to believe that the supply will ever equal the demand.

"Early in the Winter, I took a severe cold which developed into an obstinate, hacking cough, very painful to endure and troubling me day and night, for nine weeks, in spite of numerous remedies. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral being recommended me, I began to take it, and inside of 24 hours, I was relieved of the tickling in my throat. Before I finished the bottle, my cough was nearly gone. I cannot speak too highly of its excellence."—MRS. E. BOSCH, Eaton, Ohio.

Have you sent in samples of produce for the State fair exhibit? If not, you should attend to it at once, as the time is now limited. Polk county can make one of the finest displays in the state if she will make the effort to do so.

Comrade John Ristow was in from the farm in Fanny, on Tuesday. Says he has his grain all cut and much of it in the stack. The comrade left an arm on southern battle fields in the time that tried men's souls, but for all that there are few farmers in the county who can beat John raising grain and cattle and sich like.

Speaking of the manager of the new experimental farm at Crookston O. C. Gregg says: "He is the best man for the place I know of. He is a great student, a man of good, practical common-sense and if he can't make a grand success of your experimental farm I will lose my guess. He is a man who will make and keep lots of friends, too."

Judge Grindeland was in the city last week on his way to St. Paul to attend a meeting of the board of regents of the state normal schools, of which he is a member.

J. W. Peterson has resigned his position at Thompson's and will go on the road for Ericsson & Brady, of St. Paul. Albert Hofer takes Will's place at the California Wine house.

Fisher has had a genuine burglary sensation. One night this week burglars entered the hardware store of Hamilton Bros. and got away with about $200 worth of goods as near as can be determined.

John B. Dufault, one of the old settiers of Polk county, died at his residence at Gentilly on Sunday, after a brief illness, of pleurisy. Mr. Dufault was about 60 years old and a man highly respected by all who knew him.

When the genial face of W. S. Hawes is not seen on the milk route, everybody at once exclaims: "Hawes must be sick," and generally everybody is right, for nothing less ever stops him, and this is the reason he was missed for several days last week.

Col. Gorgas has been suffering severely for about ten days with a severe abscess on the back of his neck. For several nights he has been unable to get any sleep and requires constant care and attention. The abscess is healing and the Col. will be all right if he has vitality enough to rally.

The meetings of the Foote Brothers, the singing evangelists, held at the Presbyterian church so far this week have been very interesting and reasonably well attended. They hold one service at 10 o'clock each day especially for children, one at 3 o'clock for everybody, and one at 8 in the evening. To-night, and for the balance of the week, the meetings will be held in the Baptist house, closing on Sunday evening. The brothers leave on Monday evening.

During the storm of Monday, Mrs. A. J. Streeter, matron at the county hospital, was standing at a window gazing at the storm and wondering what would happen if the lightning should happen to strike a church building at which she was looking—and the next thing she remembers a crowd of anxious friends were gathering about her couch making frantic efforts to call her back to earthly scenes. Soon after the hospital was struck she was found lying on the floor near the window at which she was standing, while the room was filled with a dense smoke. She was taken up and laid upon a couch and soon revived. She has decided that she will let the next storm take care of itself and not stand at open windows and try to figure out results. It was a close call.

Work on the buildings on the new experimental farm will be commenced the latter part of September or 1st of October.

Maj. C. H. Mix goes to Tacoma this week for a visit to his daughter.

Supt. Jenks reports one crop of wheat that panned out 47 bushels per acre.

Miss Anna Gembe, of St. Paul, is visiting in the city, the guest of Miss Ella Walsh.

Wheat took another drop of one cent on Wednesday morning—reaching 47 cents.

M. P. Losey, Sr., was in from Euclid on Wednesday on business connected with the laundry.

Appearances all indicate old-time prices for land in the near future, as soon as next spring at the latest.

Ed. Ross has accepted the position of foreman on Thompson & Stephens' farm, in the town of Hammond.

John Hochelsmiller arrived from Bellvue, Iowa, on Wednesday morning to take a hand in the harvesting.

W. A. Wilkins has been up 'round St. Hilaire way looking up the hay business. He will make headquarters here and have a carload of presses on hand in a few days.

Jake Thill, the genial wheat buyer at Wylie, went south on Monday evening on his way to St. Cloud. Judging by his coach-and-four necktie, and his stand-up choler-a expression and other, infallible signs we should say—well we wouldn't be surprised if he brought back another trunk—a regular three-decker, such as brides usually wear, and hereafter there will be a pair of Thills, as it were.

Anent the published report that the JOURNAL farm was badly hailed out on Monday, we are very happy to be able to say that "it never touched us." We only had between ten and fifteen acres of oats to finish our cutting and seemed to be just on the outskirts of the storm, as not over three or four bushels in the entire piece were shelled. However, we are not complaining—the dose we got in '91 suffices us in that line.

Dr. M. Leguee went north as far as Euclid for the relief of suffering equines on Monday. Says farmers were cutting or stacking all day from a point about seven miles north of the city which was as far as the rain extended. Says the Keystone farm was running 8 binders and would be through cutting by Saturday night of this week with no bad luck. Thinks the Darling farm is somewhat behind owing to slow ripening grain from late sowing probably. Most of the farmers seem to be stacking but the big farms may thresh from the stack.

D. S. Horwitz, the genial "piano tuner" from Grand Forks, was in the city this week on his way to St. Paul looking as happy and contented as though he was already raking in the big orders that he anticipates this fall. Horwitz says since he quit making rash bets on war generals he is enabled to save up a good deal of ice-cream money —which makes a big difference in the total round-up of the year's business. The story goes on Horwitz that once upon a time he was in a certain store in this city trying to sell a piano to the proprietress, when one of the ladies present remarked "what a wonderful likeness of the general was the picture of Garfield hanging in a store window opposite." "That," said Horwitz, (who knows Gen. Grant's picture when he sees it, or thinks he does), "that's not Garfield, that is Gen. Grant's picture." "What will you bet?" said the lady. "The ice cream all 'round," replied Horwitz. "How will we decide it?" said she. "We will leave it to the first person who passes the store," he replied, supposing that would settle it, as he knew she would not have the cheek to go out and tackle the first passer by, if a stranger. But right here is where he had miscalculated upon a lady's ice-cream propensities, as he soon found, for very soon the victim (or the judge) appeared in the person of a long, lank specimen of humanity who was sidling awkardly past. Quick as a flash the little lady was out and accosting the passer by: "We ladies have a bet with this gentleman that yonder picture is a good one of Gen. Garfield and we are to leave the decision to you; don't you really think it is a good likeness of Gen. Garfield?" she said with a bright, glad ice-cream smile on her pleasant countenance. Without looking at the picture at all, and only gazing in the lady's eyes, the chap exclaimed: "In course it is Garfield's picter, any one could see that with half an eye!" Horwitz wanted to crawfish, claiming it was a leading question and unfair, but that would not work, so he manfully began to carry ice-cream from the nearest restaurant and by the time he finished his job he thought that every lady in the city had mysteriously appeared upon the scene. Says he never bets with a lady now, especially if ice-cream is the stakes.

Dr. Chapin and wife drove from Euclid on Wednesday.

J. B. Hoffer, who succeeds Will Peterson at Thompson's, is a prominent young business man of Cochrane, Wisconsin He has been in the city for several weeks and decides to remain.

The Hotel Crookston boasts of a new bus—a regular city business in which a man feels like he is in New York, Chicago, Duluth or some other hightoned city. Gee whiz, but it is a daisy!

J. H. Warnecke was up from Marin on Wednesday and says quite a little damage was done to crops in that vicinity.

The council held an interesting session on Tuesday evening devoted to the financial condition of the city, and spent some time considering ways and means.

The residence of John Chilbuck. about six miles southeast of this city, was destroyed by fire one day last week. The fire was discovered about five o'clock in the afternoon and so rapid was its progress that before the men could be summoned from the field the house and its contents were almost entirely destroyed. It was with the greatest difficulty that the other farm buildings were saved.

As we sat in our den on Wednesday afternoon, pondering upon the mutability of human affairs, who should dawn upon our comprehension but J. H. Sutherland, one of Becker county's old, original settlers. He is up in this country in the interests of a grain commission company, looking after shipments. Says this is his first visit in 15 years and he thinks Crookston is one of the nicest cities on his route, and the Hotel Crookston is just clean out of sight.

Dr. M. Leguee and wife went out to Maple Lake for a bit of an outing Friday returning on Sunday evening. The doctor does most solemnly aver that they actually caught 160 perch with hook and line—a good many of which would weigh a pound—i. e. a good many fish.

Those black-board illustrations of Chas. Misner's, calling attention to the fact that Charlie is agent for Word and Works, are expressive to say the least and beat Con's attempt at black-board exercises all hollow. The genial deputy judge of probate is the author and originator of the ideas and he proves a dandy with a piece of chalk.

C. McHale and wife, of Alma, Wis., visited his father, F. McHale, at the paternal farm house north of the city, last week. Mr. McHale says he never saw finer crops than he saw in Polk county during his stay here and he says he thinks our farmers are right in it this year sure enough. He is seriously considering the question of coming to Polk county to live.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE AT THE STATE FAIR.

The Farmers' Institute at the State Fair promises to be a drawing card this year. The fact of having the product of every department on the grounds to illustrate the work makes a feature in farmers' institutes that every progressive farmer takes an interest in seeing.

Dr. Curryer, Asst. Supt., Mankato, says the tented city is rapidly filling up, and this fact alone shows that our state fair is on the eve of becoming what it should be, viz: the annual gathering of the best of our products as an exhibition of what we can do and learn from such exhibition and the method of its production. Every locality in the state should send a few of its most progressive farmers to the state fair this year for what can be seen and learned through this institute, besides it will be an encouragement for all our future state fairs in this work. As long as there is tent room it should be taken advantage of for best results.

Every farmer attending the state fair should call at Farmers' Institute "headquarters" and leave his name and address to aid farmers' institute work in his locality hereafter.

FALL EXAMINATIONS.

Teachers' examinations will be held on the following dates:

Aug. 23 and 24 at Fosston and Thief River Falls;

Aug. 30 and 31 at Crookston and East Grand Forks;

Oct. 25 and 26 at Crookston and Red Lake Falls.

An average standing of 70 per cent will be required for 3d grade certificates and 80 per cent for second grade certificates.

Private examinations will not be granted under any circumstances. School officers should know before bringing a teacher that she holds a valid certificate in this county.

Could Not Eat or Sleep

Hood's Gave Perfect Relief—Cannot Praise It too Much.

"I cannot speak too highly of Hood's Sarsaparilla and what it has done for me. Vacation Time

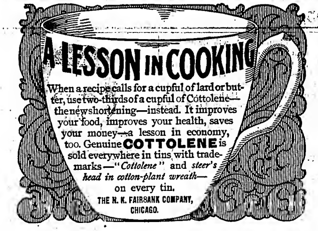
Is at hand and is gladly welcomed by all, especially those whose duties in life have caused them to greatly run down their system to meet the requirements, physical and mental, forced upon them. With these and others, it is important, whether at home, at the sea-shore or in the country, that some thought be given to diet, and as further assistance to nature, a good building-up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla had best be resorted to. If the digestion is poor liver deranged and frequent headaches seems to be the rule, Hood's will change all this and enable everyone to return to their home and business in a refreshed state of mind and bodily health.

Go to the California wine house for choice wines and liquors for medicinal purposes.



A LESSON IN COOKING

When a recipe calls for a cupful of lard or butter, use two-thirds of a cupful of Cottolene—the new shortening—instead. It improves your food, improves your health, saves your money—a lesson in economy, too. Genuine COTTOLENE is sold everywhere in tins with trade-marks—"Cottolene" and steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every tin.

MORTGAGE SALE.

(First pub. July 18, '95.)
(Last pub. Aug. 29, '95.)

DEFAULT has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Ezra L. Smith and Lucy A. Smith, his wife, mortgagors, to James H. Barnum, mortgagee, dated the sixth day of February, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-eight and recorded as a mortgage in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Polk, in the state of Minnesota, on the 23d day of April, A. D. 1888, at 8 o'clock A. M., in book 22 of mortgages, on page 237, on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the sum of six thousand, six hundred twenty-four and 90-100 dollars, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. That the default above described consists in the non payment when due, of ten promissory notes, each for the sum of $500.00, and interest at eight per cent. per annum, payable annually, all being dated Feb. 6, 1888, and all executed and delivered by said Ezra L. Smith to said Jas. H. Barnum and all being secured by said mortgage. Said amount above described as being due contains also the sum of $125.87 taxes for the years 1892, 1893 and 1894, which said mortgagee on the 12th day of July, A. D. 1895, paid on the Southwest quarter of the land below described.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the city of Crookston in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, at public auction, by the sheriff of said county or by his deputy, duly appointed as agent in said instrument for that purpose, on Friday, the 30th day of August, A. D. eighteen hundred and ninety-five, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and one hundred dollars attorney's fees, provided by statute and stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold are the lot, piece or parcel of land situated in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: All of Section twenty-nine (29), in Township one hundred and fifty-two (152) north, of Range forty-seven (47), west of the fifth principal meridian, containing six hundred and forty (640) acres of land, more or less, according to the government survey.

Dated at Moorhead, State of Minnesota, this 16th day of July, 1895.

LA BELLE DAME SANS MERCI.

My love is young, my love is fair,
  Sweet, true and amiable is she,
With turkis eyes and topaz hair—
  Alas, my love is lost to me!

Her no crusades nor cranks confound,
  Nor Ibsenitish problems vex;
She has no theories to propound—
  I've never heard her mention sex.

She doesn't smile on risque mots;
  Her taste in dress is quite divine;
She's half an angel, goodness knows,
  But, ah, she never can be mine.

I knew she painted tambourines
  And pickle jars and copper bells,
With flowers and storks and river scenes
  And moonlight views on scallop shells.

She's painted photo frames galore—
  Wood, velvet, ivorine and brass;
She paints the panels of the door;
  She has not spared the looking glass.

The plush framed plaques upon her wall,
  Her limp art muslins everywhere,
The floral drain pipe in her hall—
  They know the pangs I've had to bear.

And now the Rubicon is passed,
  The great abyss between us set,
The final blow has fall'n at last—
  I've said goodby to Amoret.

Goodby to bliss that might have been,
  Goodby to happy hopes that were—

HER WEDDING PRESENT.

Marie Was No Doubt as Much Surprised as Freddie Was.

Young Mr. Smithers, having eaten an excellent dinner, sat down to smoke a good cigar while his wife ran up stairs to make her toilet for the theater.

So peaceful was his state of mind that he did not even look accusingly at his watch when, after the promised "minute" had developed into 60, she entered the room.

"Seems to me that you are looking very nice tonight, my dear," he remarked.

"I am so glad you think so, darling. Of course I care more for your admiration than that of any one else. Besides the Skinners sit right behind us this evening, and this dress will give her a bad headache before the second act is over."

Mr. Smithers looked anxious. "So that is new, is it? Wasn't the old one good enough?"

"N-not quite, dear. Besides I earned the money for this one myself."

"But how did you earn"—

"Oh, after you left I fell to thinking what a lot of money $25 was to spend on a wedding present for Marie when I really needed so many things. Then an idea struck me. I remembered all those pretty things I found in your big trunk after we were married—the ones that horrid girl, whoever she was, sent back when the engagement was broken. I wouldn't have one of them myself, but it seemed a pity for them to lie there, so I went up stairs and looked them all over. I selected that lovely silver backed mirror and cleaned it up until it looked just like new, and then I"—

"Sold it to buy the dress? I see!"

"Nothing of the kind. I bought the dress with the money you gave me. The mirror I sent to Marie with our best wishes. Won't she be surprised, and—why, Freddie, are you ill?"

"Not at all, my dear! You are quite right. Marie will no doubt be much surprised, for, you see, she herself was the girl who returned those presents; that is all!"—Baltimore Herald.

A Polar City.

Numbers of explorers who have sought the arctic regions in quest of the pole have told of a mysterious city mirrored against the northern sky—stately buildings in choice architecture, tall and imposing spires, but such as differ from anything we know about. Whether the foundation of this mirage is a reality and only unrecognizable because of transposition as to directions, whether it is a work of some mysterious remnant of our race that once occupied the pole, or whether this is some fanciful feature of the frost, as the peculiar shrubbery we see on the window pane—whatever this is, it must be consigned to the perplexing enigmas of the unknown region. Who knows but some spot, once the theater of busy and advanced human life, may have escaped the general cataclysmal wreck, and this city may be the silent and as yet undiscovered witness of prepolar times, standing alone in the dead desolation, in the rigid shroud of now polar death. If we must be barred from entering this undiscovered country, we may add to our equipment by a careful noting of its mixture, and then give to the base of these phenomena a most thorough study.—Philadelphia Press.

Time and Step.

"Sometimes," said an old soldier, "one sees the captain of a company marching proudly along, in time with the music, but out of step, the company right, the captain wrong. Distressing. But then I have seen a musician marching out of step to the music of his own band, and there is now and then a soldier who never really learns to keep step. The familiar order is, 'Left, left, left, left, the left foot down at the heavy tap of the drum.' "—New York Sun.

The words "Emerald Isle," as applied to Ireland, were first used by Dr. Drennan in a poem entitled "Erin."

He Could.

A well known and busy actress has a little daughter who is a precocious young pagan, and the other night, as the nurse was away, she was put to bed by a friend of her mother's.

"Do you not say your prayers, dear?"

"Nop!" responded the infantile heathen. "I don't know any, and mamma is always away when I go to bed."

"Perhaps you would like to learn a prayer," suggested she of the missionary tendencies. "Do you think you could?"

"Could I learn a prayer?" repeated the younger in derisive tones. "I should say I could. I'm very quick study."—New York Mercury.

THE HEART IN OLD AGE.

A Misconception That Causes Humanity Needless Anxiety.

A story told by Dr. G. W. Balfour in his book on "The Senile Heart" well deserves the double purpose of marking the practical process which scientific medicine has achieved within the past 50 years and of administering a much needed word of comfort and encouragement to those numerous workers who, as age approaches, begin to feel uncomfortable about the regions of the heart.

"Many years ago," said Dr. Balfour, "a gentleman of 77 consulted me as to severe fainting fits to which he was liable. A distinguished consultant, since dead, had told him that these attacks were due to fatty degeneration of the heart and that treatment would be of no avail. The heart's impulse was imperceptible, the sounds faint, but pure, the arteries firm, but neither hard nor tortuous. I told the patient that experience had taught me that hearts supposed to be fatty were often weak. * * * The result of treatment was a steady improvement in health and in force of heart beat, and the patient lived to be 90 and did not die of heart failure in the end, but from senile asthenia." To many people "fatty heart" is a perfect bugbear. But this is what Dr. Balfour has to say about the diagnosis of the disease: "It is absolutely impossible to diagnosticate fatty degeneration of the heart.

"We may surmise its existence, but we can only be certain of its presence when we see it post mortem." If many middle aged and old men could but have this written deep upon the tablets of their consciousness, what loads would be lifted from their minds. Yet doctors of small experience roll out a diagnosis of fatty heart with sonorous satisfaction, unheeding that to many a trembling father of a family it is like the sound of a deathknell. On the question of treatment Dr. Balfour is equally decided. "We are often told," he says, "that there is danger in treating a fatty heart. * * * Yet the result of treatment in the case recorded was a cure, proving that a heart supposed to be fatty was only weak and that a life supposed to be over only wanted the fillip of a few minims of digitalis to carry it on to almost the extreme of human longevity." So, true is it, even in scientific medicine, that a little experience and common sense outweigh many shiploads of mere abstract theorizing.—London Hospital.

DIAMOND THIEVES.

The Trick They Use to Circumvent the Ever Watchful Dealers.

A diamond dealer recently interviewed gave some of his experiences as follows: "A few weeks ago a foreigner came into my store and desired to see rings. After choosing for a long time he picked out one valued at $18. He made me a ridiculously low offer, which I naturally refused. He then desired to see two other rings—one a sapphire and the other a diamond ring—exhibited in the show window. While I reached into the window for them I observed in the mirror on one side of the window how the stranger slipped away two rings, each worth $150. I did not turn around, but went to the door, opened and then locked it. If I had turned around, the thief would have thrown pepper and sand in my eyes and ran away with his booty. A policeman was soon in the place. The thief had the pepper and sand ready for use in his hand.

"Another time a thief dropped two rings into his umbrella, and at another time another slipped one into a hole in his glove. A very common trick of diamond thieves is to ask to be shown loose stones, which are thereupon handed to him lying upon a waiter. He breathes upon them, and thereby seeks to get one or more into his mouth. Others study the rings lying in the show window and have one made exactly to pattern described. The gold is good, but the jewel is paste. They then come in twilight into the store and seek to exchange their imitation for the genuine."—Jewelers' Circular.

Light Persons Poisoned by Ivy.

Mr. I. Ten Bosch writes from Rochelle Park, N. J., to Garden and Forest, saying:

"Whenever I see a tree in the embrace of a poison ivy, I take my knife and cut the vine. On the grounds of a few friends and on my own I have cut vines from 1½ to 2½ inches thick, sometimes at the root and sometimes as far up as I could reach, and then tearing down the stems have uprooted them with my hands. I have done this at all seasons, and when my hands were torn by blackberry thorns, but I never had a trace of poisoning. A friend to whom I mentioned my immunity said, 'Of course you are not poisoned, because you are dark.' Since then I have been thinking that in the cases of poisoning which had come to my knowledge the victims had been light haired. A younger brother of mine, who is very fair, has been severely poisoned."

Population of the World.

German geographers have made a careful estimate of the population of Africa, and place the total at 163,953,000, which is 42,240,000 more than the aggregated population of North and South America. Europe and Africa combined have a population of 521,332,000, though their area is not greater than that of all America. The new world has plenty of room for many times its present population of 121,718,000. The German estimate of the population of the world now is 1,480,000,000, and one of the best authorities of the Royal Statistical society says it will be increased by the year 2517 to 83,580,000,000.

Lucky.

A reporter, in describing the murder of a man named Jorkins, said, "The murderer was evidently in quest of money, but luckily Mr. Jorkins had deposited all his funds in the bank the day before, so that he lost nothing but his life."—London Tit-Bits.

SOME RUSKIN DICTA.

Extracts From Some Letters of the Subtle and Charming Old Critic.

"Talk is impossible to me," Ruskin writes in 1864, "owing to the state of quiet rage and wonder at everything people say and do, in which I habitually live." "I don't get mellow tempered as I get old," he writes some years later, which is true, for to another correspondent he says: "Nothing can advance art in any district of this accursed machine and devil driven England. I lecture here (at Oxford), but only on the art of the past."

"How inexpressibly subtle and penetrating," he writes to a young man, "is the principle of pride! How it mingles itself with, and even pretends itself to be, and takes the likeness of, the noblest feelings in the world—and what a constant struggle it needs even to detect, much more to expel it! It is like oxygen in iron—the hottest fire will not expel it altogether—and it steals in with the very air we breathe, turning all our steel into rust."

"Things that require steady labor," he writes to the same correspondent, "there are indeed for all of us to do, but they are the coal heaving part of our life and to be done with a slow step and bent back, patiently, not in a passion, not trying to beat our brother coal heavers, but only to carrying as many coals as we can comfortably. But the great things which require genius to do are done easily if you have the genius. If you are to do anything that is really glorious, and for which men will forever wonder at you, you will do it as a duck quacks—because it is your nature to quack—when it rains."

"Do you know, Watts," he asked a friend in 1849, "to my mind the only real painter of history or thought we have in England?" "There's nothing here like Carpaccio," he writes from Venice to Sir Edward Burne-Jones. "There's a bit of humble pie for you. I don't give up my Tintoret, but his dissolution of expression into drapery and shadow is too licentious for me now." "I've been going to the old masters," he writes to Mr. Murray, "and staring at the Sir Joshua's. My stars, what that fellow could do!" And here finally are some flying shafts at certain modern imitators of Turner: "I have been now for 40 years vainly and always louder and louder growling and thundering into the deaf ears of the artists who fancied they admired Turner: 'Lead pencil point—pencil, sir! Pencil—pencil—till you can manage your blacklead—then color if you will.' They never attend to one word that I say, but go on daub, daub, daub to their deaths, and do nothing or worse."—Atlanta Constitution.

The Circus Kitchen.

At five minutes past 4 a shout from the crowd indicates the approach of the three huge cook wagons, each weighing 20 tons and drawn by six horses. From the first of them rise three chimneys, out of which black smoke is pouring. This wagon carries the 16 foot cooking range, where fires were started the moment the wagon was unloaded from the train. Already, while rolling toward the circus grounds, the ten cooks have been making active preparations for the breakfast which must be served within two hours to 700 hungry people.

When the three wagons have drawn up on the site of the still unraised cook tent, three butchers with heavy cleavers at once begin work upon the sides of beef, legs of mutton and loins of pork (500 pounds in all) that must forthwith be changed into steaming steaks, chops and cutlets. A boiler is set up and steam pipes are connected from it with the big urn which must furnish 2,000 cups of coffee shortly, and with the warming pans on the tables where the meats are served. While this is doing by one set of men, others are raising the tent, building 12 long tables and unpacking 20 large green boxes that contain 6,000 dishes and countless kitchen utensils.—McClure's Magazine.

Robert Collyer's Father.

And now about my father, writes the Rev. Robert Collyer, D. D., in The Ladies' Home Journal. I think still he was as good a smith as I have ever known, a man who would forge no lie in iron or steel, with soft, steadfast brown eyes, strong and sinewy arms to labor and never sick a day I can remember, always at his work until he fell dead that day with the hammer in his hand. Blacksmiths, I think, are usually silent men. The old Beechers were, as I have heard, who were of this craft, silent men who left the pent up speech to their sons and grandsons. This was my father also. He was a silent man, while both father and mother were as free from contagions and infections as the sound oaks are and the stars, so that the microbes, when they came in the dreadful form of fevers, found nothing in them for prey.

Not Quite Right.

No man is a hero to his valet, and perhaps no poet to his baker. He lives in Putney, and almost every day he walks a few miles to Wimbledon and goes to a cakeshop there, where he buys cakes to give to a little group of poor children, who have learned to look forward to this frequent treat. Some one who knew the poet by sight said to the shopkeeper, "Do you know who this gentleman who buys so many cakes of you is?"

"Oh, he's a poor gentleman who isn't quite right in his head. He's always buying cakes for the children."—Chap Book.

SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia, wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system, as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.

Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject, long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as the thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. Restorative Nervine positively contains no opiates or dangerous drugs.

CONQUEST OF THE NORTHWEST.

It Was Acquired From the British by Force of Arms.

In 1776, when independence was declared, the United States included only the 13 original states on the seaboard. With the exception of a few hunters, there were no white men west of the Alleghany mountains, and there was not even an American hunter in the great country out of which we have since made the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin. All this region north of the Ohio river then formed a part of the province of Quebec. It was a wilderness of forests and prairies, teeming with game and inhabited by many warlike tribes of Indians.

Here and there through it were dotted quaint little towns of French creoles, the most important being Detroit, Vincennes, on the Wabash, and Kaskaskie and Kahokia, on the Illinois. These French villages were ruled by British officers commanding small bodies of regular soldiers or Tory rangers and creole partisans. The towns were completely in the power of the British government. None of the American states had actual possession of a foot of property in the Northwestern territory.

The northwest was acquired at the time of the Revolution only by armed conquest, and if it had not been so acquired it would have remained a part of the British Dominion of Canada.

The man to whom this conquest was due was a famous backwoods leader, a mighty hunter, a noted Indian fighter—George Rogers Clark. He was a very strong man, with light hair and blue eyes, of a good Virginian family, who, early in his youth, embarked on the adventurous career of a backwoods surveyor, exactly as Washington and so many other young Virginians of spirit did at that period. He traveled out to Kentucky soon after it was opened up by Boone and lived there for a year, either at the stations or camping by himself in the woods, surveying, hunting and making war against the Indians like any other settler. But all the time his mind was bent on vaster schemes than were dreamed of by the men around him. He had his spies out in the Northwestern territory and became convinced that with a small force of resolute backwoodsmen he could conquer it for the United States. When he went back to Virginia, Governor Patrick Henry entered heartily into Clark's schemes and gave him authority to fit out a force for his purpose.—Theodore Roosevelt in St. Nicholas.

WOMEN IN FRANCE.

They Are Not Only the Stronger but the Better Half In That Country.

Women are the stronger as well as the better half of France. They do everything but build houses. The best inspector in the French custom house is a woman. She is in the Havre office, and she has a nose that can detect dutiable goods without opening a lock. She is naturally amiable and slow to anger, but woe to the foreigner or countryman who provokes her ire.

There is no sadder spectacle in the republic of France than the women shoe polishers, who doze under the sheds of the markets and quay, one eye shut and t'other fixed on the bootbox over the way, patiently waiting for trade. They ask 5 cents and accept 2 cents for their unwomanly work.

At Thiers, the blackest town in France, the women sit outside of the grimy little machine shops mating scissor blades and polishing knife and scissor handles. The stream that turns the 10,000 little mill wheels is blacker than the Chicago river, and as the furnaces never burn without belching the toilers and their devoted lifelong apprentices are sometimes Malay and sometimes Mongolian, but seldom Caucasian in color.

Not long ago a college woman went down to Thiers to teach school for the winter. The promise of 80 pupils was a temptation, but on reaching the colony of soot begrimed and smoke stained smithies she found that the position paid $5 a month, and the teacher was expected to furnish the fuel for the winter.—Philadelphia Times.

Sweet Peas.

Whether sweet peas can be successfully planted in autumn depends largely on the latitude, says Garden and Forest. In the southern states fall planting is a necessity, for this is the only way to give the plants a cool soil in which to make a strong, early root growth. Coming farther north, fall planting is safe up to perhaps the latitude of Washington, where the chances are about equal between planting in late autumn and in February. In southern California peas must be brought into bloom as early as February, although the nights are so cool there that they may be planted during any month in the year. The rule observed by the large seed growers is to plant just ahead of the rainy season. Indeed they have acres of volunteer sweet peas—that is, from seed which were scattered on the ground during the harvest—and 45 miles south of San Francisco these volunteer plants are in bloom by the 1st of May and often early in April.

Dr. Wilde's Queer Will.

By the terms of the will of one Dr. Wilde of St. Ives parish, Huntingdonshire, England, his trustees were directed to expend £50 in the purchase of a piece of land in St. Ives, the annual rent of which was to be set aside for the purchase of six Bibles at a cost of 7 shillings each. To decide who shall have them he requested his trustees to "prepare a saucer with three dice upon the altar table of the parish church and let the Bibles be raffled for."

THE RETIRED BURGLAR.

One of the Most Remarkable Incidents In His Variegated Career.

"After I had gathered in what I could find in the dining room," said the retired burglar, telling of his experience in a house in western Massachusetts, "I started for the parlor. This parlor was just in front of the dining room, and there were heavy curtains between. I pushed these curtains one side and went in carefully, so as not to mar the furniture by kicking it, feeling along for the table which I knew must be in the center. I came to it presently and found it very solid feeling, with a sort of molding or carving along the edge. I had struck it on a side apparently, and so I felt toward the dining room until I came to a corner of the table, and then I felt along the end for the next corner to get the dimensions of it. I struck the other corner so quick that it made my hair raise right up. I knew there was only one thing they build of such shape, and that's a coffin.

"I turned my light on it, and it was a big oak casket, one of the kind they make now'days, square and solid, and it had three silver handles on each side. I didn't dare look in, but I felt as though I ought to have them handles. The head was toward the front of the house and the foot toward the dining room. I set my lamp down and got my screwdriver out of my bag and began on one of the handles nearest the foot. I suppose I must have felt a little easier after I'd got that one off and into the bag. I know I went around the end and then up the other side pretty prompt, getting 'em off smooth as could be, and around the head and started down the other side where I'd begun. I got the handle off by the head on that side, and then I went at the last handle, the one in the middle. In turning the last screw out of the handle I dropped my screwdriver.

"It seemed to me as though it made more noise than an iron telegraph pole dropping inside of an empty iron oil tank. I just lay down and waited. I didn't dare run. I expected a million people would come pouring down the stairs and from all around, and I just waited, lying on the floor, but there didn't anybody come. You know, the fact was that dropping that screwdriver hadn't made noise enough to wake up a mouse, but it seemed to me like the greatest racket you ever heard, and it scared me most to death. But when nobody came I picked up the screwdriver and set it in the notch of the screw again, and I'd just got that handle off when I heard somebody say:

"'Don't you think you're crowdin us here a little, my friend, carrying away them handles?' It was the dead man sitting up and looking down at me. I suppose he'd been in an epileptic trance or something of that sort, and dropping that screwdriver had made just shock enough to start him into life again.

"I was so scared I dropped the handle, but I grabbed my bag—I suppose instinct made me do that—and started out through the dining room again and down cellar and out by the window I came in by. I didn't wait to see if anybody was coming this time.

"I got $117 for those five handles. It seemed a pity to lose the other one, but it was always a great satisfaction to me to think that I'd woke the man up."—New York Sun.

She Wilted Him.

There is one patron of the North Pennsylvania street line who has the reputation of being most dreadfully disagreeable. The conductors say he is a kicker, and the neighbors say he has the dyspepsia. Anyway he generally creates a scene wherever he goes, but since a recent experience he is a little particular about his conduct on a street car. He boarded a crowded car at—well, some street between Ohio and Seventh. The aisle was filled with persons holding on to the straps. He stood for a second in the doorway and glowered at those within. The conductor placed his hand on the shoulder of the bad tempered man and said:

"Pass on, please, and don't stand in the doorway!"

The disagreeable man turned his head a bit and snapped in return:

"Don't get gay. Stop your pushing, or I'll report"—

The unfortunate man, while making this speech to the conductor, did not observe that a woman was attempting to pass out. Like many others, he thought the car had stopped for him alone. But his crabbed remarks were cut short by an energetic shove from the lady passenger. She thought his cutting remarks were aimed at her, and in a high pitched voice she replied:

"You are insulting, sir, and very ungentlemanly. I must get out, and if you are not enough of a gentleman to allow me to pass I shall do some reporting."

The bad tempered man tried to explain and apologize, but the woman brushed past him. All the passengers heard the remarks and witnessed the incident, and the disagreeable man looked truly ashamed.—Indianapolis Journal.

WAYS OF BUSINESS.

THE MERCHANT WHO CORRECTS ONLY ONE KIND OF MISTAKE.

A Severe Criticism of the Ways of Shopkeepers and Cashiers—The Steamboat Clerk Who Said, "We Never Rectify Mistakes Here."

No one perceives the wisdom, and indeed the necessity, of accurate bookkeeping more fully than your humble servant, who can't keep books to save her life and who finds herself approaching dementia every time she endeavors to balance a cash account. But why in all bookkeeping systems, from banks to the smallest retail shop, is it invariably the customer who gets cheated if anybody? Tell me, ye winged winds, which o'er my pathway roll! It is useless to contradict and say that it isn't. The one exception in a thousand years does not count against the millions of opposing instances. I have lately read the pathetic account by some recluse, who never goes shopping, of the bloodthirsty monsters who take more change than is due them and stalk out, leaving no address behind them, little recking the sufferings of the poorly paid employee who has to make good the deficit out of his or her own pocket. Fudge! No such mistakes occur, or, if they do, they are rarer than fresh vegetables on a country table. In all large establishments there is a hawk headed Horus at the "desk" waiting to pounce on a mistake in the customer's favor of 1 cent, and many's the time every one of us can testify the little slips have been returned to be corrected of mistakes to our credit, while we fumed.

Thank goodness, there are instances in which the sharpshooters have wounded themselves. Once I was on a "sound" boat going from New York to Fall River, and the man at the desk gave me a $5 bill too much in change when paying after supper. There was something of a crowd, but that mistake would have made itself evident to me in a mob. I dashed back and said, "You've made a mistake in my change."

"Can't help that," said the lordly clerk. "We never rectify mistakes here."

"Oh, you don't?" retorted the head of the party. "Well, it will cost you something this time, for you have given us $5 too much. But if you never rectify mistakes you are the loser for once."

It is foolish to dwell on the sequel, and I have forgotten it. I only remember that the young man, pale and agitated, danced in supplication around the unmoved figure of the stern admonisher for some minutes. I suppose he got his money, and I dare say there was no law upholding one in keeping it, but I hope, at this distance of time, he didn't. One day, not long ago, I was at a furnishing shop in State street, Chicago, buying a tie. The price was $1.50, and I presented the man with a $2 bill. He swung over the little birdcage on a telegraph line and it came swiftly back with a 50 cent piece. Seeing another tie for that price, I handed back the change and was about to leave, when a voice came from the elevated desk at the other end: "Hi! This half dollar is counterfeit!" Although it was a public place and I am a retiring lady, I burst wildly forth into a clarion shout of joy. It is so seldom a modest customer has the chance of beholding a natural enemy caught with his own quicklime. The mortification of the salesman serving me was something to see. It did me good for a whole day. Sending a counterfeit half dollar cheerfully and with promptitude in change and repudiating it on its return the next minute! It was a sharp game and a little too sharp.

Everybody who shops much knows that it is next to impossible to get a "returned" article credited, or, indeed, called for. If you take two rugs on approval—I mention rugs because you can't very well return them by hand—and state clearly and plainly and over and over the price of the one you have kept and the one you wish returned, you are more likely than not to find both on your bill the next month, and you are likely to find the rug day after day littering your hall unless you telephone twice a day and end by flouncing down yourself in a rage and demanding its instant removal. Of course if it is kept long you are charged with it, anyway. The other night, when it was very hot, some friends of a lady in moderate circumstances dining with her suggested a drive in the park. One of the men telephoned for a landau, and at the end of the drive paid for it. The next week the bill came in—to the lady. Now of course this was an accident. But why doesn't the other accident ever happen? Why should thousands of bills come in to be paid twice, while by no oversight or bad management does a bill ever get forgotten or overlooked? Money getting, grasping, greedy generation of shopkeepers! Business is business, if you like, but business need not be a cutthroat, bloodthirsty system of demanding what is not due, need it? Must it be in this way that men grow rich?

It is because only one kind of mistakes occur that one is justified in thinking that only one kind is guarded against. The customer has to look out for himself and the shopkeeper too. The shopkeeper only looks out for himself. As for the breaking of promises, the calm delays and the superb independence of "purveyors," words fail me when I attempt to depict their aggravations. Success breeds contempt, it seems, and the only way to get a thing done promptly is to patronize a little up town place where they can't do it.—Mme. Lorgnette in Chicago Post.

Opium Eating In the Orient.

Opium eating, according to the Maharaja Bahadur of Durbhanga, is largely practiced in Rajputana on festive occasions as a token of welcome to guests and friends. When two enemies wish to end a long standing feud, they generally go through the following ceremony: They each drink a small quantity of the preparation of opium called "amulpani" from the hands of the other, and this is regarded as making the ties of friendship inviolable. In certain localities opium is consumed at funerals, marriages, betrothals and other ceremonies. Among the Kathis of Kathiwar it would be considered an offense if the guest refused to take opium on occasions like these. In the Punjab a large proportion of the adult male population take opium in small doses as a stimulant without much or any apparent harm. It is looked upon as a digestive and a very beneficial tonic for a man who has reached middle age.—London News.

THEATER CURTAINS.

Costly Draperies That Are Used In Some of the London Theaters.

Few have any idea of the money spent by the managers of London theaters in procuring the curtain which hides the stage from public view, remarked a well known theatrical furnisher to a reporter. Take, for instance, the glorious curtain at Sir Henry Irving's theater, the Lyceum. That curtain, if it cost a penny, cost at least 1,000 guineas. I am told that 1,000 yards of beautiful blood red plush were used to make it complete, and for it Sir Henry Irving is indebted to the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, who some years ago generously made him a present of the curtain as a tribute to his artistic genius.

A very expensive curtain is that used at the Prince of Wales' theater, Coventry street, now occupied by Mr. Arthur Roberts. Its cost was about £600. It is made of boiler plate, is entirely fireproof and weighs no less than six tons. No fire can get from the stage to the auditorium or vice versa, as the top and bottom of the curtain respectively rest against and upon a solid wall of brickwork. I believe this, as well as other curtains of the same kind, was the invention of Mr. C. J. Phipps, the theatrical architect.

Perhaps the most beautiful theater curtain in London—where the finest curtains in the world are to be seen—are those at the Lyceum, to which I have referred, the Palace Theater of Varieties, and the Savoy. The Palace curtain is a real work of art, and Mr. D'Oyly Carte must have lavished a small fortune upon its make. It is a beautiful dream of gold and various other colored silks, and something like 600 square yards of silk were used in its manufacture. I am told that the director of the Paris Opera was almost thunderstruck when, during Mr. Carte's production of "Ivanhoe," he saw the curtain for the first time.

The Savoy curtain must have cost £300 if a penny, its material being of the finest gold plush. Another expensive curtain was that bought by Mr. Charles Wyndham for the Criterion. It cost over £120, being made by Maple.

Most of the other London houses, and probably all the country theaters, content themselves with the old fashioned curtain of canvas, sometimes with a scene and sometimes with imitation curtains painted upon it. The cost of these varies of course, and may run from £20 to £200, according to the amount of work put into them and the artist engaged to paint the scene.—London Tit-Bits.

Ants as Biters.

Ants are terrible fighters. They have very powerful jaws, considering the size of their bodies, and therefore their method is by biting. They will bite one another and hold on with a wonderful grip of the jaws, even after all their legs have been bitten off by other ants.

Sometimes six or eight ants will be clinging with a death hold to one another, making a peculiar spectacle, some with a leg gone and some with half the body gone. One singular fact is that the grip of an ant's jaw is retained even after the body has been bitten off and nothing but the head remains.—Exchange.

THEY WON THE RAISE.

The Directors Were Satisfied That Their Claim Was Just.

Once when the miners of a big anthracite mining company were desirous of receiving increased pay an effort was made to induce the local officials in the mining country to make such representations to the president of the company as would produce the desired effect. This was unavailing, however, and efforts in other directions were tried, until the directors offered to meet a delegation of the miners in New York city and discuss the situation. A dozen of the brawniest miners in the region were selected as delegates—great rugged men, who would certainly make a favorable impression. The men met the officials and stated their case, which was that at the prevailing rate of wages they could hardly get enough to eat.

The matter was held under advisement, and the conference adjourned to luncheon. Then came the most amazing display of appetites that has ever been seen before or since, and the colored waiters turned pale as they saw a dish intended for the entire party retained by one man, who speedily made away with the contents. Each man seemed as ravenous as though he had not eaten for a week, and the caterer was at his wits' ends to provide for them all.

At last, when every portion had been eaten and all seemed inclined for more, a giant whose native place was South Wales cried out: "Don't you worry about no more fancy things. Bring us a cheese, and we'll make out all right." A cheese was procured, and the directors gazed with awe as it speedily disappeared. As the last crumbs were disappearing the officials held a hurried consultation, and after awhile the president announced: "Gentlemen, we have decided to concede your claims to an advance of 10 per cent, for we are certain that at present you can scarcely get enough to eat. Nothing but this pleasurable meeting could so fully have convinced us of your needs." The delegates have not yet wearied of telling of the amazing display of gluttony which they allege was preconcerted for the express purpose of creating the impression that it produced.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Many are finding that their old binders are unable to manage the heavy straw on the fields this year and new machines are selling fast.

E. H. Funk was in town on Tuesday. He is partly crippled for a time with a sprained ankle, the result of being mixed up in a game of base-ball.

Last Monday morning the early risers found frost on the sidewalks in town and later on the gardens were found to have suffered more or less from "Jack's" visit, but reports from the country go to show that the frost only did damage in places, and that only delicate garden truck was "scorched," no indications of injury to grain being noticed.

W. P. Hebard, who has acted as agent for the Great Northern railway company at this point for nearly a year past, concluded his services here last week, leaving on Monday for Wisconsin for a vacation, accompanied by his family. After a few weeks Mr. Hebard will return and take charge of the depot at Erskine recently vacated by Mr. Bush. H. R. Richards, formerly operator at the Crookston depot, has taken charge here in Mr. Hebard's place and is evidently entirely "onto" his job. He expects his family to arrive from Indiana in about a week when he will take up his residence at the depot.

Preparations are being made for the erection of another large elevator here this fall by the Jocobus elevator company. The lumber is already arriving.

At the congress of county superintendents held at the state university last Tuesday, Supt. O. McCrillis, of this county, was appointed chairman of the committee on examinations. The committee will aim to petition the legislature to amend existing examination laws with a view of making examinations more uniform throughout the state.

The Pilgrim's Progress.

A little more than two hundred years ago there died in England a man noted for piety, for firm yet orderly resistance to ecclesiastical tyranny, and as a leader of his sect. That he is remembered now is not due to these things, but to the fact that he wrote a book called "The Pilgrim's Progress." The historian, Macaulay, pays him this tribute: "Bred a tinker, and afterwards a soldier, his education was that of a mechanic. He knew no language but the English as spoken by common people. He had studied no model of composition but the English translation of the Bible. His spelling was bad. He frequently broke the rules of grammar. For more than a century, the Pilgrim's Progress, though translated into several foreign tongues, was known only to cotters and artisans. At length critics inquired where lay the secret of so wide and durable a popularity, and was compelled to own the despised book as really a masterpiece. Bunyan is as decidedly the first of allegorists as Demosthenes is the first of orators, or Shakspeare the first of poets. Other allegorists have shown equal ingenuity, but no other allegorist has been able to touch the heart, and make abstractions objects of terror, pity and love." Bunyan's book deals with a spiritual pilgrim, but we are also pilgrims in a material sense. In our travels through this world we can generally make it easier for ourselves, as well as get to our destination more quickly, by taking the main traveled road, which, in the great North and Central West, is the Burlington Route. For tickets, maps, rates and information about these lines, call on your home ticket agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul. Minn.

Chinese Cooking.

This knowledge of what we are pleased to call artificial digestion runs largely through all Chinese cooking. Whenever meats, especially the heavy and indigestible class, are to be employed as food, the cook increases their assimilative character by the use of peptoniferous tripe and vinegar. I have often out of curiosity examined the numerous made dishes of the Mongolian cuisine with a view to ascertaining their constitution. Whether it was soups or stews, ragouts or fricassees, pot roasts or boiled, I have found tripe finely shredded or thinly sliced in three dishes out of every five. The ratio was largest in households of wealth, where well paid cooks were the rule, and smallest in those where the conditions were otherwise. As they discovered the peptic virtue of tripe in all food animals, they likewise found the same quality in the gizzard of the bird kingdom. They have employed the gizzard even more liberally in their cooking than they have the tripe, and they regard it, as is the scientific truth, as the most valuable of all animal tissues.—"An Ex-Consul to Amoy" in Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette.

Afghan Ways.

The Afghans have a noble maxim, worthy of any stoic: "If thou hast, eat; if thou hast not, die." Unfortunately they do not live up to that, and in practice it becomes: "If thou hast, eat; if thou hast not, take." The ideal of a man is to live on his neighbors. The Afridis of the Khaiber pass lived for centuries upon the plunder of caravans till the British government enlisted these hereditary robbers as regular gendarmes and compromised for their right of plunder by a regular annuity. WILD BILL'S HANDIWORK.

A Lasting Memorial of the Desperado's Skill With the Pistol.

On the west side of Market square in Kansas City stands a three story front of buildings known locally as Battle row, from the pugnacious bent of the inhabitants. These lapse into brawls and chance meddle encounters with an ease which should alarm. Up under the cornice of one of the buildings is an Odd Fellows' sign, "I. O. O. F." If one's eyes are sharp, the white paint interior of the first O will show a huddle of gray, weather hued spots very well in the center of the letter. They are the handiwork of that long haired gentleman of the border, Wild Bill.

It was back in the middle seventies when Wild Bill, "by request," and merely to show his witchlike skill with those weapons, stood across the street, fully 100 feet away, and with a 45 caliber Colt's pistol in each hand put all the 12 bullets into the center of this "O." He fired the pistols simultaneously, and the 12 shots made only six reports. The town was smaller at that time and in the interest of science didn't mind a little racket now and then. So Wild Bill's exhibition of crack pistol shooting excited nothing but compliment. Indeed Speers, chief of police then, as well as now, was one of the most interested lookers on, and emphatically indorsed the exhibition as one of the most skillful tricks with pistols it had ever been his luck to see.—Washington Star.

A Proverb Revised.

We are frequently reminded of the inutility of locking the barn door after the horse is stolen, but we are now told of a case where a man's stable has been stolen. The adage might be revised, however, so as to read, "Don't put your horse in his stall after your stable is stolen."—Boston Transcript.

LIVING AS A HERMIT.

Insurance Swindler Fraker Located in the Minnesota Woods.

Was Insured for $58,000 and Heirs Have Collected the Money.

Admits His Identity and Will Be Taken to Kansas for Trial.

DULUTH, Minn., Sept. 4.—George Fraker, of Topeka, Kan., the man who was supposed to have been drowned in the Missouri river two years ago, has been captured in Minnesota. Fraker's life was insured for $58,000 and the heirs brought suit in the Kansas courts to recover. The case went to the supreme court, and was one of the most famous insurance cases of the country. The insurance companies were defeated in the final decision, it being rendered last month. It was always maintained by the companies that Fraker was alive, but his whereabouts were unknown. Recently it became known in some way that Fraker was near Tower, where he was known under the alias of Schnell.

Admits His Identity.

Attorney Robert T. Herrick and Deputy Sheriff Wilkinson of Topeka, came here and organized a party to search for him. Fraker was found in the woods and his capture was effected in a strategic manner. He was brought to Duluth and will be taken to Topeka at once.

Fraker will go without a requisition. He has been living near Tower for six months. He admitted his identity and said he did not leave home on purpose to defraud the companies, but that while he was on the Missouri river, he fell in and swam across to land. The next day he read in the papers that he had been drowned and concluded to carry out the deception and allow his heirs to collect the insurance.

Reward of $20,000 Offered.

The case is one of great interest because of a reward of $20,000 which was offered for his capture. Fraker is a physician, and up to the latter part of 1893 was physician to the St. Elmo hotel, the leading hotel at Excelsior Springs, a famous health resort near Kansas City. Together with seven or eight companions, the doctor went fishing on the Missouri river one day, and after dark, while in the company of George Harvey, James Triplet and Jake Crowley, a negro, he disappeared and was seen no more. These three parties afterwards swore positively that they witnessed his drowning while rowing in a leaky boat, but after a strict search his body could not be recovered. Suits were at once brought to recover $58,000 insurance, and the decision in favor of the heirs was but recently made.

READY TO PROSECUTE.

Insurance Companies Preparing the Case Against Fraker.

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 4.—Attorneys for the insurance companies interested have drawn up the information that will be lodged against Dr. Fraker, the insurance swindler, arrested near Duluth, when he reaches here Wednesday morning. Dr. Fraker, when he reaches here, will be taken direct to Ray county and lodged in jail there, and it is in the criminal court of that county that he will be prosecuted. Uncle Jake Crowley, James Triplet and George Harvey, who swore they saw Dr. Fraker drown, will be arrested on the charge of perjury.

Suit will be begun at once against the heirs to recover the insurance money paid them,

CHARGES AGAINST OFFICIALS.

City Employes of Chicago Assist Corporations.

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—Property owners on Fifth avenue, one of the streets upon which the various elevated railways of this city propose to construct a union loop for the use of all the roads, have started out to make a big fight against the companies. They made application in the federal court for a restraining order against the roads, and their application fairly bristles with charges against city officials of various kinds, and in different branches of the service. W. D. Kent, commissioner of public works, is specifically charged with being the agent of the Northwestern Elevated railroad in securing the passage of the ordinance permitting the construction of the loop, and with having worked in various ways against the protesting property owners. A majority of the members of the city council is accused of having been bribed to pass the ordinance. The charge against the aldermen is general, but the filers of the application say that it can be made specific and is easy of proof.

The Assessed Values Go.

PIERRE, S. D., Sept. 3.—Commissioner Lockhart and Auditor Hipple have returned from their trip to Sully and Potter counties to value state property turned in by Taylor. In Sully county they took the land at their assessed valuation of $500 per quarter section. The property in Potter county was not in shape to give out the exact price it was taken at.

Valuable Horses Burned.

CULPEPPER, Va., Aug. 30.—The breeding establishment at Castleton, Va., of Messrs. James R. and F. H. Keene, was burned to the ground. A number of valuable horses, including the imported Kallicrates and Hyberdad, perished in the flames. The fire's origin is unknown. Loss, $70,000.

The Stand Collapsed.

BLOOMINGTON, Ills., Sept. 3.—During the Labor day exercises here, just after the speakers had finished their addresses, the stand on which they stood gave way. Thirty persons went down to the ground with a crash, and the people were soon struggling to get out of the broken timbers and boards. Three young ladies were seriously injured and may not recover. The others escaped with painful cuts and bruises.

WILL BE A TEST CASE.

Principals in a Prize Fight at Dallas Arrested.

DALLAS, Tex., Sept. 3.—In the 21st round of the Clark-Cavanagh fight the contest was stopped by the police. Both principals and James F. Bates, the referee, were arrested and are in jail.

This is a case to test the validity of the state law regarding prize fights. Application for a writ of habeas corpus will at once be made to the court of criminal appeals, the tribunal of last resort. Should the court declare there is no law against glove contests, an application will be made to the supreme court for a mandamus compelling the state to issue a license for the Corbett-Fitzsimmons contest.

Under the law the charge against the men is simply a misdemeanor, not punishable by penitentiary sentence. The writ of habeas corpus will be asked for at once, and there will be a hearing and probably a decision in a week.

MORE EVIDENCE AGAINST HOLMES.

Feet of the Murdered Boy Dug Up—Also a Bottle of Poison.

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 31.—The drug with which Howard Peitzel was killed before his body was burned in the big stove in the Irvington cottage was found during the day. A part of a bottle of cyanide of potassium was found buried in the barn. It was given to the coroner. Boys digging under the house in an unfinished portion of the cellar found the two feet of Howard Peitzel. They had been burned but not destroyed and were evidently too bulky to put into the chimney hole. With the feet was found buried a 5-quart can. There was some oil in it. All the witnesses were before the coroner and the grand jury during the day. The coroner will undoubtedly corroborate the conclusions already reached by detectives. The grand jury is hearing the testimony and will return an indictment against Holmes.

WAS ACCIDENTAL.

Verdict of the Coroner's Jury in the Hawkins-Case.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 30.—The coroner's jury in the Hawkins case returned the following verdict at 3 p. m.: "So far as it appears before the jurors from the evidence produced, Lolo Hawkins came to her death through burns caused by the accidental upsetting or the explosion of a lamp." Despite the above verdict, Mrs. Perkins is still held, charged with murder, and will be arraigned in the police court Thursday morning.

VISITED BISMARCK.

German-American Veterans Call on the Iron Chancellor.

HAMBURG, Aug. 31.—The German-American veteran delegation called on Prince Bismarck at Freidrichsruhe and were heartily received, being entertained at luncheon. When the delegation left they heartily cheered the prince. When they had gone the prince remarked that the visit had given him great joy.

TORPEDO BOAT CAPSIZED.

Another Deplorable Accident in the German Navy.

BERLIN, Aug. 30.—Torpedo boat No. 14 capsized in the North sea. Thirteen persons are reported to have drowned.

Poisoning Valuable Horses.

GREENWOOD, Wis., Sept. 4.—A short time since the imported stallion, valued at $2,000, belonging to the Withee estate, was found dead in his stall. The cause of his death was a mystery at the time, but this week a number of heavy draft horses at pasture were taken sick and died, manifesting all the symptoms of poison, and it is now evident that the stallion was poisoned also. There is no clue to the perpetrator of the deed.

Garfield Held.

ABERDEEN, S. D., Sept. 4.—The case against A. H. Garfield for rape came up Monday on preliminary examination. The defendant waived examination, however, and was held to the December term of the circuit court in bonds of $750. It is expected his father in Wisconsin will furnish a bond and the accused will be liberated.

Failure in Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, Sept. 4.—Henry M. Wolfe & Co., one of the largest wholesale clothing firms in the South, filed a deed of assignment at noon in the county clerk's office. The firm owes $200,000 to $250,000, and have assets which they believe will exceed that sum.

Kent's Sentence.

FARGO, N. D., Sept. 4.—Judge McConnell has sentenced Myron R. Kent, the Mandan wife murderer, to hang Oct. 25.

Atty. J. Walseth was up from Fertile on Wednesday in the interest of their coming fair, which will be held on the 18th, 19th and 20th. They have designated the 19th as Crookston day and will arrange to have two coaches attached to the morning freight train that will leave Crookston about 8 o'clock a. m., returning about 7:30, thus giving a full day at Fertile to all who desire to attend. Reduced rates of fare on railroad.

RECEIVERS BEATEN

IVES WINS THE FIRST ROUND IN THE N. P. CONTEST.

The Wisconsin Court Held to Have No Jurisdiction in the Matter—Receivers Must Answer to Charges of Maladministration Within Thirty Days.

SEATTLE, Wash., Sept. 3.—By the decision of Judge Gilbert, concurred in by Judge Hanford, Receivers Oakes, Payne and Rouse must appear in the United States court for the Northern district of Washington in this city Oct. 2 and defend themselves against the charges of maladministration brought by Brayton Ives, president of the Northern Pacific. The opinion of Judge Gilbert was read in court and the opinion of Judge Hanford was filed late in the afternoon. The receivers are each ordered to file in this court a bond of $100,000; also a report of their actions from the time of the last report confirmed by Judge Jenkins up to the present. It is held that the acts of the receivers are not invalid and the $5,000,000 receivers' certificates are valid liens as soon as confirmed by the respective courts. By the decision the question of jurisdiction is settled and the court here becomes the court of primary jurisdiction, settling the question of collateral attack. The second part of the Ives application will come up at the hearing of the order to show cause, and the question of fact as to whether the receivers have been lax in the administration of the trust estate will be opened.

Jenkins Had No Jurisdiction.

Judge Gilbert says: "The actual possession of the property of the insolvent corporation by the first court, through its receivers, could extend no further than the limit of that court's jurisdiction. The rights the receivers are accorded, in courts whose jurisdiction is exterior to that of initial proceedings, have their basis in comity. Such comity rests upon the fact that another court is in the actual possession of a portion of the property, which cannot be well segregated, and which is to the best interests for all concerned required to be managed by a single system. Here, however, it is shown that, at the time of filing the application to remove the receivers, there is no part of the railroad line of the Northern Pacific within the jurisdiction of the court which first appointed them, and that there is in that district no personal property held in receivership. It follows, from this state of fact, that the court is powerless to make an order which affects in any way the management or possession of any property of the corporation. No foreclosures of said mortgages can be had, no possession to a purchaser can be given, until the courts which have the actual possession of said railroad shall consent thereto."

At the rifle practice on Monday evening Dr. Dunlop got 79, Will Hoch, 76 and Pat Russell 73 out of 100. Some of the shots made were center shots.

Next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, in the Congregational church, Rev. Mr. Fisher will give the second of the series of discourses on "The Revival Periods of Our Country's History."

Ben Strawbridge returned to Hallock Tuesday morning where he will remain till the case he is reporting is completed. He hopes to start next week on a visit to his old home in Baltimore for two months.

The body of Col. A. B. Gorgas lay in state at the undertaking rooms of C. S. Chesterman during the afternoon of Tuesday where his many friends were permitted to take a last farewell look at the features of one who was indeed everybody's friend.

Hawkins & Co. have moved their bicycle business to the room underneath the First National bank building, on the corner of Second and Broadway. Inquiring of Will Olds as to the reason for this change, he said: "Well, you see, we have made so darn much money in the bicycle business, that we just had to invest in a bank somehow and we thought we would begin on the ground floor and work up. Just call 'round and see us at the new quarters, and we will show you a factory as is a factory."

On Wednesday afternoon, at 5 o'clock, at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. Chris. Rood, occurred the marriage of Miss Inez Dahl to Mr. C. C. Strander, the Rev. Mr. Frasier officiating. The happy couple left on the evening train on the N. P. road for a brief tour, after which they will return to the new home thus created in this city. The young couple start in life under very favorable auspices, and it is the earnest wish of the JOURNAL and their many friends that no dark clouds may arise to dim their happiness.

FIFTY WERE INJURED

WILDCAT ENGINE PLUNGES INTO AN EXCURSION TRAIN.

Four Coaches Telescoped, Burying the Passengers in the Wreck—Most of the Injured Taken to Brooklyn Hospitals. Several Likely to Die.

BROOKLYN, Sept. 3.—An appalling railroad accident occurred at 3:40 p. m. near Woodlawn station of the Sea Beach railway, in which 50 people were injured. While Train No. 8, drawing 17 cars, which were crowded almost to suffocation by excursionists, was standing at the Woodlawn station, a wild cat engine came thundering along and crashed into the rear car, telescoping it. The car was full of passengers, most of whom came from New York. Many people saw the engine tearing along and jumped from the train and thus saved their lives.

The runaway engine dashed into the rear car, smashing it into kindling wood and burying men, women and children beneath it. There was a mad rush of surging humanity from the train. Scarcely half a dozen people kept their heads or were able to render assistance to the injured. Patrolman Kelly, who was on duty at the station, turned in several ambulance calls, and five ambulances from the surrounding hospitals promptly responded. In the meantime the woodwork of the wrecked carriage caught fire and was soon in a blaze. Four cars were completely destroyed before the train hands were able to uncouple them, and four cars were telescoped by the collision. Most of the injured were taken to the hospitals, and several will probably die.

Dr. Warninger, August George and S. E. Olson were out on Tuesday and returned with 76 chickens as the result of the day's hunt.

Mr. Wm. Anglim has been quite ill since his return from the coast with the remains of his wife. His condition is not considered critical.

Miss Anna Hancock left for Fargo on Monday evening where she is to teach, Misses Dela and Ruth left on same train for Moorhead where they will enter the Normal school.

J. W. Wheeler took his place as cashier of the First National bank on Tuesday morning, where he will be pleased to greet his many friends with that frank, open smile of his. Mr. Sawyer will join the sons of rest for a brief period while he makes up his mind what he will do in the future. He thinks of going into business in this city, and we trust he will.

Thirteen years ago on Sept. 3rd S. L. Collins established his livery business in this city and as he looks back over these years that are past and gone he has no reason to regret his choice. Coming to this city a poor young man he has grown to a position of wealth and influence that he may well be proud of, being one of the solid men of our city. Long may he wave.

NO CONSOLIDATION.

Great Northern Merely Making Traffic Arrangements With the N. P.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 30.—Senator Davis continued his argument in the Great Northern injunction case in the United States circuit court Thursday, occupying the entire forenoon. He was followed by C. A. Severance and E. P. Sanborn for the defense. In closing his argument Senator Davis referred to the right of consolidation granted by the charter, and read from authorities as to the meaning of consolidation in a legal sense. There had been a great deal of talk to the effect that what was proposed was an amalgamation of the two systems, but this was not true. All that was proposed was a traffic agreement for mutual advantage. Neither road would lose its identity. But even if one should be swallowed up by the other there would be nothing illegal in it, according to the terms of the charter.

IN JUDGE SANBORN'S HANDS.

Arguments in the Great Northern Injunction Case Finished.

ST. PAUL, Aug. 31.—The arguments in the injunction suit of Thomas W. Pearsall, to restrain the Great Northern from consummating the proposed deal to gain control of the Northern Pacific, were concluded shortly after 3 o'clock, and Judge Sanborn has taken the case under consideration. Interest in the arguments had so far declined that the attendance of the attorneys in the court room was much smaller than on the preceding days.

MENACE TO PEACE.

Emperor William's Sedan Speeches Condemned as Dangerous.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—In a leading article The Globe expresses the opinion that the German celebrations endanger the peace of Europe. The tone of the Berlin press, says The Globe, has been offensive, and such as to needlessly wound the feelings of the French people. The emperor, it continues, has allowed himself, on more than one occasion recently, to use language which is at least capable of being misunderstood, and while it is not believed that he desires war, his utterances are assuredly not such as to further peace.

The Germans of London celebrated Sedan day with an excursion to Epping Forest on Sunday, and with a feast and a commers at the German Athenaeum.

OFFICIAL CALL ISSUED.

Convention in Ireland's Cause Meets in Chicago Sept. 24-20.

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—Having failed to secure any tangible recognition of Ireland's right to self-government from the British government, sons of Erin have called a convention to consider what must be done. This convention will be held in Young Men's Christian Association hall in this city Sept. 24-26, and is the officially called convention of Irish-Americans who hope for freedom for the northern country.

The call is signed by John F. Finerty, acting president; John P. Sutton, acting secretary, and many other leading Irish-Americans who have been active in aiding the cause in this country. It recites the failure of the Irish to secure any assistance from either party in England and calls on all sons of Erin to join the new Irish movement.

Hearings Begun.

WILMINGTON, Del., Aug. 31.—The hearings of the men charged with violating the neutrality laws of the country, were before Commissioner McAllister. Some evidence was taken, but no conclusion reached. All the men plead not guilty.

Which is worse, imprisonment for life or a life-long disease, like scrofula, for example? The former, certainly, would be more preferable were it not that Ayer's Sarsaparilla can always come to the rescue and give the poor sufferer health, strength and happiness.

The story is abroad that Comrade Remshardt went forth one day recently for to kill a calf and bring the meat to the shambles, that men partaking thereof might be strengthened thereby for the performance of their duties. Whether the comrade got to dreaming that he was once more on the foraging expeditions of yore, when every herd encountered was legitimate prey, and every man tried his best to bring down the whole flock with one shot, we know not; it is a fact, nevertheless, that when he did shoot at the calf—that young bovine kicked up its heels and lit out, but an old cow standing right in range just beyond dropped all the same as though she had been shot. Upon examination it was found that she was, and for the space of five minutes the energetic Dutch that Remshardt used is better imagined than repeated. They brought cow meat home that time instead of veal.

THE LAST OF EARTH.

Col. A. B. Gorgas, Crosses the Great Divide.

On Sunday morning the sad news was whispered about from lip to lip of the friends of Col. A. B. Gorgas "he is dead," and many was the silent tear of sympathy dropped in memory of a gentle, noble hearted man, who by his quiet, gentlemanly demeanor for the years that he has gone in and out before this people, has won hosts of friends, especially among the little ones, of whom he was particularly fond.

COL. A. B. GORGAS was born in Myerstown, Lebanon Co., Pa., about 68 years ago and was a civil engineer by profession. Early in the war he enlisted in the 13th Reg't. Ill. Vol. Inf., of which he was chosen colonel, serving with distinction, his regiment having the reputation of being one of the best drilled in the service. His name is prominently mentioned in Gen. Grant's memoirs as a brave and meritorious officer. His son, William, arrived from the old home at Harrisburg, Pa., but not in time to see his father ere the great change took place. The Mason's held formal services at their hall at 6 o'clock on Tuesday evening and escorted the remains to the depot to be conveyed to their last resting place in Pennsylvania.

The following brothers from the Masonic Lodge were pall bearers: J. W. Wheeler, E. M. Walsh, Will Bugg, Lewis Ellington, C. E. Sawyer and H. E. Cooke. Comrades Jennings and Zarracher organized a marching squad of old vets to act as guard of honor and hundreds of our citizens testified the love and respect they bore the deceased by accompanying the funeral cortege to the depot.

Chickamauga.

Thirty-two years ago—September 19-21, 1863—"Old Rosy" and his army of the Cumberland, who had been following Bragg from Murfresboro since the preceding January, were treated to a surprise on the banks of Chickamauga Creek. Rosecrans knew that his enemy, who had evacuated Chattanooga in haste, was somewhere in the hilly country to the south, and planned to fall upon him from several directions and compel a surrender of the whole rebel army. What Rosecrans did not know was that Longstreet's corps of veterans from Virginia were already re-inforcing Bragg and when he found it out the Union army was making good time away from a lost field. Had it not been for "Pap Thomas" and the Fourteenth Corps our boys might not have stopped at Chattanooga that night. Many are yet living who were among the visiting tourists there then, though most of the leaders have passed away. This month there will be a great gathering of ex-soldiers at Chattanooga to assist in the dedication of monuments on the Chickamauga battle field. The most distinguished of the old soldiers on both sides will be there. A low rate is made by the railroads—open to all—and never will you have a better opportunity to visit this historic battle ground, now in the hands of the government as a reservation park, dotted with monuments to show points of note. Tickets should be purchased of your home agent via the Burlington Route, which has the best accommodations, and offers two routes—via Chicago or via St. Louis. For maps, rates, time-tables and any information, address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

FALL EXAMINATIONS.

Teachers' examinations will be held on the following dates:

Aug. 23 and 24 at Fosston and Thief River Falls;

Aug. 30 and 31 at Crookston and East Grand Forks;

Oct. 25 and 26 at Crookston and Red Lake Falls.

An average standing of 70 per cent will be required for 3d grade certificates and 80 per cent for second grade certificates.

Private examinations will not be granted under any circumstances.

School officers should know before hiring a teacher that she holds a valid certificate in this county.

Considerable excitement has been caused at Waterville by the fact that within a week three rattlesnakes of large size have been seen in the village, all near residences. None were ever seen there before.

The Travelers' Life Insurance company intends to contest the payment of the Catherine Ging policy for $5,000, under the clause in the instrument which voids the policy when death ensues at the hands of another person except in the case of burglary.

The State Historical society has received from William Wakefield of Libbey, Aitkin county, a unique and valuable collection of Indian curios. They consist of hardened copper knives, spear heads, arrow heads, etc. They are the first copper specimens found in the state.

A handsome solid silver service of eight pieces, a large picture of Minneapolis and an elegant upright piano of Minneapolis manufacture were presented to the cruiser Minneapolis, the "Queen of the Navy," at anchor in Boston harbor, by a committee of prominent citizens of Minneapolis.

The crop year just closed was the largest in Duluth's history. The wheat received aggregates 33,687,931 bushels, or 976,429 bushels more than for the previous year. The shipments are much less than during the previous crop year, being but 24,668,549 bushels. This is accounted for by the increased consumption of the head of the lake mills. A feature of the year has been the high quality of the wheat. Sixty-five per cent of the total amount graded No. 1 hard and 27 per cent graded No. 1 Northern, leaving but 8 per cent of low grade.

STATIONARY ENGINEERS.

The National Convention in Session at St. Paul.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 2.—The National Stationary Engineers' Association is holding its annual convention in this city. Delegates began arriving Monday morning, and each train during the day added to the number. In the evening a reception was held at the Ryan Hotel. Mayor Smith and governor Clough welcomed them to the city.

First Meeting in the South.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 2.—The Sons of Veterans hold their annual encampment at Knoxville, Tenn., Sept 16 to 19. This is the first meeting by the national organization south of the Ohio river.

SPECIAL DAY FOR EDITORS.

Minnesota State Fair Will Entertain All Newspaper Men Sept. 14.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 3.—A game of baseball between the St. Paul and Detroit clubs and another game between the Minneapolis and Terre Haute clubs, of the Western League, will form a part of the program for Newspaper Men's Day at the state fair Sept. 14. The games will be in plain view from the grand stand. The games will begin at 1 p. m, and 4 p. m.

Another attraction will be a mile race between Miss Mate Christopher, the female bicyclist, and a fast trotting horse. Miss Christopher has a mile record below the best time made by a trotting horse.

There will be a running race between the thoroughbreds Anawan, Allablaee, Remedy, Iantha, Miss Price, from the stables of Mr. Al Spink, of The Derby Winner, to be played during fair week in St. Paul and Minneapolis theatres. The famous old running horse Freeland, who many years ago defeated Miss Woodford at Long Branch, and thus gained the world's running record, will be paraded in front of the grand stand.

There will be a race between four mounted policemen of St. Paul and four mounted policemen of Minneapolis.

There will be a bicycle race between the managers of the daily newspapers of St. Paul and Minneapolis, and a fat men's bicycle race.

A band of music, consisting of 150 of the best musicians of the Twin Cities, will entertain the editors with music, directed by such noted leaders as George Danz, Jr., George Seibert, Henry Stein and Professor Watson. This program is made up by the press clubs of St. Paul and Minneapolis and the Minnesota Editorial association.

Railroads leading to the Twin Cities have made a rate of one fare for the round trip, within a radius of 200 miles.

ANNIVERSARY OF SEDAN.

German Emperor Dedicates a Memorial Church.

BERLIN, Sept. 2.—Emperor William the Empress Augusta and other members of the imperial family, the Grand Duchess of Baden and numerous representatives of German princely houses, ministers of state, officers, veterans and deputations, were present at the consecration of the Emperor William Memorial church. The emperor and the empress arrived at the site of the church with a military escort at about 10 o'clock. The service of dedication was begun with the singing of a choral. Court Chaplain Faber pronounced the consecration address, in which he alluded to the strong faith, the cheerful hopefulness and the love of his people and his country which characterized the old emperor.

At the conclusion of this service the troops and veterans, including the German-American veterans now visiting the city, marched past their majesties in review. The veterans sang patriotic airs as they marched, in which the spectators joined.

INVOLVES VALUABLE PROPERTY.

Judge Shiras Decides an Important Case at Sioux City.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., Aug. 31.—Judge Shiras of the Federal court for the Northern district of Iowa has rendered an opinion in the case of the First National Bank of Montpelier, Vt., vs. the Sioux City Terminal Railroad and Warehouse Company in which the Trust Company of North America filed a petition of intervention. Judge Shirar holds that the bonds of the Trust Company of North America are valid and orders the foreclosure to take place. The bonds now amount to over $1,400,000 and the case involves the future ownership of the most valuable properties in Sioux City. The case is perhaps the largest and most important ever tried in Sioux City.

TO CHASTISE GREENWAY.

Hon. J. C. Patterson, It Is Said, Will Undertake the Job.

MONTREAL, Aug. 31.—The authentic statement that Hon. J. C. Patterson, minister without portfolio, will be sworn in on Monday as lieutenant governor of Manitoba, is creating great excitement here, especially among the French Canadians. The term of office is finished, but it was generally supposed that in return for turning out the members of the Liberal local government he was to get a second term. It now appears that Schultz has refused to do this, and for these reasons Patterson has received the appointmint and will be expected to chastise Greenway and his cabinet if they refuse to come to terms on the school question.

PILLSBURY WON.

The American Chess Player Takes the International Championship.

HASTINGS, Eng., Sept. 3.—Pillsbury, the American player, won the game of chess with Gunsberg, in the international tournament here, and therefore takes first prize. The London papers comment on the brilliant playing of the Americans.

Booth Certificates Good.

PERRY, O. T., Aug. 30.—The commissioner of the general land office has handed down a decision in which he holds booth certificates, issued at Arkansas City before the opening of the Cherokee strip, good. The decision affects 3,000 homesteaders and town lot settlers who hold these certificates.

For Governor of New Jersey.

TRENTON, N. J., Sept. 3.—The gubernatorial state convention of the People's party of New Jersey was held in this city. William B. Ellis of Trenton was nominated for governor after several others had declined the honor. There were 86 delegates at the convention.

Will Admit Women.

HELENA, Mon., Aug. 29.—In the Methodist conference the question of admitting women to the general conference on the same footing as men was decided in favor of the women, by a vote of 34 to 4.

Azote's Quick Mile.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—At Fleetwood park Azote trotted a mile in 2:05½, the fastest time ever made on that track, the best previous time having been Nancy Hanks' 2:06¾, in 1893.

Patterson Sworn in.

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 3.—Hon. J. C. Patterson was sworn in as lieutenant governor of Manitoba at Ottawa. The feeling of opposition to him has died out here.

IT WAS A LOVE FEAST.

Pennsylvania Republicans Develop Any Amount of Harmony.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Aug. 29.—The Republican state convention met here and unanimously agreed upon the following ticket:

State chairman—M. S. Quay.

State treasurer—Ben J. Haywood of Mercer.

Superior court judges—James A. Beaver of Center county, E. N. Willard of Lackawanna, Charles E. Rice of Luzerne, George B. Orlady of Huntingdon, John J. Wickham of Beaver, Howard Reeder of Northampton.

Developed Into a "Love Feast."

The convention, which started out with every promise of being one of the most exciting ever known in the state, developed into a "love feast" and wound up about as tamely as any ever seen here.

The first battle between the factions came on the election of a temporary chairman. The Quay candidate won by a majority of 20, and after this the senator had his own way completely.

Although there was an outward indication of harmony and forgiveness it is said that this extends only to Governor Hastings and his friends. Those on the platform observed that Senator Quay did not look at or speak to C. L. Magee, David Martin and Senator Porter, the men who have led the fight against him, and it is predicted that the wounds now partly healed will be opened in a very short time.

Quay's Next Ambition.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—It is claimed by McKinley's friends here that Senator Quay will be made chairman of the Republican national committee in case Governor McKinley is nominated. During the fight in Pennsylvania Quay had much outside help from McKinley's friends.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

BOSTON, Aug. 30.—The grand encampment of Knights Templar elected Right Eminent Sir Warren Larue Thomas of Kentucky, grand master, to succeed Most Eminent Sir Hugh McCurdy. The following officers were then elected:

Deputy grand commander, Very Eminent Sir Reuben H. Lloyd of San Francisco; grand generalissimo, Very Eminent Sir Henry D. Stoddard of Texas; grand captain general, Very Eminent Sir George M. Moulton of Illinois; grand senior warden, Very Eminent Sir Henry W. Rugg of Rhode Island; grand junior warden, Very Eminent Sir W. B. Mellis of Cincinnati; grand treasurer, Sir H. Wales Lines of Connecticut; grand recorder, Sir W. H. May. The election of officers ended, the encampment took up the question of revising the code, which consumed the time until adjournment.

TO MEET THE VALKYRIE.

Cup Committee Formally Selects the Defender.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—The third so-called trial race between the Defender and Vigilant, which took place during the day, was a good deal of a farce. The Defender won over a course of 10 miles to windward and return by 5 mins. and 12 secs., when she could have passed the finish line anywhere from 8 to 10 minutes ahead of the Vigilant if she had been sailed for all she was worth.

The Vigilant on the other hand was sailed, as she always is, in the most sportsmanlike manner. White caps appeared here and there, but there was no sea that could be called heavy, or even choppy.

The America's cup committee formally decided at a meeting held in the afternoon that they had selected Defender to meet Valkyrie for the cup.

STATE HAS NO RIGHT.

Treaty With Indians Paramount to Wyoming Game Laws.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—It has been definitely decided by the Indian bureau that no attention will be paid to the game laws of Wyoming where they come into conflict with the treaty of the United States with the Bannock and Shoshone Indians.

The attorney general, after considering the matter, has informed the secretary of the interior and the commissioner of Indian affairs that the rights of the Indians to hunt on unoccupied lands in his opinion are unquestionable, and that he considers that the State of Wyoming has no power to limit this right.

TAYLOR GOES TO THE PEN.

Supreme Court of South Dakota Remands the Ex-Treasurer to the Sheriff.

PIERRE, S. D., Aug. 31.—The supreme court handed down a decision remanding ex-State Treasurer Taylor to the sheriff, who will leave with him for the penitentiary at once. The court holds that the lower court did not exceed its jurisdiction; that after Taylor has served two years he can test the validity of the five year sentence. The opinion was given by Judge Corson. Judge Kellam concurred. By reason of the weight of authorities they make it a rule to correct the decisions of the lower court rather than to annul them, in order to prevent the failure of justice.

Taylor Still Out of the Pen.

PIERRE, S. D., Sept. 2.—Application was made to Judge Fuller for a writ of error in the case of ex-State Treasurer Taylor. Application was made to Judge Fuller because the case comes from his district. The writ is made returnable Sept. 10, and the hearing was made for Sept. 12. Taylor has been released on bail until that time.

TWELVE ARE DEAD.

Result of the Mine Disaster at Central City, Colo.

CENTRAL CITY, Colo., Aug. 31.—Twenty-nine men were working in the Sleepy Hollow and Americus mines when Thursday night's disaster occurred. Those who escaped were engaged at points above the line of the break. All below at the time were almost instantly submerged and their bodies must lie there for weeks. Twelve are dead.

New Canal Scheme.

WINNIPEG, Aug. 31.—Colonel Scobell and Archibald Wright, two prominent Winnipegers, have left here en route to Hudson Bay. Colonel Scobell goes to survey the route for a chain of canals between the waters of Lake Winnipeg and Hudson Bay. The scheme is said to be quite practicable.

PROBATE NOTICE.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, } ss. In Probate Court.
County of Polk. }

Special term August 14th, 1895.

In the matter of the estate of Ferdinand Gaulette, deceased.

On receiving and filing the petition of Frank Gaulette, of the County of Polk, representing, among other things, that Ferdinand Gaulette, late of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 24th day of March, A. D. 1895, at the County of Polk, died intestate, and being an inhabitant of this county at the time of his death, leaving goods, chattels and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is a brother of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to David Coe granted.

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before said Court on Monday, the 9th day of September, A. D. 1895, at 10 o'clock. A. M., at the Probate Office in the city of Crookston in said county.

Ordered Further, That notice thereof be given to the heirs of said deceased and to all persons interested, by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 14th day of August, A. D. 1895.

Those Awful Telegrams.

"What is it, Mamie?"

"It's a boy, mum, with a telegraft."

"A telegram? Oh, ask him if James is killed!"

"He says he doesn't know, mum."

"Ask him what he does know about it."

"He says all he knows about it is that its marked 'collect,' and he wants his money."

"Oh, dear! Oh, dear! What shall I do? Here, Mamie, here's the purse. Pay him. Pay him whatever he asks. Oh, my poor James! I just knew something would happen to him before he went away this morning! Will they bring him home in an ambulance, Mamie?"

"I s'pose so, mum. Maybe you'd better read the telegraft."

"I can't! I can't! Oh, it serves me right for not kissing him three times when he left. And we've been married such a short time too!"

"Why don't you open the telegraft, mum?"

"Well, I suppose I must; but, oh, I can't tell you how I dread it!"

A Liberal Education.

The late Professor Huxley held this opinion as to what constitutes a liberal education:

The man has a liberal education who has been so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will and does with ease and pleasure all the work that, as a mechanism, it is capable of; whose intellect is a clear, cold logical engine, with all its parts of equal strength and in smooth working order, ready, like the steam engine, to be turned to any kind of work and spin the gossamers as well as forge the anchors of the mind; whose mind is stored with a knowledge of the great and fundamental truths of nature and of the laws of her operations; one who, no stunted ascetic, is full of life and fire, but whose passions are trained to come to halt by a vigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience; who has learned to love all beauty, whether of nature or of art, to hate all vileness and to respect others as himself. Such a one, and no other, has had a liberal education.

Unequal Distribution.

"I've been reading a strange story in the paper," said Miss Sereleaf to her friend, Mrs. Snaggs.

"What is it?"

"It's about a man who came home after an absence of 12 years and found his wife married to another."

"What's strange about that? I've heard of such things."

"Both men claim the woman."

"Well?"

"Well, I think that is very unfair. Some women wait year after year for a husband who never comes, and others have two men claiming her at one time. I think matters are arranged very unequally in this world."

And Miss Sereleaf sat down and wrung her hands.—Pittsburg Chronicle-

Do You Want to Stop Tobacco?

You Can Be Cured While Using It.

The habit of using tobacco grows on a man until grave diseased conditions are produced. Tobacco causes cancer of the mouth and stomach; dyspepsia, loss of memory, nervous affections, congestion of the retina and wasting of the optic nerve; resulting in impairment of the vision, even to the extent of blindness; dizziness, or vertigo; tobacco asthma; nightly suffocation, dull pain in region of the heart, followed later by sharp pains, palpitation and weakened pulse, resulting in fatal heart disease. It also causes loss of vitality.

QUIT BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE.

To quit suddenly is too severe a shock to the system, as tobacco—to an inveterate user, becomes a stimulant that his system continually craves. "BACO-CURO" is a scientific and reliable vegetable remedy, guaranteed to be perfectly harmless, and which has been in use for the last 23 years, having cured thousands of habitual tobacco users—smokers, chewers and snuff-dippers.

You can use all the tobacco you want while taking "Baco-Curo." It will notify you when to stop. We give a written guarantee to permanently cure any case with three boxes, or refund the money with ten per cent interest.

"Baco-Curo" is not a substitute, but a reliable and scientific cure—which absolutely destroys the craving for tobacco without the aid of will power, and with no inconvenience. It leaves the system as pure and free from nicotine as the day you took your first chew or smoke.

Sold by all druggists at $1.00 per box, three boxes (thirty day's treatment and guaranteed cure) $2.50, or sent direct upon receipt of price. Send six two-cent stamps for sample box, booklet and proofs free. Eureka Chemical and Manufacturing Co., Manufacturing Chemists, La Crosse, Wisconsin. [17-24]

Public Spirited Citizens

Should take a delight in adding anything to our town or county in the educational line which is valuable, unique and is not found in other communities. Our townsman, C. E. Misner, tells us he has an opportunity to place in our city a fine three and a half inch astronomical telescope, which will be for the educational benefit of our citizens. There is not as fine a telescope anywhere in our state, except at Carlton college, Northfield, where they have a fine astronomical observatory. Mr. Misner says that Prof. Hicks' paper, Word and Works, of St. Louis, offers him this fine instrument if he will get up a club of 800 subscribers to the paper. He is willing to put in a considerable part of his time and make a great effort to secure this fine telescope. If our citizens give him proper support it will not be a very hard matter to secure it. Word and Works is a fine monthly magazine and is well worth $1 a year, the subscription price. Mr. Misner will take subscriptions to this paper and every subscriber will have the privilege of looking through the fine telescope, which will be put up at Lynne's photograph gallery, free of charge. You get your money's worth if you do not look through the telescope, for Word and Works is a splendid family monthly and cheap at $1.00, but you have the satisfaction of knowing also that you have contributed toward the addition to our county of a fine instrument, not to be equaled by anything in northwestern Minnesota. Mr. Misner, or his agent, will be around to see the people of the county within the next six weeks and we hope he will receive encouragement wherever he goes. [15-tf]

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

First Publication Aug. 29, 1895.
Last Publication Oct. 10. 1895.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed by Henry M. Secord and Mabel A. Secord, his wife, mortgagors, to MINNESOTA SAVING FUND & INVESTMENT COMPANY, mortgagee, dated March first 1890, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Polk, on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1890, at 10:50 o'clock A. M. in Book 52 of Mortgages on Page 110, conveying and mortgaging the following described land and premises, situate in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: Lot Twenty-eight (28) in Block Four (4) Traill's Addition to East Grand Forks according to the plat of said Addition now on file or of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk county.

And whereas, by reason of said default, the power in said mortgage has become operative, and the mortgagee has paid out the sum of Thirty and 32-100 Dollars ($30.32) for taxes past due on said premises, and there is now claimed to be due and is due at the date hereof on said mortgage and the debt secured thereby and for taxes, the sum of Six hundred and twelve & 97-100 Dollars ($612.97) and no action or proceeding at law has been instituted to recover said mortgage indebtedness or any part thereof

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale therein contained and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of said above described premises by the sheriff of said Polk county at public auction, at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston, county of Polk, state of Minnesota, on Saturday the 12th day of October A. D. 1895, at ten o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount which will then be due on said mortgage and the debt secured thereby, together with the amount paid for said taxes and the costs and charges of foreclosure and Fifty Dollars ($50) attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage.

Dated at Minneapolis, Minn., Aug. 26th A. D. 1895.

Power of the Human Jaws.

Dr. G. V. Black, a dentist of Jacksonville, Fla., has made some interesting experiments upon the force exerted by the human jaws in the ordinary mastication of food, and also the greatest force which the jaws are capable of exerting. By means of a spring instrument provided with a registering device he took records of about 150 "bites" of different persons. Of these 50 have been preserved as characteristic of the ordinary man, woman and child. The smallest pressure recorded was 30 pounds, by a little girl 7 years old. This was with the incisors. Using her molars, the same child exerted a force of 65 pounds. The highest record was made by a physician of 35. The instrument used only registered 270 pounds, and he closed it together without apparent effort. There was no method of determining how far above 270 pounds he could have gone. This test was made with the molars. Several persons exceeded a force of 100 pounds with the incisors and 200 with the molars. The physical condition of the persons experimented upon seemed to have little bearing upon the result. Dr. Black is of the opinion that the condition of the peridental membranes is the controlling factor, rather than muscular strength. Dr. Black found that in the habitual chewing of food much more force is exerted than is necessary.

Fidelity and Affection of a Horse.

In the "Memoirs of General Count de Segur," an aid-de-camp of Napoleon, recently published, the following affecting incident is related:

I have said that during the nocturnal attack of the Ukra, on Dec. 23, I was unhorsed. My animal had been wounded by a bullet in his chest, from which the blood was streaming, and as he could no longer carry me I had been forced to leave him, loading his equipment on my shoulders. When I had reached our first outpost, about 300 paces off, I sat down to rest before the fire, in some grief at the loss of my mount, when a plaintive sound and an unexpected contact caused me to turn my head. It was the poor beast, which had revived and had dragged itself in the wake of my footsteps. In spite of the distance and the darkness, it had succeeded in finding me, and recognizing me by the light of the campfire had come up groaning to lay its head on my shoulder. My eyes filled with tears at this last proof of attachment, and I was gently stroking it, when, exhausted from the blood it had lost, and its efforts to follow me, in the midst of the men, who were as surprised and touched as myself, it fell down, struggled for a moment and expired.

Urfa, the Ancient Edessa.

Built half way up the Jebli Nimrud, on a hill above a rushing torrent, it never lacks water or the sound of the perpetual fountain that gained for it in the old days the name Callirrhoe. Water in basins, in drinking places, in small mills; water in the torrents, in the springs and down the sides of streets; everywhere is heard the same bubbling sound so dear to oriental ears. And with it are trees innumerable, great forest trees in the gardens, with walnuts and pomegranates, and fruit of all sorts; gardens everywhere, within and without the town, and a thing seldom to be seen in an eastern town, the large courtyard of the Serai grass grown, with seats and spreading trees on either side.

The bazaars, too, and the streets seem all to share in the charm that water lends. Nowhere else are there such vaulted corridors, tall and wiry, for the market, such splendid caravansaries, built by some magnificent old Turk, of an order since passed away, and where, above all, can be matched the exquisite mosque of Ibrahim-el-Khalil—Abraham, the friend of God—with its stately minaret and marble courtyards reflected in the silent shady pool?—"Six Months In a Syrian Monastery," O. H. Parry.

A Wire Walking Rat.

At the corner of Market and Broad streets, Newark, N. J., there is a thick network of telegraph wires and telephone cables. Late one afternoon the loiterers about the corner witnessed a curious incident. From the roof of the Firemen's insurance building a cable wire extends across Market street to the Postal Telegraph office.

A rat was seen on the wire over the insurance building. He moved slowly along the wire, and by the time he had reached the middle of the street he had a crowd below him that would have delighted the heart of Blondin. He paid no attention to the upturned faces, but continued slowly but surely on his way until he reached the Postal Telegraph building. He lightly leaped from the roof and disappeared.—Philadelphia Record.

Bogus Leather In Shoes.

"For years," said a Maine manufacturer, "shoes of a cheap grade have been made of what is known as leather board. It is a compressed paste. There is a factory in my state which turns out tons of it every month. Many of these shoes are sent to Central and South America, and, as a matter of fact, thousands are sold here.

"As long as the weather is dry they wear first rate, but when you strike a rain you're gone almost surely. Two wettings, and you want to look out. When you invest in shoes, be sure they are what you want. Leather is expensive, and you can't cover your feet with it for a trifle."—New York World.

Dean Hole and the Oxford Snob.

Dean Hole, the distinguished English churchman, dearly loves a good joke. One day a somewhat snobbish Oxford friend of his, wishing to impress upon the dean the high social character of his familiar acquaintances, wrote him a letter, beginning:

"My dear countess," and then scratching out "countess" substituted "Hole."

Whereupon the dean, not to be outdone, began his reply, "My dear queen," and then drew his pen through "queen" and substituted "Dick."

CONQUEST OF THE NORTHWEST.

It Was Acquired From the British by Force of Arms.

In 1776, when independence was declared, the United States included only the 13 original states on the seaboard. With the exception of a few hunters, there were no white men west of the Alleghany mountains, and there was not even an American hunter in the great country out of which we have since made the states of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin. All this region north of the Ohio river then formed a part of the province of Quebec. It was a wilderness of forests and prairies, teeming with game and inhabited by many warlike tribes of Indians.

Here and there through it were dotted quaint little towns of French creoles, the most important being Detroit, Vincennes, on the Wabash, and Kaskaskia and Kahokia, on the Illinois. These French villages were ruled by British officers commanding small bodies of regular soldiers or Tory rangers and creole partisans. The towns were completely in the power of the British government. None of the American states had actual possession of a foot of property in the Northwestern territory.

The northwest was acquired at the time of the Revolution only by armed conquest, and if it had not been so acquired it would have remained a part of the British Dominion of Canada.

The man to whom this conquest was due was a famous backwoods leader, a mighty hunter, a noted Indian fighter—George Rogers Clark. He was a very strong man, with light hair and blue eyes, of a good Virginian family, who, early in his youth, embarked on the adventurous career of a backwoods surveyor, exactly as Washington and so many other young Virginians of spirit did at that period. He traveled out to Kentucky soon after it was opened up by Boone and lived there for a year, either at the stations or camping by himself in the woods, surveying, hunting and making war against the Indians like any other settler. But all the time his mind was bent on vaster schemes than were dreamed of by the men around him. He had his spies out in the Northwestern territory and became convinced that with a small force of resolute backwoodsmen he could conquer it for the United States. When he went back to Virginia, Governor Patrick Henry entered heartily into Clark's schemes and gave him authority to fit out a force for his purpose.—Theodore Roosevelt in St. Nicholas.

WOMEN IN FRANCE.

They Are Not Only the Stronger but the Better Half In That Country.

Women are the stronger as well as the better half of France. They do everything but build houses. The best inspector in the French custom house is a woman. She is in the Havre office, and she has a nose that can detect dutiable goods without opening a lock. She is naturally amiable and slow to anger, but woe to the foreigner or countryman who provokes her ire.

There is no sadder spectacle in the republic of France than the women shoe polishers, who doze under the sheds of the markets and quay, one eye shut and t'other fixed on the bootbox over the way, patiently waiting for trade. They ask 5 cents and accept 2 cents for their unwomanly work.

At Thiers, the blackest town in France, the women sit outside of the grimy little machine shops mating scissor blades and polishing knife and scissor handles. The stream that turns the 10,000 little mill wheels is blacker than the Chicago river, and as the furnaces never burn without belching the toilers and their devoted lifelong apprentices are sometimes Malay and sometimes Mongolian, but seldom Caucasian in color.

Not long ago a college woman went down to Thiers to teach school for the winter. The promise of 30 pupils was a temptation, but on reaching the colony of soot begrimed and smoke stained smithies she found that the position paid $5 a month, and the teacher was expected to furnish the fuel for the winter.—Philadelphia Times.

Sweet Peas.

Whether sweet peas can be successfully planted in autumn depends largely on the latitude, says Garden and Forest. In the southern states fall planting is a necessity, for this is the only way to give the plants a cool soil in which to make a strong, early root growth. Coming farther north, fall planting is safe up to perhaps the latitude of Washington, where the chances are about equal between planting in late autumn and in February. In southern California peas must be brought into bloom as early as February, although the nights are so cool there that they may be planted during any month in the year. The rule observed by the large seed growers is to plant just ahead of the rainy season. Indeed they have acres of volunteer sweet peas—that is, from seed which were scattered on the ground during the harvest—and 45 miles south of San Francisco these volunteer plants are in bloom by the 1st of May and often early in April.

Dr. Wilde's Queer Will.

By the terms of the will of one Dr. Wilde of St. Ives parish, Huntingdonshire, England, his trustees were directed to expend £50 in the purchase of a piece of land in St. Ives, the annual rent of which was to be set aside for the purchase of six Bibles at a cost of 7 shillings each. To decide who shall have them he requested his trustees to "prepare a saucer with three dice upon the altar table of the parish church and let the Bibles be raffled for."

THE pops are out of a job this year. No farmers are grumbling over poor crops and hard times.

SHREWD business men, who have a few dollars to invest, are quietly putting their money into farm lands. They can readily see that it means at least 100 per cent. profit inside of a year.

THE Russian bear is growling and war may be the result. He has fixed his eye on Corea and desires Corea for his meat. Meanwhile he is quietly sticking pins into the little Jap and trying to induce him to rake out that chestnut.

THE great state of Minnesota will be on exhibition next week, or its products at least and that it will be a creditable showing goes without saying. Our Minnesota farmers, as a rule are a progressive lot and the God of Nature has blessed them with a crop of which they are justly proud, and it will be a pleasure to them to show to all who attend just what Minnesota can do when she sets about it.

THE efforts made by the life insurance companies to convict Mrs. Perkins of the murder of her twin sister shows to what length these companies will go to prevent paying their policies. The coroner's jury exonerated Mrs. Perkins and we, for one, do not believe that the poor woman is guilty of the fearful crime, the fearful and unnatural crime the company is trying so hard to convict her of. At this rate it will soon be a dangerous thing for a man to insure his life for the benefit of his wife for fear, if he should be taken away some insurance company would straightway put the poor woman in jail and keep her there till she had exhausted the insurance defending herself.

OUTSIDERS, who are watching the current of events in Polk county through the medium of the JOURNAL, will notice a marked difference in the yields of wheat reported ranging all the way from 10 to 40 bushels per acre. While in some cases this marked difference may be attributed in part to locality, it is not true in all cases and, as a rule, simply shows the difference in methods—the difference in men. Some men will make a fair living off a sand-hill while others will starve to death on the most fertile soil in the county. These crop reports are an object lesson that should be of value to our own people, as well as items of interest to outsiders. The 35 and 40 bushel crops show what the soil can be made to do, the 6 and 10 bushel crops show what the methods pursued accomplishes. Time has demonstrated beyond a peradventure that Polk county soil is among the best wheat producing soils in the world—when properly handled.

Late Literary News.

Fiction and Travel are the strong points of the September Cosmopolitan, which, by the way, illustrates better than any previous number the perfection of its plant for printing a magazine of the highest class. Conan Doyle, H. H. Boyesen and Clark Russell are among the story tellers. A well known New York lawyer relates the story of "A Famous Crime—the murder of Dr. Parkman by Professor Webster. A delightful sketch of "An English Country House-Party is from the pen of Nina Larre Smith—the house at which she visited being no less than the historic Abbotsford, still occupied by the direct descendants of Sir Walter Scott. "The Realm of the Wonderful" is descriptive of the strange forms of life discovered by science in the ocean's depths, and is superbly illustrated in a surprising and marvelous way by the author, who is a member of the Smithsonian staff. An article on Cuba is timely. Without bothering the reader with unnecessary description of the famous yachts now so much talked of, The Cosmopolitan presents four full-page illustrations showing these noted boats. Thomas Moran again contributes a series of the most exquisite landscapes of western scenery, twelve in number, illustrating an article by Col. John A. Cockerill, on "Modern Utah." And it may be said that no more beautifully illustrated number of The Cosmopolitan has ever been given to the public.

THE STATE FAIR

At the Twin Cities this year will be a revelation to you. Don't fail to take it in—Northern Pacific runs vestibuled trains—ride to the Fair in ease and comfort.

THIEF RIVER FALLS ITEMS

[From the Press.]

Sheriff Steenerson was transacting official business in the city Friday.

Asst. Supt. Gouler, held teachers' examination in the school house Friday and Saturday. A large number of teachers were present.

Banker Johnson has forwarded a number of grain and vegetable samples to the state fair for exhibition. They were the finest obtainable in these parts and will come as near carrying off the persimmons as any.

J. W. Rogers, manager of Bangs & Cos. mercantile business at Red Lake Falls, with his wife and children, and Messrs. Hamilton and Hule Mumford,, of Glyndon, visited Mr. and Mrs. Mussey Saturday.

Albert Christianson made a very suspicious trip to Crookston the first of the week. It is not known, however, whether he deposited a couple of dollars with the clerk of court or not but it is intimated that he did.

The east side school has just received a new and elaborate outfit of school supplies consisting of maps, charts, globe, etc., purchased through Ira C. Richardson. They are also to be congratulated on the adoption of free text-books and in possession of one of the most beautiful and best equipped buildings in the county. The dispatch with which the new building was erected on the ruins of the old, speaks well for the business tact and energy of the school officers. Red Lake Rapids may be proud of its school facilities and no doubt the demand will be sufficient to require a primary teacher. School opens on Tuesday next, Monday being Labor Day, a legal holiday.

East Grand Forks Items

[From The Courier.]

Garret Murphy threshed 750 bushels of wheat from sixteen acres. The land is situate on the Point. Forty-seven bushels to the acre is the highest yield which has ever come under our personal observation.

Chas. E. Keller is rejoicing over the arrival of a son, who came to his home on Tuesday.

Prof. and Mrs. Christy returned on Wednesday from their eastern trip.

E. R Jacobi was in Fosston on Tuesday, at which point Mr. Jacobi will operate an elevator.

The farmers are on top this year, notwithstanding the discouraging prices of wheat.

Many farmers will stack their grain as it is impossible for all to thresh out of the shock.

D. W. Hines, who first conceived the idea of building a farmers' railroad, was in the city the greater part of last week in the interest of his scheme. The road starts from Deer River, N. D., where it connects with the Soo. From there it follows a direct westerly course, striking such towns as Thief River Falls and Warren, Minn., Drayton and St. Thomas, N. D., and according to the survey, passes very near Langdon. The road as proposed will be 400 miles in length and the western terminus will be Portal, also on the Soo system. Mr. Hines expects material assistance from the capitalists of this city, and the stock books are open for their subscriptions.

From the Advocate.

The Acme House is no more. In the future that building will be known as St. Joseph Hospital, and from what we can learn it is now ready for patients.

Our city schools were announced to open on Monday, Sept. 2d, but on account of that's being Labor Day they will not commence business till the following morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Hunter left on the N. P. Thursday evening for Crookston to hear Foote Bros., who are now in that city. They returned to-day on the Fosston Flyer.

The citizens of Crookston are agitating the erection of a cold storage building in that city, where a regular market for farmers produce will be established. Produce of all kinds will be purchased at a fair profit over production to the farmer, and if he is not satisfied with the price, it will be shipped for him and a small commission charged. This scheme, if properly carried out, will certainly be a great boon to Crookston and vicinity.

Euclid Items.

Dr. and Mrs. Chapin drove to Crookston, Wednesday afternoon, accompanied by Mrs. Powell who departed for her home at Minneapolis the same evening.

Mrs. J. D. McFee, of Lockhart, who has been visiting with her mother, Mrs. Wm. Davidson, departed for Crookston Thursday evening, accompanied by Misses Hattie Davidson and Emma Woodall.

Messrs. Wm. and Charlie Attix, of Mentor are over helping on S. Currie's threshing machine.

The hard times social given by the I. O. G. T., last Friday night, was not very well attended, owing partly to the inclemency of the weather, but more so to the busy time at which it was held. Just at present, when all indications point to the revival of good times, people do not feel like leaving their work to attend a hard-times social as they have already experienced enough hard times in reality. Those who attended, however, had a very enjoyable time. Will Tate and Miss Mary Goosen received the prizes "fur hevin the worst lookin' rigs in the rume."

Alfred and Miss Elsie Campion were down from Angus, Friday night to attend the social.

Elder Vernon Harrington and brother, Anson, of Bellevue, Iowa, arrived Saturday morning to spend a short visit with their brother, C. E. Harrington and also help increase the scarcity of chickens.

Peter E. Keeley has left his position on the Soo and is home on a visit. He will soon be numbered with the Great Northern employees.

Elder Harrington delivered an interesting sermon to a small congregation at the church last Sabbath.

Mr. George Rich, of Grand Forks spent Sunday with his sister, Mrs. C. E. Harrington.

School was opened Tuesday with Prof. Wishard, of Crookston, at the head. The attendance was small but will increase as the fall work decreases.

Contractor Vallentine began work on the new Misner residence Tuesday morning.

Mr. Fred Tiedt, Sr., of Argyle, spent Sunday in the village.

A valuable cow belonging to Nick Engle strayed on to the track Saturday morning and was tossed off by the train. The animal's injuries will prove fatal and the loss will be keenly felt by Mr. Engle.

Howard and Pearl Misner, of Crookston, spent Monday with their cousin, Harvey Misner.

Misses Della and Ruth Hancock, Mrs. J. S. Chapin and daughter, Nellie, accompanied by Miss Leora Davies, of Angus, took Monday evening's train for Moorhead. Mrs. Chapin will return the latter part of the week after seeing the young ladies safely installed at the Normal school.

Miss Anna Hancock left for Fargo, the latter part of last week to take up her year's work in the schools of that city.

Tuesday afternoon, one of John Goosen's machine hands was working around the straw stacker his clothes became entangled on a bolt and he was wound up tight to the machine. He was a powerful fellow and his shirt proved equally as strong, as both machine and engine were both brought to a stand-still, one belt being burned by slipping over the pulleys so as to be rendered useless. The man's shirt was wound so tightly around him that it had to be cut away from his body in order to release him. He was not injured in the least. That shirt was purchased of H. C. Misner & Co., the fact of which fully accounts for its extraordinary strength.

P. Fairweather received a telegram Monday afternoon, conveying the news of the death of his little grandson, the bright, five-year-old son of Robert Fairweather, of Minneapolis.

The Invincible Armada.

The invincible armada, was a famous naval expedition sent by Philip II of Spain against England in 1588. It consisted of 130 vessels, 2,430 great guns, 4,575 quintals of powder, nearly 20,000 soldiers, above 8,000 sailors and more than 2,000 volunteers. It arrived in the English channel on July 19 and was defeated the next day by Admiral Howard, who was seconded by Drake, Hawkins and Frobisher. Eight fire ships having been sent into the Spanish fleet, they bore off in great disorder. Profiting by the panic, the English fell upon them and captured or destroyed a number of their ships, and Admiral Howard maintained a running fight from July 21 to July 27, with such effect that the Spanish commander, despairing of success, resolved to return home, and as escape through the English channel was prevented by contrary winds he undertook to sail around the Orkneys, but the vessels which still remained to him were dispersed by storms or shipwrecked among the rocks and shallows on different parts of the Scottish and Irish coast, and upward of 5,000 men were drowned, killed or taken prisoners. Of the whole armada 53 ships only returned to Spain, and these in a wretched condition. The English lost but one ship.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Scholars of France.

As a sample of the payment of distinguished scholars in this country it may be mentioned that M. Gaston Boissier, who was lately elected life secretary of the Academy, only received $600 annually as rector of the College de France. In his new position he is entitled to $1,200, or double the sum paid him as head of the great educational establishment over which Ernest Renan ruled. The immortals, according to the foundation rules, are supposed to be paid $300 yearly, in addition to their fees for attending meetings. As a matter of fact, however, they only receive $200 annually. The remainder of the sum forms a sinking fund, out of which eight aged academicians get allowances, if their private annual income falls short of $1,200.—Paris Letter.

A Grand Fair is what the Minnesota State Fair of 1895 will be—it will educate you to go there. Send your boys and girls if you can't go—give your wife a chance to go and also see the improvements in the Twin cities. Reduced rates via the Northern Pacific.

If you are in the city about mealtime, after repairs, don't forget that you can get the best meal in town at McKinnon's restaurant on Second street.

The State Fair an Assured Success.

Every department of the state fair which opens at Hamline, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis, on Sept. 9th, will be crowded to the limit this year. Secretary Randall writes us that for the first time in years the society has been compelled to turn applicants for space away. This result is due largely to the banner crop which has been harvested in Minnesota, and the satisfaction of the people with the result. The management of the fair have provided an attractive series of entertainments aside from the exhibition itself, and the Twin Cities, St. Paul and Minneapolis, are to provide a series of entertainments in the form of parades, bicycle carnivals, street illuminations and military pageants. Fair week in St. Paul and Minneapolis will be a gala week. The railroads will make a rate one fare for the round trip during all the week, good for return as late as Monday, the 16th.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30, 1895.

The confidence game that Mr. Cleveland and Senator Brice are trying to play upon each other is being watched by the knowing ones, as it is bound to be very interesting as it progresses. These two Democrats have not worked together heretofore but now that each thinks he can use the other they are to form a copartnership. Mr. Cleveland wants friends in the senate very badly, and, although Senator Brice is not an orator, his ways are very persuasive—when it is to his interest to make them so—and he may be able to render Mr. Cleveland valuable aid in the senate by silencing Democrats who may be disposed to make speeches criticising the administration, if in no other way. Brice is not undertaking the task found so burdensome during the last session of congress by Gray, of Delaware, Vilas, of Wisconsin, and Mills, of Texas, from a philanthropic motive. He isn't constructed that way. He thinks he can use Grover Cleveland or he would never have agreed to become his champion on the floor of the senate. Brice has developed presidential aspirations. He has had Campbell nominated for governor of Ohio by the Democrats, in order that his overwhelming defeat may remove him from the field of presidential possibilities. That will leave the field clear for the presentation of Brice's name as Ohio's candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, and Brice believes the friendship of Mr. Cleveland will help his aspirations. Perhaps so. But will that friendship be given after Brice's purpose becomes known to Mr. Cleveland? Keep your eye on this Brice-Cleveland partnership. Mark the moves of the partners.

Hon. Lloyd Lowndes, the Republican nominee for governor of Maryland, passed through Washington, this week. He is very confident of his election, although he frankly says that it will be no childs-play to oust the Democrats who have controlled the state government for nearly thirty years without a break. The Maryland campaign will be fought on local issues exclusively. The tariff and silver will not cut any figure. At last year's congressional elections the state went Republican by about 3,000, and this year with the Republicans united and enthusiastic and the Democrats divided and indifferent it is not surprising that the Republicans should expect to carry the state. A gentleman who has just returned from a trip through the Bay Shore section of the state, says if the feeling is the same in other sections and the oystermen and farmers vote as they talk the state will give a Republican majority of thirty thousand. This gentleman says he did not meet a single Democrat who expressed any confidence of carrying the state, while he met scores who said they thought the state would go Republican and that they didn't care if it did.

It is whispered in the most exclusive cuckoo circles that the vacancy in the U. S. Supreme Court has been placed at the disposal of Mr. E. Ellerey Anderson, of New York, who is one of the original cuckoos, and who is, like Mr. Cleveland and so many of his appointees, a corporation lawyer. According to these cuckoo whisperings, if E. Ellery wants the place he has only to say so and it will become his, after Mr. Cleveland has made all use possible of the vacancy as a persuader, to make prominent Democrats see the financial and other questions as he sees them.

Just now there is considerable talk among those who are usually used by the administration when there is a desire to ascertain how the public would take anything about the intention of Secretary Olney to give us a vigorous and thoroughly American foreign policy from this time on. This may or may not be true about the future, but there is certainly nothing either vigorous or American in the exasperatingly slow manner in which the case of poor Waller is being handled by the Department of state. Perhaps things will get a more rapid move on after Secretary Olney returns from his vacation. One thing may be set down as certain. If Secretary Olney will take a bold stand in our foreign policy he can count upon the staunch support of the Republicans in congress.

Senator Quay's Washington friends are rejoicing over his great personal victory, and predicting that it will result in his being asked to manage the Presidential campaign.

The September number of the North American Review presents a table of contents wide in range and most authoritatively treated. The opening article is by the Right Rev. William Croswell Doane, Bishop of Albany, who forcibly illustrates "Why Women do not Want the Ballot." Admiral P. H. Colomb, of the Royal Navy, discusses "The Evolution of the Blue Jacket," while in "Reminiscences of Prof. Huxley," Sir William H. Flower throws a charming light upon the private life of the great scientist. "The Christian Endeavor Movement," is prominently brought before the public by the Rev. Francis E. Clarke, D. D., the President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, and in a thoughtful paper entitled "Trend of National Progress," Prof. R. H. Thurston, of Cornell University, asserts that the tendency of our own nation is toward a future of large and well distributed wealth, culture and content. Henry Farquhar, assistant statistician of the agricultural department, writes interestingly of "Crop Conditions and Prospects," Max O'Rell very wittily gives his opinion of "The Petty Tyrants of America," and Edward W. Blyden, Liberian Minister to the Court of St. James, eloquently dwells upon "The African Problem." The Hon. James H. Eckels, comptroller of the currency, writes hopefully of "Our Reviving Business," while in "A Brush with the Bannocks," Major-General Nelson A. Miles, U. S. A., favors the Review with a chapter from the advance sheets of his book "From New England to the Golden Gate," soon to be published by the Werner Company, of Chicago. The ninth installment of the "Personal History of the Second Empire," by Albert V. Vandam, deals with the "Intrigue and Corruption" of that eventful period. "The Situation in Cuba" is described by Senor Don Segundo Alvarez, late Mayor of Havana, who, of course, views affairs from a governmental standpoint. A most important contribution to the political literature of the day is that on "The Outlook for Ireland," by the Right Hon. the Earl of Crewe (Lord Houghton), late Lord Lieutenant of Ireland under the recent Liberal party. Other topics admirably considered are: "St Anthony's Bread," by Chas. Robinson; "Then and Now," by Edward P. Jackson, and "Country Roads and Trolleys," by John Gilmer Speed.

DR. PARKHURST'S EARLY TRAINING.

The Home He Was Born, Loved and Chastised In.

If I speak confidently and feelingly upon this point it is because I know how much I owe personally to the fact of being brought up in a home where I was taught to appreciate the greatness of righteous authority, the vastness of its meaning, the advantage of submitting to it, and the serious risk of resisting it, writes the Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst D. D., in the September Ladies' Home Journal. No anarchist could ever have graduated from the home I was born, loved and chastised in. Such experience makes me pity the children who know no discipline but that of caresses and sweetmeats and makes me more than pity the parents who have neither the discernment in their mental constitution nor the iron in their moral constitution to perceive that nothing which a child can know or can win can begin to take the place of sense of superior authority, and of the holy right of that authority to be respected, revered and obeyed. The moral strength of a man is measured pretty accurately by the cordial reverence with which he regards whatsoever has the right to call itself his master. Estimated by this criterion the average American boy is a discouraging type of humanity, and is a severe reflection upon the crude attempts at manhood manufacture evinced by the typical American home. If our homes cannot turn out children that will respect authority, there will be no authority in a great while either at home, in the state or anywhere else that will be worth their respecting.

Lewis Ellington has been doing great work collecting samples for the state fair. Hardly a day has passed for the past ten days that he has not been out collecting and the result will be apparent in a much finer showing than the county would otherwise have had. He has proved a veritable hustler in this matter.

The Moorhead base ball club, after hiring all of the professional players it could secure, went up to Grand Forks on Friday, of last week, and tackled Co. F's base ball team, and got blind-folded, on a score of 7 to 0. Co. F. had Henry Walker for pitcher and McNeal for catcher, and "Reddy" Fleming for short-stop, all members of the Crookston club, which accounts for their phenomenal success.

On Friday of last week the report was circulated that Miss Mabel Arnold had been married on the Wednesday previous to E. J. Caffrey, of Fargo. They were married at Detroit where Miss Mabel was visiting friends for a short time. Miss Mabel Arnold has been a resident of this city for several years where she has made many friends who unite with the JOURNAL in wishing her a long and happy life.

Will Hoch received a sample of apples and grapes raised on the old homestead in Southern Minnesota, sent him by Chris. who is visiting down there. One of the saddest sights that we can imagine was that seen on Fletcher street about 5 o'clock on Monday when a mere boy, who judging from his appearance could not have been more than 14 or 15, came reeling along the sidewalk in a state of maudlin intoxication while several stood about guying him. He was so lost to all sense of shame, manhood and decency as to be indulging in talk that, we have no doubt he would blush to hear from another if he had been in his sober senses—and others were laughing at it, evidently thought it extremely funny. But when you come to reflect upon it, was the boy more to blame than others? With the example set by those older than he, that he is no doubt familiar with from his boyhood? With a law that strictly forbids the sale of liquors to minors, (and no man could by any possible means have considered that mere boy "of age") this mere lad was in a condition bordering upon beastly intoxication! It was indeed a sad sight but one we are glad to say very seldom seen in our city.

The Foote Brothers, the singing evangelists closed a very interesting series of meetings at 3 o'clock on Monday, and took the Great Northern train in the evening for their home in Iowa. The brothers are J. G. and J. W. Foote and they are accompanied by Mrs. J. G. Foote who assists in the song service which are a delightful and attractive feature of the meetings. The exercises consist mainly of bible readings with a short earnest address by the brothers. Their efforts here while specially devoted to the endeavor to arouse a feeling of interest in the unconverted especially among the young, were extended to the endeavor to waken a greater interest in their work in the members of the various churches in this city and the meetings were held in the several churches. These meetings were held each day; one at 10 a. m. and one at 3 p. m. and one at 8 p. m. The Foote Brothers have been doing this kind of work for 11 years in which time they have seen hundreds of people hopefully converted. They are now building a portable tabernacle mostly of iron that can be transported from place to place in which to hold their meetings. They have been laboring in North Dakota since May, beginning at East Grand Forks last day of April, have held meetings at 26 places, holding 286 meetings in all, during which period between 500 and 600 people have been brought to a saving knowledge of Christ. Being here during the busiest season of the year for the farmers, their meetings were not as largely attended as they otherwise would have been, but they were highly enjoyed by all who did attend and should they ever come this way again they may be assured of a right hearty welcome.

On Friday last several carloads of lumber came down on the branch line from Thief River Falls and on Saturday Halvor Steenerson put an attachment upon the lumber claiming it was made from logs owned by Steenerson Bros., that the Meehans had been hired to run from Red Lake. The attorney for the Mehans appeared and set up a counter-claim, alleging a deal of some kind the terms of which had not been fully complied with by the Steenersons and which changed the complexion of things very materially. It is not the province of newspapers to settle cases out of court (though many papers seem to think it is) the case is now in the courts for settlement and the JOURNAL will watch progress and report in due time.

Vacation Time

Is at hand and is gladly welcomed by all, especially those whose duties in life have caused them to greatly run down their system to meet the requirements, physical and mental, forced upon them. With these and others, it is important, whether at home, at the sea-shore or in the country, that some thought be given to diet, and as further assistance to nature, a good building-up medicene like Hood's Sarsaparilla had best be resorted to. If the digestion is poor liver deranged and frequent headaches seems to be the rule, Hood's will change all this and enable everyone to return to their home and business in a refreshed state of mind and bodily health.

Chris. Hoch arrives this week from a visit to the old home in Wabasha county.

Mrs. E. M. Walsh and two sons went to Grand Forks on Saturday for a visit.

Polk county will make a very creditable showing at the State Fair next week.

Miss Minnie Walker has accepted a position in the fruit store of L. & O. Gonyea.

It is said that a daily passenger train will go on the St. Vincent branch soon.

Look out for rain on the 17th and 18th—Grand Forks advertises a fair on those days.

E. C. Davis returned last week from a visit east where he went in the interest of his patent tie.

Prof. Dewart returned, last week, ready to resume his duties in the school room this week.

Nels Mnus has been down at the farm near Fertile superintending the harvesting operations.

Conductor Reed's wife came over from Grand Forks, on Friday, for a visit with friends in the city.

Mrs. Frank Hunt and son, of Red Lake Falls were visiting in the city last week the guest of Mrs. Jos Smith.

Geo. Fontaine has returned from his eastern trip, where he went to buy the fall stock for Fontaine & Anglin.

Uncle Bob Cochrane commenced hauling in his wheat last week. It is said to be No. 1 hard, 25 bushels per acre.

The Helmich Bros. say that their wheat will average over 25 bushels per acre. They are threshing and shipping.

H. F. Brown went down to Ada last week in the interest of "Brown's Select" and other brands of cigars that he makes.

A report reaches the JOURNAL that Herman Wallis, near Euclid, is pounding out wheat that is turning 38 bushels per acre.

The Peavey Elevator Co. are rebuilding the elevator that was destroyed by fire at Holmes station and have it mostly completed.

The divorce case of Mrs. Hans Peterson, on trial on Friday, was taken into consideration by the judge who finally decided to grant the divorce.

Howard and Pearl Misner went up to Euclid to visit relatives on Monday returning on Monday evening so as to be in time for school on Tuesday.

Prof. Wishard left for the scene of his future labors at Euclid on Monday morning to be ready to commence his fall term of school on Tuesday morning.

Rev. Herman P. Fisher returned on Saturday morning from a four week's visit in Massachusetts, looking as though the trip had done him worlds of good.

With the aid of three of Crookston's best ball-players, Walker, McNeal and Fleming, Co. F. was able to do up the Moorhead club to the Queen's taste last Friday.

Lewis Ellington went out to Buffington and Keystone collecting samples for the State fair on Tuesday. He has been doing some splendid work in this line.

Levi Steenerson reports a yield of 1,500 bushels of No. 1 Hard wheat from 50 acres. Thirty bushels per acre is not bad medicene to take these democratic times.

Plenty of prairie chicken hunters in the country these days. The chickens are said to be scarcer than early indications promised; owing, it is thought, to too much wet weather.

A gang of hunters arrived from St. Paul on Monday morning and went north on the St. Vincent line. They had a special dining coach, darkey cook and all the necessary trimmings.

The Minneapolis & Northern Elevator folks commenced putting their elevator in repair to receive the incoming crop, on Tuesday. Farmer Hixson says he will fix his up in a few days also and be prepared to handle the golden this fall.

Men are wanted—and they are wanted bad—not bad men but just common ordinary every day men for threshing—not for threshing the men but just pounding out our 25 to 35 bushel crop of No. 1 Hard wheat. A call for ten to go to Wylie came in on Tuesday.

Atty. F. A. Grady was in from Thief River Falls last week.

A. D. Stephens' son Marcas went over to Grand Forks last week for a visit.

John Ramstad has accepted a position with Berg, the clothier, of Grand Forks.

P. L. Renne went over to Grand Forks on Friday as a delegate to the Modern Woodmen convention.

G. J. Buckeye, of Houston county was in the city last week. He is an expert for the Craver binder people.

Geo. H. Barlow came over from East Grand Forks on Thursday last week with a prisoner for the county jail.

Labor Day was duly observed in this city and vicinity as it should have been—everybody sawing wood.

Jas. Greenhalgh Sr. went out to Maple Lake last week to enjoy life at that famous watering resort for a time.

Receiver W. F. Honey of the N. D. Milling Association came over from Park River, N. D. on business for that concern.

Little Gracie Hawes gave a birthday party to her little friends on Thursday the event being the 14th anniversary of that little lady's life. The little folks enjoyed the occasion immensely.

Aleck McDonald, who has been more or less out of health all summer was taken to the hospital last week where it is hoped with the excellent care he can get that he will soon regain his usual good health.

Sept. 1st prairie chickens were ripe enough to pick and notwithstanding that day was Sunday there was hardly a sportsman of this city who was not early afield. Monday morning there were prairie chickens enough in the markets to last the city until they are gone.

Miss Huggard returned to her home in Georgia, this week. Before she went she was made the recipient of a social treat, by the members of the Presbyterian church society, who presented her with a generous purse in appreciation of her services as organist at that church while she has been in this city.

Dick White, one of the leading Marais farmers came up last week and purchased one team of horses at Martin's barn, to help out cutting the big crop. Dick has a genuine Marais crop of wheat which means anywhere from 25 to 30 bushels per acre or over and he didn't want to see a kernel of it wasted.

Tommy Johnstone has accepted the position of agent for the Bennett, Irwin Horse Importing Co., of Topeka, Kansas. As a thorough horseman Tommy is unexcelled in this county, knows a good horse when he sees it and loves every motion of the animal. He will soon have something good to show in this line.

Comrade D. R. Carr was shot in the arm by a buzz saw on Saturday, and the result is a severe wound and a furlough for a day or so. An edging saw-tooth came out and Dave happened to be standing just where that tooth wanted to go and he got it. It was very fortunate, after all, that it did not strike a vital part.

Chas. Berg was in from the farm near Neby last week. Has just finished threshing his wheat and finds a yield of 26 bushels per acre, No. 1 Hard wheat that weighs 63 lbs. to the stricken bushel. He reports that E. M. Peterson threshed 30 bushels per acre of that same 63lb. wheat. Some damage was done down that way last week's hail storm.

G. L. Reed arrived from Chicago last Friday for a visit of a few days with his grand-daughter Mrs. C. H. Saake, while he attends to his business interests in this county. He will arrange for the building of a new house on the farm that he sold to Mr. Chilback, to take the place of the one burned recently. The house was insured for $600 which will go far towards replacing it.

Chris. Hoch mourns the loss of beautiful water spaniel that used to be seen about his place, and the circumstances indicate that the dog was the victim of poison given it by some miscreant. It would seem to be the most valuable, inoffensive dogs that get the dose every time while the measly, mangy curs seem to bear charmed lives and are seldom removed by poison.

Tally one more for the Marais country. Tommy Johnstone reports that James Roberton's wheat threshed out 28 bushels per acre, 1 Hard, 64 pounds per stricken bushel. Whenever you are talking particularly about wheat-lands don't let this fact escape your observation that that same strip of Polk county best known as "the Marais" is hard, very hard to beat raising wheat—or good, solid, Scotch farmers for the matter o' that.

Strayed.

From section 3 in Audover on Wednesday Aug. 28, one buckskin pony mare. Was staked out and pulled the pin carrying it along with her. A suitable reward is offered for her recovery.

Nervous

People should realize that the only true and permanent cure for their condition is to be found in having

Pure Blood

Because the health of every organ and tissue of the body depends upon the purity of the blood. The whole world knows the standard blood purifier is

Hood's
Sarsaparilla

And therefore it is the only true and reliable medicine for nervous people. It makes the blood pure and healthy, and thus cures nervousness, makes the nerves firm and strong, gives sweet sleep, mental vigor, a good appetite, perfect digestion. It does all this, and cures Scrofula, Eczema, or Salt Rheum and all other blood diseases, because it

M. Cornelius was one of the unfortunate farmers who had a little grain uncut before the storm, to wrestle with the hail and the result was a badly tangled mass for the balance of the cutting. While the grain was not threshed out as badly as he supposed it would have been by such a storm, there was, of course, quite a loss on all that was standing, which was not very much. By the way, Mat is what some weather-beaten old moss-backs would call a tenderfoot in farming, having had a college education and being employed in clerical positions all his life until last year, when he went on to his farm to make that his business in the future, but if he be a "tenderfoot" it would not come amiss for some of the old-timers to watch his smoke and find out the secret of his success as he always has good crops and is making money on the farm. Says he rather enjoys the freedom from office confinement and as to the emoluments he thinks he can make the farm pay him far better than any official position he ever held and he gets more independent enjoyment out of it. The methodical business habits of the office, work to especial advantage on the farm, when backed up by industry and enterprise.

A party of hunters from Buffalo, N. Y., arrived on Tuesday for a season of hunting in Polk county. They will rendezvous near Maple Lake.

Weak and Nervous

Describes the condition of thousands of people at this season. They have no appetite, cannot sleep, and complain of the prostrating effect of warm weather. This condition may be remedied by Hood's Sarsaparilla which creates an appetite and tones up all organs. It gives good health by making the blood pure.

Hood's Pills are the best after-dinner pills, assist digestion, cure headache.

The Grand Forks Herald says that Harry Walker pitched the game of his life on Friday, and that he was ably seconded by McNeal. Well, what's the matter with that other Crookston lad, "Reddy" Fleming? When you figure it down fine the Crookston trio came pretty near winning that game for Co. F. if indeed they did not quite do it.

You've Been Living

Mighty close for two or three years. A better time is at hand. Inaugurate it by a trip to the State Fair—it will be worth your while. Make ready now to go and when the Northern Pacific reduced rates go into effect jump aboard the train and go.

Better than a Circus.

The State Fair this year will be a hummer. The Twin Cities and Fair people are putting in their best licks and want you to come down and see what a show they have—and you ought to do it. Northern Pacific has reduced rates.

BAKE A BATCH OF BISCUITS

Sift one quart of flour, two rounding teaspoonfuls of baking powder, and one teaspoonful of salt into a bowl; add three teaspoonfuls of COTTOLENE and rub together until thoroughly mixed; then add sufficient milk to make a soft dough; knead slightly, roll out about half an inch thick, and cut with a small biscuit cutter. Place a little apart in a greased pan, and bake in a quick oven for fifteen or twenty minutes. These biscuits should be a delicate brown top and bottom, light on the sides, and snowy white when broken open.

The secret of success in this recipe, as in others, is to use but two-thirds as much Cottolene as you used to use of lard. Cottolene will make the biscuit light, delicious, wholesome. Better than any biscuit you ever made before. Try it. Be sure and get genuine Cottolene. Sold everywhere in tins with trade-marks—"Cottolene" and steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every tin.

A KOLA NUT TEST.

It Enables a Sick Soldier to Beat a Well Man In a Twenty-five Mile Tramp.

American surgeons and army officers have for some time been experimenting with the kola nut, with a view of introducing it into the commissary department of the army, to be used in lieu of other food in forced marches where there is little or nothing for the soldiers to eat. Dr. Charles E. Woodruff and Lieutenant Harris of the United States army, stationed at Fort Sheridan, have this spring made experiments which have shown that in forced marches the kola nut gives far better satisfaction for nutritious purposes than ordinary food. Both Dr. Woodruff and Lieutenant Harris found that they were less fatigued from the long walks they took when they ate nothing but the kola than when they ate full rations of ordinary food.

An experiment with the kola nut was made in St. Paul recently, and the result was identical with that of the Fort Sheridan officers. A number of the army officers of Fort Snelling were anxious to see the result of an experiment, and so the test was arranged. Corporal R. P. Wyatt and Private M. C. Olson, both of Company F, started from the Ryan hotel at 8:40 to walk to the West hotel, at Minneapolis, and return to the Ryan at once. Private Olson was not allowed to eat breakfast, but he was given five little reddish nuts about the size and shape of a good sized hickory nut, which he was told to eat slowly on the way. Further than this he was not allowed to eat any food while making the trip. Corporal Wyatt was allowed to eat a good, hearty breakfast and told he could eat and drink what he wished on the way. He was requested to regulate his diet according to the soldier's bill of fare when the larder in the commissary's tent is well stocked.

At 3:50 the two men arrived at the Ryan hotel from their journey to Minneapolis. In giving their accounts of the trip, which comprised a walk of about 25 miles in the hot sun, they plainly showed that the kola nut had proved the more satisfactory diet. Corporal Wyatt had eaten and drank freely as he felt inclined to during the day and came in almost overcome by heat and thoroughly tired and stiff from the long walk. Private Olson, who but recently arose from a bed of sickness and has not fully regained his strength, was much the fresher of the two and had suffered little from heat. He said that he ate two of the nuts on the way to Minneapolis and two on the way back, and that he sat and rested while his companion ate and drank. He said that he never felt better then when he returned from the long tramp, and that he thought that the walk had done him good. He had not felt the need of more food.—Minneapolis Tribune.

BICYCLE MANUFACTURE.

It Is Computed That 700,000 Wheels Will Be Manufactured Here Next Year.

It is estimated that last year (1894) over 200,000 wheels were manufactured by the different companies engaged in their production. This year, with greatly increased facilities and improved machinery, together with a large increase in the number of producers, the product will reach in the neighborhood of 400,000 wheels.

What it will be next year can only be guessed at, as this year's business has been dwarfed and held in check by a positive inability to supply the unparalleled demand for wheels of every description.

New factories contemplate entering this seductive business. Additions are being built to old factories almost equal to the original plant, stocked with the most intricate and up to date machinery, which before March, 1896, will begin to make an impression on the trade that will carry the production to a possible 700,000. This, with every foreign country with an intelligent population already knocking at our doors for a share in this distribution, even in blocks of 500 to 1,000 wheels at a time from individual buyers, will, we prophesy, even with the grand total above suggested for a year's production, leave us in November, 1896, with few if any wheels to carry over into 1897.—Hardware.

Family of Big Men.

There was a reunion of the Coleman family at Tionesta one day last week. Harmon Coleman and his wife are the father and mother, and they are of only ordinary stature. But their sons are extraordinarily big men.

J. F. is 6 feet 5 inches; Henry, 6 feet 2 inches; William, 6 feet 3 inches; J. E., 6 feet 5 inches; S. W., 6 feet 8 inches, and Frank, the short one of the stalwart family, exactly 6 feet. These measurements were all taken in stocking feet. The total height of the entire sestet collectively is 37 feet 6 inches.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

An Egg Sells For $825.

An egg of the great auk has come into the hands of Messrs. Jay, Regent street, for 165 guineas. The specimen was taken in Iceland 65 years ago by a St. Malo shipowner, who bequeathed it to the Comte Raoul de Berace, whose collection was purchased by Baron d'Hamonville. It is slightly cracked, but in coloring and texture is said to be unique.—London Telegraph.

This Is a Great Earth.

A Peculiar Hero.

In spite of the fact that George Moore pretends to make himself the hero of his novels his friends say that he lives a most humdrum existence, the most exciting adventures of his daily life being the eating of three meals a day.—Boston Herald.

THAT DOG NAPOLEON.

HE GREW UP WITH HIS YOUNG MASTER, WHO WAS FOND OF HIM.

Did Some Things Like All Dogs and Other Things Besides—How He Frightened Aunt Chesterfield and Earned a Quarter For His Owner.

I paid a man $2 for him when he was a little pup—the dog, I mean—and he told me—the man did—that if I would treat him kindly and give him plenty of corn bread—give the dog—he would guarantee—the man would—that he would grow up—the dog would grow up—to be an honor to him—to the man.

Napoleon got to be the largest dog and did it in the quickest manner of any dog I ever knew. I wore long curls at that time, I remember, into which boys used to cast burs, which hurt me a good deal, especially when Napoleon would take his claws and try to run them through my locks, although the locks never opened in that way. They were combination locks, I suppose, and I didn't yet have my letters in my head to set the combination on. He also grew very strong, Napoleon did, so that I found it difficult to keep him at home unless I tied him, and even then it bothered me if another dog happened to be going by. Catching sight of that dog, Napoleon would utter a glad cry and bound over the fence, utterly unmindful of the rope or me at the other end of it. Down the street he would prance, giving vent to short barks and drawing the attention of people after him, also myself. Neighbors coming to the windows used to marvel at the black and white streak we made in passing by. Sometimes I wouldn't get home till long after mealtime, which in those days was quite a detriment to me, though not to Napoleon, whose appetite soon became celebrated throughout the whole town, for when he couldn't get a pair of rubbers or a fur muff to slake the gnawings of hunger he would go out and collect the loaves of brown bread that bakers had left upon the adjacent stoops. I wouldn't like to print the things that people used to say about him at such times.

We grew up together—at least Napoleon did, for he had two feet the start of me. We were inseparable. Neighbors said they never saw anything more so, but that was chiefly because I couldn't get the rope unfastened in time.

It was Napoleon's appetite that ultimately accomplished his ruin, just as it has many another man's. Aunt and Uncle Chesterfield came to visit us that fall. They lived at Jay Corners, and really ought never to have gone anywhere else, but there they were, getting out of the stage at our front gate, and what could we do? I heard father say that to mother as they stood looking out of the window together. Uncle Chesterfield wasn't really our uncle, you understand, but just an old friend of father's—I don't know how old, but he looked every day of it, and more. We called him uncle because he appeared that way. Aunt Chesterfield had tic douloureux, which used to cause her to make up the awfulest faces. I realize now that it was from pain, but at that age I used to laugh, whereupon she said I was a wicked boy. She also had a brown wig and rheumatism. Uncle Chesterfield didn't have anything but just warts—I think I counted 70—and Aunt Chesterfield. But I heard father tell mother that was enough.

Mother put them into the spare chamber, where the old fashioned canvas bottom bed was with the white valance. There were also some green worsted lamp mats on the bureau. We all said good night, father wound up the clock and everybody went to bed. I was always a sound sleeper as a boy, so you must know that Aunt Chesterfield had to shriek pretty loud to get me out, but she did it, and could have fetched me, I think, if I had been dead. I got right up and ran into the spare chamber before anybody could stop me.

Aunt Chesterfield was sitting in the middle of the bed in a red flannel nightgown. I didn't know her at first, because her mouth was wide open, shrieking, and her face twisted with tic douloureux, and the whitest, shiniest head you ever saw, which I remembered with copious locks of brown. But I saw how that was in a minute, for there was Napoleon over in the corner with a brown wig in his mouth, which he was tossing and worrying and carrying on dreadfully. Uncle Chesterfield you couldn't see at first, but by and by you found him with his legs stuck through the arms of a rocking chair, and every time he moved Napoleon would growl, not being acquainted with Uncle Chesterfield, and he was almost scared to death.

They took the stage back to Jay Corners the very next day. Mother was dreadfully shocked, but I noticed that father didn't get excited.

"I wonder who let that dog up stairs?" he said musingly after the stage was gone.

I intended to say that I didn't know, but I got to stammering and mixed myself up, and before I realized what I was doing I blurted the truth right out and said that I did. Father gave me a quarter. I didn't know what for, but I supposed at the time that it was for telling the truth.

"But the dog must go," he added. "His appetite is growing too indiscriminative."

So we sold him to a man who kept a farm, and who soon afterward shot him for biting a calf on the legs. Napoleon used to do that to book canvassers when he was with us, and nobody found any fault with him, but on a farm it is different.—W. O. Fuller, Jr., in Rockland Tribune.

FORTUNE IN BLACK DIAMONDS.

Thousands of tons of coal are shipped from the ports of Perth and South Amboy, at the mouth of the Raritan river, every month. It is loaded in vessels for all points along the Atlantic seaboard and many European ports. The coal docks of the Lehigh Valley railroad at Perth Amboy are among the largest in the world. The docks of the Pennsylvania railroad at South Amboy are nearly as large in shipping capacity.

In connection with the handling of such immense quantities of coal one of the most troublesome problems for the railroad companies is to keep their rolling stock in constant motion. It is considered a loss of revenue for a car to remain several days at a given point, and everything is done to facilitate the rapid movement of the cars, both loaded and empty. For a number of years loaded cars were kept standing in the storage yards of the Pennsylvania railroad at South Amboy for weeks at a time. At times the company was embarrassed for want of cars to transport the coal from the mines. The difficulty was finally solved about three years ago. In place of the long string of loaded cars may now be seen immense piles of coal.

When a train arrives from the mines, the various kinds of coal are sorted out and the cars drilled to the proper side track for unloading. In close proximity to each side track stands a large derrick with a movable boom extending diagonally into the air about 80 feet. To this boom is attached a large traveling belt, on which are fastened large buckets. The belt is operated by a small steam engine in charge of the man who manipulates the elevator. As the coal drops from the outlet in the car it falls into the buckets on the elevator belt and is carried to the end of the swinging boom, where it is dropped in the center of the pile and distributed by gravity. The coal remains in these piles until it is required for shipment; then it is loaded in cars and transferred to the docks.

The immense piles of coal usually contain from 10,000 to 12,000 tons each, and are worth from $40,000 to $50,000, according to the market value of the coal. It is frequently the case that there are 12 of these piles of coal in the storage yard, representing a value of from $500,000 to $600,000. It was discovered recently that the coal rusted while in these piles. This did not detract from the burning qualities, but affected the selling value. To prevent this canvas covers were made at a cost of $1,000 each. When the piles of coal are all covered, the storage yard resembles a large circus. The sight of such an immense quantity of coal is viewed with astonishment by strangers, although the residents of South Amboy are so accustomed to it that they never give it a second thought.—New York Telegram.

AN ANCIENT BLOCKHOUSE.

The Bouquet Redoubt the Only One In Existence.

Here in Pennsylvania we find what is not in existence in the east or south—one of the original blockhouses built before the Revolution and still in a perfect state of preservation. All the others have disappeared. Forts Duquesne and Pitt are things of the past, but the redoubt of Colonel Bouquet stands today as it stood 130 years ago. To the Pittsburg chapter of the Daughters of the Revolution we are indebted for its restoration. It has been owned by them since 1888. Until that year the old redoubt of Bouquet, as it is called, was occupied as a tenant house, and within its walls was born Pittsburg's local historian, the late Neville B. Craige, Esq. Down on "the point," on a narrow, dirty little street called Fort street, surrounded by tumbledown buildings nearly as old as itself, is a little five sided building of stone and brick erected by Colonel Bouquet in 1764 as a defense against the Indians. The lower story is of stone and the upper of brick. In both are perforations or loopholes, through which the defenders could fire with comparative safety from the enemy.

Why this redoubt was erected has been a query to us, as but a short distance away stood Fort Pitt, a work of considerable magnitude and whose erection cost the colony of Virginia, or the English government, £60,000, but the redoubt was built, as a stone slab over the door with the legend, "1704 Coll. Bouquet," testifies.—Philadelphia Times.

Munich Street Lamps.

The method adopted in Munich for lighting street lamps from the outside without opening the lamp has proved quite satisfactory, the results, as enumerated, being to economize in flashlight gas, to enable the lamps to be lit in a storm, to shut off the main stopcock, to light Welsbach lamps without explosion, and to prevent the casting of shadows. As described, the main pipe communicates with a kindling pipe, which at one end comes to the outside of the lantern and at the other goes to the burner—this kindling pipe being bored with fine holes, which make a row of flying flames leading from the outside to the burner; the main pipe and its connections, with the stopcock, are divided so as to enable gas to be supplied to the kindling pipe and burner, and then to the burner alone. The lighting is done with the ordinary rod lamp, provided with an aperture at its end which receives the lower end of the kindling tube. When the lamplighter's pole is slipped into position, wind has no effect on the kindling operation.—New York Sun.

A Broad Hint.

They were seated in the parlor conversing on the uncertainty of life.

She—The future is a vast, unfathomable mystery to us, isn't it?

He—Yes; all we know is that we have to go some time.

Voice From the Library—It would suit the convenience of this household if you'd make it a little sooner than that.—Richmond Dispatch.

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

THE POULTRY BUSINESS.

It Is the Largest Agricultural Industry In the Country.

During the last quarter of a century the poultry industry has developed into the largest agricultural industry of this country. The value of the poultry industry is underestimated by the American people, and it has not been until recently that attention has been called to the vast wealth which lies at our very door.

Careful inquiry reveals the astounding fact that the United States, instead of producing more eggs than are required for home consumption, imports annually over $2,000,000 worth of eggs. New York state and city consume about $45,000,000 worth of eggs and poultry annually, and the population of both state and city is about 5,800,000.

The United States, with a population of 68,000,000, will consume proportionately about $495,000,000 worth of eggs and poultry a year. In order that the full value of the industry may be determined correctly, we must add to the above $63,000,000 for the value of fowls retained for breeding and laying stock and about $600,000 for fancy stock and eggs.

This shows a sum total of the industry to be over $500,000,000. The following figures show the cash value of products in the United States: Cotton, $410,000,000; hay, $430,000,000; dairy products, $254,000,000; poultry and eggs, $560,000,000. While the poultry industry is larger than any of the others, it is the only agricultural product that we do not export. Our entire yield, which is vastly insufficient to meet the demand, is all consumed at home, and, besides, statistics show we import from foreign countries over 13,000,000 dozen eggs annually.

Here, where we have so many natural advantages as compared with other countries, our profit should far exceed them in proportionate value. These facts also show that the value of poultry and eggs exceeds even wheat, the greatest agricultural product of our land, by over $72,000,000.

The general impression is that this vast industry is controlled by the farmer on his acres of land. Such is not the case. The farmer does not supply 40 per cent of the eggs raised in the country. The majority of eggs and poultry are raised by city and suburban residents and those who have a small number of acres and make a specialty of poultry raising.

It is an industry in which any citizen may engage with pleasure to himself and profit to his income. Not only is it not confined to the male sex, but is eminently adapted as a lucrative employment for the fair sex.

Besides being a paying enterprise, it is also a peculiar one—peculiar from the fact that practical experience is a most essential requisite. Without experience and a thorough knowledge of the habits and nature of the birds one would be like a pilot at sea without a compass.

The safest, surest and only practical method of acquiring a poultry education is by actual observation and careful attention to a few hens at first, gradually increasing the flocks in accordance with the experience gained. When this is mastered and an understanding is formed between the keeper and flocks the work will be routine and a business established that will net a larger income for the capital invested than anything else of its kind.

To obtain the best results from poultry the fowls must be kept under the control—that is, in small flocks and in small runs. A city resident can obtain better results from a small flock in the back yard than the farmer with the same flock on his unlimited range.

A house 12 feet square, with a run or yard having 500 square feet, will accommodate to a nicety about 20 fowls. Twenty hens, properly kept, should lay on an average of 200 dozen eggs a year. At 20 cents per dozen, these would bring at a low market price $40.

Three pounds of grain, or its equivalent, will feed 20 fowls a day. The feed will cost about $13 a year, which deducted from the value of the eggs gives a profit of $27, or about $1.35 profit per hen.

There should be no difficulty in selecting a breed of fowls to suit the fancy of the most fastidious person. There are 85 distinct varieties of poultry, six varieties of turkeys, ten varieties of ducks and seven varieties of geese recognized by the American Poultry association. These varieties are subdivided into 13 classes.

The Asiatic class includes the heaviest fowls, such as the Brahmas, Buff Cochins and Black Langshans. The standard weights of these birds are 12 pounds for cocks and 9¼ pounds for hens.

For those who have a small yard this class would best suit them. They are easily bred in confinement and are fairly good layers. They are especially good winter layers. For table purposes they are good.

The American class are the Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Javas and Dominiques. This class gives us middleweight poultry. The cocks weigh 9½ pounds and hens 7¼ pounds. They are rated as better layers than the Asiatics, and for table purposes are considered very fine in quality. Like the Asiatic class, they will suit the city or suburban resident, being easily kept in yard by a fence 5 or 6 feet high.

The Mediterranean, Polish and Hamburg classes are the egg producing breeds. The Mediterranean class is made up of Leghorn, Minorca, Andalusia and Spanish. The Polish class has only the different varieties of the Polish family, and the Hamburg class is composed of the Hamburgs, Red Caps and Campines.

These three classes are the smallest of domestic poultry, excepting Bantams.

For table purposes they are not rated as high as the American class. They are not so well suited to confinement, owing to their persistency in scaling a 7 foot fence with ease. On a range they do well and are small eaters.—George E. Howard.

THE RETIRED BURGLAR.

One of the Most Remarkable Incidents In His Variegated Career.

"After I had gathered in what I could find in the dining room," said the retired burglar, telling of his experience in a house in western Massachusetts, "I started for the parlor. This parlor was just in front of the dining room, and there were heavy curtains between. I pushed these curtains one side and went in carefully, so as not to mar the furniture by kicking it, feeling along for the table which I knew must be in the center. I came to it presently and found it very solid feeling, with a sort of molding or carving along the edge. I had struck it on a side apparently, and so I felt toward the dining room until I came to a corner of the table, and then I felt along the end for the next corner to get the dimensions of it. I struck the other corner so quick that it made my hair raise right up. I knew there was only one thing they build of such shape, and that's a coffin.

"I turned my light on it, and it was a big oak casket, one of the kind they make nowadays, square and solid, and it had three silver handles on each side. I didn't dare look in, but I felt as though I ought to have them handles. The head was toward the front of the house and the foot toward the dining room. I set my lamp down and got my screwdriver out of my bag and began on one of the handles nearest the foot. I suppose I must have felt a little easier after I'd got that one off and into the bag. I know I went around the end and then up the other side pretty prompt, getting 'em off smooth as could be, and around the head and started down the other side where I'd begun. I got the handle off by the head on that side, and then I went at the last handle, the one in the middle. In turning the last screw out of the handle I dropped my screwdriver.

"It seemed to me as though it made more noise than an iron telegraph pole dropping inside of an empty iron oil tank. I just lay down and waited. I didn't dare run. I expected a million people would come pouring down the stairs and from all around, and I just waited, lying on the floor, but there didn't anybody come. You know, the fact was that dropping that screwdriver hadn't made noise enough to wake up a mouse, but it seemed to me like the greatest racket you ever heard, and it scared me most to death. But when nobody came I picked up the screwdriver and set it in the notch of the screw again, and I'd just got that handle off when I heard somebody say:

"'Don't you think you're crowding us here a little, my friend, carrying away them handles?' It was the dead man sitting up and looking down at me. I suppose he'd been in an epileptic trance or something of that sort, and dropping that screwdriver had made just shock enough to start him into life again.

"I was so scared I dropped the handle, but I grabbed my bag—I suppose instinct made me do that—and started out through the dining room again and down cellar and out by the window I came in by. I didn't wait to see if anybody was coming this time.

"I got $117 for those five handles. It seemed a pity to lose the other one, but it was always a great satisfaction to me to think that I'd woke [illegible] up."—New York Sun.

She Wilted Him.

There is one patron of the North Pennsylvania street line who has the reputation of being most dreadfully disagreeable. The conductors say he is a kicker, and the neighbors say he has the dyspepsia. Anyway he generally creates a scene wherever he goes, but since a recent experience he is a little particular about his conduct on a street car. He boarded a crowded car at—well, some street between Ohio and Seventh. The aisle was filled with persons holding on to the straps. He stood for a second in the doorway and glowered at those within. The conductor placed his hand on the shoulder of the bad tempered man and said:

"Pass on, please, and don't stand in the doorway!"

The disagreeable man turned his head a bit and snapped in return:

"Don't get gay. Stop your pushing, or I'll report"—

The unfortunate man, while making this speech to the conductor, did not observe that a woman was attempting to pass out. Like many others, he thought the car had stopped for him alone. But his crabbed remarks were cut short by an energetic shove from the lady passenger. She thought his cutting remarks were aimed at her, and in a high pitched voice she replied:

"You are insulting, sir, and very ungentlemanly. I must get out, and if you are not enough of a gentleman to allow me to pass I shall do some reporting."

The bad tempered man tried to explain and apologize, but the woman brushed past him. All the passengers heard the remarks and witnessed the incident, and the disagreeable man looked truly ashamed.—Indianapolis Journal.

WAYS OF BUSINESS.

THE MERCHANT WHO CORRECTS ONLY ONE KIND OF MISTAKE.

A Severe Criticism of the Ways of Shopkeepers and Cashiers—The Steamboat Clerk Who Said, "We Never Rectify Mistakes Here."

No one perceives the wisdom, and indeed the necessity, of accurate bookkeeping more fully than your humble servant, who can't keep books to save her life and who finds herself approaching dementia every time she endeavors to balance a cash account. But why in all bookkeeping systems, from banks to the smallest retail shop, is it invariably the customer who gets cheated if anybody? Tell me, ye winged winds, which o'er my pathway roll! It is useless to contradict and say that it isn't. The one exception in a thousand years does not count against the millions of opposing instances. I have lately read the pathetic account by some recluse, who never goes shopping, of the bloodthirsty monsters who take more change than is due them and stalk out, leaving no address behind them, little recking the sufferings of the poorly paid employee who has to make good the deficit out of his or her own pocket. Fudge! No such mistakes occur, or, if they do, they are rarer than fresh vegetables on a country table. In all large establishments there is a hawk headed Horus at the "desk" waiting to pounce on a mistake in the customer's favor of 1 cent, and many's the time every one of us can testify the little slips have been returned to be corrected of mistakes to our credit, while we fumed.

Thank goodness, there are instances in which the sharpshooters have wounded themselves. Once I was on a "sound" boat going from New York to Fall River, and the man at the desk gave me a $5 bill too much in change when paying after supper. There was something of a crowd, but that mistake would have made itself evident to me in a mob. I dashed back and said, "You've made a mistake in my change."

"Can't help that," said the lordly clerk. "We never rectify mistakes here."

"Oh, you don't?" retorted the head of the party. "Well, it will cost you something this time, for you have given us $5 too much. But if you never rectify mistakes you are the loser for once."

It is foolish to dwell on the sequel, and I have forgotten it. I only remember that the young man, pale and agitated, danced in supplication around the unmoved figure of the stern admonisher for some minutes. I suppose he got his money, and I dare say there was no law upholding one in keeping it, but I hope, at this distance of time, he didn't. One day, not long ago, I was at a furnishing shop in State street, Chicago, buying a tie. The price was $1.50, and I presented the man with a $2 bill. He swung over the little birdcage on a telegraph line and it came swiftly back with a 50 cent piece. Seeing another tie for that price, I handed back the change and was about to leave, when a voice came from the elevated desk at the other end: "Hi! This half dollar is counterfeit!" Although it was a public place and I am a retiring lady, I burst wildly forth into a clarion shout of joy. It is so seldom a modest customer has the chance of beholding a natural enemy caught with his own quicklime. The mortification of the salesman serving me was something to see. It did me good for a whole day. Sending a counterfeit half dollar cheerfully and with promptitude in change and repudiating it on its return the next minute! It was a sharp game and a little too sharp.

Everybody who shops much knows that it is next to impossible to get a "returned" article credited, or, indeed, called for. If you take two rugs on approval—I mention rugs because you can't very well return them by hand—and state clearly and plainly and over and over the price of the one you have kept and the one you wish returned, you are more likely than not to find both on your bill the next month, and you are likely to find the rug day after day littering your hall unless you telephone twice a day and end by flouncing down yourself in a rage and demanding its instant removal. Of course if it is kept long you are charged with it, anyway. The other night, when it was very hot, some friends of a lady in moderate circumstances dining with her suggested a drive in the park. One of the men telephoned for a landau, and at the end of the drive paid for it. The next week the bill came in—to the lady. Now of course this was an accident. But why doesn't the other accident ever happen? Why should thousands of bills come in to be paid twice, while by no oversight or bad management does a bill ever get forgotten or overlooked? Money getting, grasping, greedy generation of shopkeepers! Business is business, if you like, but business need not be a cutthroat, bloodthirsty system of demanding what is not due, need it? Must it be in this way that men grow rich?

It is because only one kind of mistakes occur that one is justified in thinking that only one kind is guarded against. The customer has to look out for himself and the shopkeeper too. The shopkeeper only looks out for himself. As for the breaking of promises, the calm delays and the superb independence of "purveyors," words fail me when I attempt to depict their aggravations. Success breeds contempt, it seems, and the only way to get a thing done promptly is to patronize a little up town place where they can't do it.—Mme. Lorgnette in Chicago Post.

Mrs. Elizabeth E. Hutter.

Mrs. Elizabeth E. Hutter, who recently died in Philadelphia, was widely known as the pioneer in many philanthropic movements in Pennsylvania. She was the widow of the Rev. Dr. E. W. Hutter, once editor of the Lancaster Intelligencer and afterward private secretary of President Buchanan and assistant secretary of state. During the war Mrs. Hutter frequently went to the front, rendering valuable service to the wounded and suffering. She took a conspicuous part in the great sanitary fair held in Philadelphia in 1861, acting as president of the committee of labor, income and revenue. She is credited with having raised $250,000 for the fair. She was the first woman to cross the line after the desperate three days' battle of Gettysburg. She went in a car provided by President Scott of the Pennsylvania railroad and by special permission of President Lincoln.—New York Tribune.

CONSERVATIVE.

The First Use of the Word as an English Political Term.

Canning, and not Croker, was the first to use in English politics the word conservative in its present sense, and too long has Thackeray's "Mr. Wenham" (Disraeli's "Mr. Rigby") had the credit which belongs to a far more brilliant man. The general assumption has been that the term was earliest employed in The Quarterly Review for January, 1830 (No. 83, page 276), in an article which has been commonly said, but upon no specified authority, to have been written by Croker, but its true first use was five years and a half previously.

On June 8, 1824, a dinner was given to George Hibbert, the chairman of the West India Merchants of London, by the members of that body, and several of the leading ministers then serving under Lord Liverpool, the Tory premier, were present. In the course of the proceedings, says a contemporary account, "an observation which fell from Mr. Canning was that the spirit of the present government, as that of all governments ought to be, was essentially conservative."

This appeared in John Bull of June 13, 1824 (page 198), and the apt word was so obviously remarked that it was italicized. Years passed, and Canning had died before the word is again to be met in English politics, but on March 14, 1829, Charles Greville noted in his diary that "Herries told Hyde Villiers that their (the Tories') policy was conservative, that of the Whigs subversive, and that they never could act together."—"The Greville Memoirs," volume 1, part 1, page 192.

The word, employed by both Canning and Herries, was thus "in the air" before it was given in The Quarterly, and this accords with a statement made in the course of a correspondence on the "Etymology of the Word Conservative" which appeared in The Standard at the end of October, 1832, wherein it was said to have been first used in 1829, during the closing controversies upon Roman Catholic emancipation.—Notes and Queries.

The Electric Candle.

The electric candle is in great request in England for the lighting and decoration of dining and other tables. An ingenious device for lighting the candles is provided by placing small pads under the tablecloth, and taking the current from them by means of two pin points in the base of the candlestick. The candles of course are extinguished on being taken from the table and are relighted when they are replaced in the proper position. They are so arranged that the bulb and the glass imitation of a wax candle can be removed, when the candlestick can be used for an ordinary candle. When used with shades of colored silk, the electric candle makes one of the prettiest additions to a dinner table that is possible to imagine.—Machinist.

Trees That Die When Men Live Near Them.

The deaths of nearly all the pine trees in Asbury Park give rise to an interesting question as to whether or not it is true that this tree is so wild by nature that it will not endure domestication. It is the breed of pine that grows in the sand close to the seashore of which this seems to be true. Asbury Park is built upon a former sea beach extending three miles inland to the edge of the great forest that reaches from Eatontown, back of Long Branch, to Cape May. This forest is called "The Pines," because of the preponderance of pine trees in it, the other trees that are plentiful there being mainly oaks of four varieties, with a few magnolias, tulips, sassafras and hickory trees and hollies and laurels.

The pines still flourish in the woods behind Asbury Park, but in the town a large fraction of the few that remain are sickly and dying. Thousands have died and been cut down since the tree embowered town was built in the woods a quarter of a century ago. The villagers say they die because it kills them to have human beings walk beside them. They say that even in the forest the pines that stand beside the footpaths are the first to die. Others credit their destruction in the village to the shaking of the earth by the heavy trolley cars and steam railway trains, and still others declare that manuring, watering and topsoiling the sandy ground is what has done the damage. The truth is yet to be determined, but certain it is that they are dying fast, and that already Asbury Park has lost most of its noblest ornaments.—New York Sun.

Mr. Hamlin was a true gentleman. Punctilious himself in the observance of all the requirements of gentlemanly intercourse, he was equally exacting of every courtesy due him from others. He permitted no man to be rude to him or to assume the attitude of a superior. On one occasion one of the able men and leaders of the senate, distinguished for a self conscious, lordly air in his deportment, in the change of seats which occurs once in two years in the senate chamber had gained a seat by the side of Mr. Hamlin and began at once to practice upon him those little exactions and annoyances which he had been accustomed to impose upon others. After a few days of yielding to these encroachments Mr. Hamlin turned and in a tone that did not require repetition, said, "Sir, if you expect to be treated like a gentleman, you must prove yourself one." There was never occasion afterward to repeat the admonition.—Henry L. Dawes in Century.

A Real Tribute.

"That bicycle suit of yours," said the fiance, "is the most hideous article of wearing apparel man ever gazed upon. Honestly, it's a wonder that it doesn't cause cases of hysterics every time you appear on the street."

He paused for a reply, but she had drooped her blushing head and said not a word. She could not speak.

The eloquent compliment to her skill in designing a successful bicycle costume had overwhelmed her with joy.—Chicago Record.

A MAN'S LAUGH NEVER CHANGES.

How the Fact Was Illustrated by an Incident In Chicago.

If the Bertillion system of identification had a phonographic record of the laughs of criminals it would probably be as near perfect as an identification system can be. The fact that man comes into the world wailing has been regarded as a sort of prophecy of the truth that as a rule the sorrows of life outnumber the joys when all the returns are in, but an optimist might see an opposite significance in the fact that a man's laugh remains the same through all the changing years. When the cares of manhood succeed to the happy go lucky days of boyhood, this laugh of his may be called into use, as it were, very little, but when it is put into operation it is the same old laugh, and every boyhood friend would know it instantly.

An old soldier who fought through the war with Fred Hartwick, who drives a mail collector's wagon on the North Side, happened to be in Chicago for a week not long since. He heard that Mr. Hartwick was on its postmaster's staff and went to the federal building to find him. He took his station at a point past which all the carriers filed to report for duty, and as Hartwick came along some one pointed him out.

Without disclosing his own identity the veteran approached and began asking Hartwick if he remembered various incidents in the history of their regiment during the war. Of course he did and very soon fell into conversation, organizing a kind of campfire meeting between themselves. One member of the regiment was in business in New Orleans, another was in a bank down in the state, several were farming, one was the local manager for one of the big commercial agencies in one of the large cities, and so on.

Several times Hartwick asked his old companion at arms his name, but the latter only smiled and went on with the conversation. Finally, when it became necessary for them to separate, as Hartwick was obliged to go out on his run, the man laughed outright as he said:

"Well, Fred, I never thought you'd forget me after what we went through together."

"The minute he laughed," said Mr. Hartwick, in relating the incident, "I knew just who he was and all about him, but I hadn't seen him for 30 years, and he had changed so I couldn't have told him from Adam. His laugh had grown older, too, of course, but it was the same old laugh."—Chicago Tribune.

The Tyranny of Etiquette.

It is impossible to read even the least dogmatic books on etiquette without being oppressed with the conviction that a heavy and binding addition has been made to the code of morals in the bylaws which have to do with visiting cards, invitations, conventional phrases and other minor but vigorous formulas. It has been reiterated by writers on these subjects that not a single rule of etiquette is arbitrary, but that all prove their reason in the very nature of things, and that those who disregard them simply show their own lack of insight and incapacity to appreciate genuine refinement.

While this is all very well for society people pure and simple or those who have other definite and absorbing work in life compliance with all the thousand and one trifling points of etiquette is an utter impossibility. The question then becomes, Shall such persons be excluded from society or be allowed to enter it on their own terms? Society might be so conducted as to make of it a charming and delightful recreation instead of a tyrannical business, and those who see this clearly can do much toward making it so.—Philadelphia Press.

Animals That Commit Suicide.

Intelligent observers have testified to facts which appear to show that in certain circumstances the snake, scorpion and even some quadrupeds commit suicide. M. Henry, a clock manufacturer of Longuyon, France, has recently described an experiment of the kind which he made with a wasp. The wasp was imprisoned under a glass, and knowing that benzine asphyxiates insects he put some paper soaked in it beside the captive. The wasp became uncomfortable, then angrily attacked the paper, but finding all its efforts unavailing it finally lay down on its back, and folding up its abdomen planted its sting thrice into its body. M. Henry was so curious to confirm the fact that, in spite of his humane feelings, he repeated the experiment on three wasps with the like result.—London Globe.

Wonderful Strength of the Beetle.

A noted entomologist who has been writing on the wonderful feats of strength as exhibited in the beetle family tells the following: "I selected a common black water beetle weighing 4.2 grains and found that he was able to carry a load of shot in a small bag, the whole weighing 8¼ ounces, or exactly 858 times the weight of the bug. If a man weighing 150 could carry as much accordingly he could shoulder a 45 ton locomotive and then chain a train of cars together and take the whole lot across the country at a five mile an hour gait."

When a man marries he fully intends to be No. 1 in the family, but often the full point drops out and he lapses into "no one."

VILLAGES IN RUINS.

Turkish Soldiers Continue Their Work of Destruction in Armenia.

Citizens Foully Treated, the Men Tortured, the Women Assaulted.

Anti-Christian Officials Organizing a Campaign of Horrors.

LONDON, Sept. 11.—A dispatch to The Daily News from Kars, Armenia, says that the entire district of Kemaks is surrounded by Turkish troops dispatched by Zekki Pasha under the plea of arresting Armenian revolutionaries. The villages of Carni, Tiruguegner, Tertan, Horopnt and Marig are reported to be completely sacked, and the population, aggregating 5,000 people, were foully treated. The men were tortured and the women and children were ravished. The four monasteries of Anakwauk, Sourphop, Thervorithchoga and Sonpphagop were sacked and the altars and images were destroyed. The excitement and alarm is universal.

Authentic information from Moush is to the effect that an anti-Christian society of Turkish officials has been formed there and at Bitlis, with the avowed intention of slaughtering the Christians in the event of the acceptance by the ports of the reforms presented by the powers. It is declared that Consul Hampton will be the first victim.

PROMOTED BY EZETA.

New Plot Against the Life of President Guiterrez.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—A special to The World from San Salvador says: A new plot against the life of President Guiterrez has been discovered by government officials, who assert that it was promoted by ex-President Carlos Ezeta. The assassination of his principal minister, Senor Castellanos, was also planned by the conspirators.

A number of arrests have been made, including some of the Colombian refugees, who, it is alleged, have been bribed by Ezeta. His party maintains, and the people are inclined to believe, that it is Guiterrez that put up the job in order to justify him in arresting certain private enemies.

WHO WANTS IT?

Meeting to Settle the City for the Republican Convention.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—It is understood that Chairman Carter of the national committee, will, within a few days, issue a call for a meeting of the committee in this city in October. The exact date of the meeting is not yet known, but when it is finally announced delegations from all of the score of cities which are in the race for the convention will be headed this way. The general impression here seems to be that, although Chicago will not ask for the convention, it is more than likely to be held there.

Is Fraker, Beyond Doubt.

RICHMOND, Mo., Sept. 11.—Mrs. M. J. Magruder of Atlantic, Mo., sister of Dr. G. W. Fraker, arrived here and at once went to the county jail. If any doubt yet existed as to the identity of the man in jail, it was dispelled by his meeting with Mrs. Magruder. She recognized him at once. After the meeting in the jail Mrs. Magruder was seen at her hotel and said the prisoner was Dr. Fraker beyond doubt.

NOBLESVILLE, Ind., Sept. 8.—Hon. Henry Watterson in an interview here stated that he had decided to retire entirely from politics. Under no circumstances, he said, would he make any further political speeches, and he further stated that it was his intention to go to Europe next year to avoid participating in the national campaign.

Population of Minneapolis.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 6.—The official count of Minneapolis has been given out by the census bureau. The total population is given as 192,833, as against 164,738 in 1890, a gain of 28,095 during the past five years. Only two wards in the city show a loss, the Sixth and Seventh. The former lost 308 and the latter 1,861.

Two Thousand Deaths Daily.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 8.—A Vladivostock dispatch says that cholera is raging in China, and that 2,000 deaths occur daily in Pekin.

Logical Anyhow.

At a village school not many miles away, a precocious boy, being asked to parse the sentence, "Mary, milk the cow," went on accurately until he came to the last word, when he said: "Cow is a pronoun, feminine gender, third person, singular, and stands for Mary!" "Stands for Mary!" asked the teacher in astonishment. "Yes, sir," replied the boy, with a grin, "for if the cow didn't stand for Mary, how could Mary milk the cow?"

Rather Late.

On Monday afternoon a farmer was seen taking a new McCormick self-binder out to his farm. Rather late in the season to be buying new binders.

THE KELSO FARM.

The Hallock News says that the big Kelso farm, consisting of 4,000 acres of wheat will average between 35 and 40 bushels No. 1 Hard per acre, at the rate it is turning out now. Mr. Kelso has been farming in the Red River Valley ever since it first became known to civilization as the wheat granary of the world and some of this land that produces this big crop has been cropped continuously ever since it was broken up, and the fact that he has such a crop this year speaks volumes for the quality of our soil. It is also quite significant as to methods of farming, as Mr. Kelso is one of the best farmers in the valley and believes in feeding his land, and thorough and systematic cultivation and thus keeping it continually up to its best.

Smut in Wheat.

Frank Bivins took a trip west along the line in North Dakota, last week, and took pains to investigate the manner of wheat grading in that state. Says he saw one load in particular, of as fine wheat as he ever saw anywhere, wheat that actually tested over 62 pounds per bushel and the elevator man would only offer rejected for it, because there was a kernel or two of smut in it. Mr. Bivins was quite indignant at this state of things, which prevailed generally out that way, and he says that it means an incalculable loss to the farmers if that state of things continues right along. The only effective way we can see to stop this kind of speculation in wheat is for the farmers to hold their wheat out of the market for a while, but too many of them are not in shape to do that and the speculator will take advantage of that fact. It would be better to ship their own wheat, if they are obliged to sell, than to sell on the open market.

POOR TRAY.

Will Bugg is not saying much about it, but the story goes that he pumped a load of lead into a large black dog one day last week which so discouraged the dog that he quit living right then and there; wouldn't try to live in a city where he was suspected of being a common chicken-thief. It seems that Will had seen a big black dog worrying some fine thoroughbred chickens that he has recently imported at great expense and one day found two of them dead—all chawed up by that dog. So he procured a rifled cannon, loaded her to the muzzle and when the dog hove in sight Will turned loose the gun. The dog died of a broken heart and it was thought that Bugg would follow suit (or trump) when a short time after that he discovered that the dog he had filled full of cold lead was not the dog he had seen in his hennery. That's what the innocent victim got by going about town looking as black as a dog that would kill thoroughbred chickens.

As to Wheat Yields.

Geo. F. Carpenter, of Larsen & Carpenter, says: "Our threshing machines are reporting yields varying all the way from 20 to 40 bushels per acre and all No. 1 hard. John Mostrum, who runs a rig in the Wylie neighborhood, tells me that he threshed one crop for a farmer up there (whose name I did not catch) that averaged 46 bushels per acre, the entire crop. I think the timber lands are panning out better than the prairie lands, rather."

Another Good Yield.

John Cromb, who is farming his place this year (the old W. M. Ross place on the hill) reports an average yield of 31 bushels per acre. Some acres he thinks turned 40 bushels strong, as some only yielded about 20 bushels, that portion that was standing when the last storm in August occurred. He thinks it would all have yielded 40 bushels per acre only for that storm.

SOME MORE.

Well yes, it does make a fellow feel "purty gude" to hear of 40 bushel yields—providing it is on one's own farm. The first report we get from the threshers on the JOURNAL farm in Fairfax, is that our wheat is rolling out at the rate of 40 bushels per acre—and this on a portion of the farm that has been cropped every year since it was first broken—some time before we bought it in '79.

ARE PROBABLY DEAD

LITTLE HOPE OF RESCUING ENTOMBED MINERS AT HOUGHTON.

Fires Still Raging Fiercely and Workmen Cannot Go Below—Thirty of the Two Hundred Employes Yet Unaccounted For—More Might Have Escaped.

HOUGHTON, Mich., Sept. 8.—Huge volumes of smoke are still issuing forth from the mouths of shafts Nos. 1, 2 and 3, which shows that the awful fire which started in the Osceola copper mine shortly before noon Saturday is still raging fiercely, and the bodies of the 30 miners entombed are still lying somewhere below the surface without a doubt dead, suffocated by smoke and gas. Captain P. Richards, with a gang of seven men, went down No. 5 shaft during the evening and went about 700 feet toward No. 4 shaft, when they had to turn and flee for their lives on account of the smoke and gas. Some of these men were very nearly overcome, only reaching surface

In Time to Save Their Lives.

It is learned that the place where the fire caught was the worst place that it could have caught in the whole mine, and the only place in the mine where fire of any extent could have caught. Many of the men that were working several levels below the 27th, in which the fire caught, were seen as far up as the 18th level, working their way up. Several of the men who escaped claim to have passed others on the ladders who were unable to proceed further on account of being overcome with smoke and gas. At the time the alarm was sounded over 200 were underground, and all could have escaped had they used proper precaution. Several miners in their flight passed a group of seven or eight men who had stopped to rest and were smoking their pipes. When told to hurry to the surface, they remarked that they had plenty of time and

Not One of Them Reached Surface.

The skips were kept running up and down all day Saturday in order to give any of the entombed miners a chance to escape if they could reach the skip alive, but none came up. There is no danger of the bodies being burned, as it is generally thought that the men escaped from the burning shaft to some of the drifts leading to other shafts and were overcome by gas and smoke before they could reach a place of safety. This being the case, the bodies will be recovered as soon as the fire is gotten under control and the gases leave the mine. The shaft has been surrounded all day by thousands of people, all hoping that some sign or word would be gotten from the men, but have now all returned to their homes fearing the worst. All hope has been given up by the officials of ever rescuing any of the men alive.

A GOOD MAN GONE.

Ex-Senator L. G. Wood, of Marshall county, died very suddenly at his home at Warren, on Sunday, Sept. 1st, of heart disease, aged about 74 years. He arose in the morning at about 4:30, as was his custom, and before he left his bed room fell to the floor and expired. He was about 74 years old and very highly respected in the community where he has lived for several years. He served one term in the state senate, having been elected on the alliance ticket in 1890, and was a man of very positive convictions, a very conscientious man and for a long time a member of the M. E. church. His death came as a great surprise to all as he was in apparently the best of health up to the very hour he died.

A Progressive Farmer.

Samuel Scott was up from Edna on Wednesday and dropped in to order that subscription put ahead one year. Mr. Scott is a very conservative man and when asked what his wheat yield on the big Wells farm (which property he purchased last year) would be, he said it would be at least twenty bushels per acre. He says much damage was done last spring by high winds that blew out some of the seed and in some places [illegible] thinks he will not get over from [illegible] 19 bushels per acre.

Some Good Yields.

Judge Benson returned on Sunday from his farm in the town of Knute where he had been superintending threshing, and the boys put up a pretty good job on the Judge by inducing him to take hold and help them out. The result is that the judge looks and acts as though he might be 85 or 90 years old. His general dilapidated condition was further enhanced by getting under a wagon that had broken down under a load of 91 bushels of wheat. Judge says if all farmers have a like experience he wouldn't blame them for kicking—if they were not too sore. He reports a yield of 27 bushels of wheat, 74 bushels of oats and 62½ bushels of barley per acre on his farm, and all raised on spring plowing which is not supposed to be as good for wheat and oats. Says that one of his neighbors Ole Tuff threshed 139 bushels of wheat from three acres; (the boys here insist it is the story that is "tuf.") Elias Gustufson had a yield of 30 bushels of wheat and 70 bushels of oats per acre; and H. Hanson a yield of 41 bushels of wheat per acre, near Erskine.

WHEAT GRADES.

State Inspector A. C. Clausen, in an interview in the Minneapolis Evening Journal says, in relation to the charge made that the chief grain Inspector was in collusion with the elevators to lower grades:

"I know nothing about it, and if any exists it would be interesting to know what it expects to accomplish. Public warehousemen at terminal points are obliged to accept the grain on grades established by the department, and they are compelled by the provisions of the grain law to store grain of each grade separately. The department must accept this grain out of such warehouses on the same grade under which it went into store. When the houses are emptied at the close of the season, the results will show that the same quantity of each grade has been delivered as was received. By our system of registration a perfect record of the exact amount and grade is kept with each public house, so that any attempt to tamper with grades would be detected and punished by a cancellation of license and the penalty of the law. These warehousemen have nothing to do with establishing the grades."

The article referred to also states that there was practically no smut in the wheat this year. "It is rather a delicate matter to point out the defects in a crop in a particular locality," said Mr. Clausen. "In quantity we have a crop as large, or nearly so, as that of 1891, which was the greatest in our history. In quality, however, we have a portion of it that is afflicted by almost every conceivable species of damage that could be possible. There is blight, rust, stain, bleech, frost and smut. I do not wish to convey the idea that the crop generally is affected in this manner. On the contrary, I am thoroughly satisfied that by far the greater portion of the crop is of most excellent milling quality, free from the blemishes referred to. The damage from smut is greater this year than in any previous crop in a personal experience of 20 years, and a visit to our terminal yards will satisfy any skeptic of this fact."

It is stated in the Crookston article that wheat which graded No. 1 Hard last year is this year being placed in No. 2 Northern. Mr. Clausen says:

"Perhaps a statement taken from our records at Duluth, showing the actual results of inspection during the past two weeks, may serve as a partial answer. Here it is:

"For the week ending Saturday, Aug. 31, 1895, there were received at Duluth and Superior 2,168 car loads of spring wheat, of which 403 cars, or 19 per cent, graded No. 1 hard; 1,408 cars, or 64 per cent, graded No. 1 northern; 245 cars, or 11 per cent, as No. 2 northern, and 112 cars, or 6 per cent, below No. 2 northern, showing that 83 per cent of the total amount received inspected in the No. 1 hard and No. 1 northern grades.

"During last week, ending Sept. 7, 1895, there were received at Duluth and Superior 3,465 car loads of spring wheat, out of which 472 cars or 14 per cent, graded No 1 hard; 2,234 cars or 64 per cent, as No. 1 northern; 514 cars, or 15 per cent, as No. 2 northern 245 cars, or 7 per cent, below No. 2 northern, showing that 78 per cent of the total receipts went into No. 1 northern and No. 1 hard, and 22 per cent into No. 2 northern, No. 3, rejected and no grade."

FARM PRICES.

Replying to several letters received during the past week asking the price of farm-lands and our opinion as to prices now compared with what they will be next spring, we will say that the prevailing tendency of a Democratic administration has been to depress the price of farm-lands to such an extent that one can now find opportunities to pick up farms at prices ranging from $5 to $20. These lands are going at such a rate that the prospects are that they will all be taken before next spring and then the prices will enhance—to what extent, of course no man can say, but it is a fact that the shrewdest of our business men are quietly picking up every snap that is offered as fast as they can secure the means to do so, and these are men who, having been here since the country was in its infancy, are thoroughly posted on the character of the country. This implies that good judges are anticipating a substantial rise in values at an early date, as they never buy for fun. When a man can buy land that will produce from 30 to 40 bushels of wheat at present prevailing prices he cannot go very far amiss on the deal at the same time his land will be enhancing in value year by year. We have been considering the matter on a basis of time sales, but if a man has money to invest he can find bargains that would make him dizzy; bargains that would easily double his cash outlay in less than one year's time if things keep on booming.

CROOKSTON RIGHT IN IT.

R. P. Black has established a grain commission business in this city and will handle grain for cash or on margins, and will, without doubt, work up a large business. This is the first time a venture of this sort has been tried in this city, but it has been in successful operation in other Northwestern cities of this size for some time. A farmer can sell his wheat, have the money to use and then buy options against the same amount and if wheat goes up, as it is expected to do he will make the rise. He should be careful, though, not to get too big a load on if he goes into that business, for in case of wheat going below his purchase price he must be prepared to put up margins or drop the whole business. After all this option dealing is not the safest plan for the average farmer to make money on, as many have found out in the past.

Died.

Mrs. J. N. Crawford died at her residence at Burwell on Friday after a very brief illness. A child was born to them a short time previous and Mrs. Crawford had recently been found to be afflicted with Bright's disease. She was a daughter of the late M. P. Dargan, of Black River and leaves two brothers and several sisters besides a young husband to mourn an irreparable loss. She was well known in this city where she had many friends. The remains were taken to Wisconsin for interment.

Vacation Trip.

Last Wednesday evening Rev. Mr. Fisher gave an account of his vacation trip and experiences, taking his audience with him via Sault Ste Marie, Lake Nipissing, and down the valley of the Ottawa to Montreal; thence past the Green and White mountains via Lakes Memphremagog and Winnipiseogee to Boston. His description of places along the route, and of historic scenes in the east was of much interest.

Other Good Ones.

Doc Leguee informs the JOURNAL that he was out through the west side last week and found farmers all busy with stacking and threshing. Wheat is running 35 and 40 bushels strong. Says J. McCaffrey, in town of Fanny, gets 35 bushels 1 Hard wheat and 50 bushels barley.

Moisture Invaluable.

The experience of the past season shows conclusively that we have a soil that will produce the largest crops of wheat that can be raised anywhere, and when there is plenty of rain we get the wheat. As a rule we have plenty of that essential element in wheat-raising, but the two years preceding this were exceptions and while we had good wheat there was not so much of it.

A GREAT SMASH-UP

On The Great Northern Road —Seven Lives Lost.

The south bound passenger train that passed Crookston at 8:30 p. m. on Tuesday evening, collided with the up train near Melby, at about 1:30 a. m. on Wednesday morning, ditching both engines, killing both engineers and firemen and making kindling wood of the baggage and mail cars. From Grand Forks south to Barnesville this train consists only of a baggage and mail car, a smoking coach, a day coach and a sleeper, but at Barnesville it is added to the through coast train, which makes a long train of it. This train was loaded down with passengers to the state fair, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Anton Erickson, T. G. Thompson and M. Mossefin and daughter, of Crookston. Wednesday morning, when the news of the wreck reached this city all was excitement and anxiety for awhile and it seemed impossible to get any news until about 10 o'clock a dispatch was received from Anton Erickson saying that there had been a smash-up and the Crookston people were all right. Later on in the day a dispatch announced that there had been seven railroad men killed and a lady passenger injured. The names of the killed are given as follows:

J. K. EMERSON, engineer.
IRA S. HAINES, engineer.
J. S. THEOBOLT, firemen.
E. T. JOHNSON, mail clerk.
ROBERT MCILRAITH, messenger.

One fireman, name unknown and messenger unknown.

Up to 10:30 on Thursday no train had arrived in this city, and the details learned were very meager.

Harvest Home Festival.

Tomorrow evening occurs the regular annual Harvest Home Festival at the M. E. church. No pains have been spared to render the event an enjoyable one and everybody is cordially invited to participate. Supper from 5:30 to 10 p. m. Everybody come.

A Good Yield.

J. W. Wheeler informs the JOURNAL that 65 acres on the Van Allen place, in the town of Crookston, yielded 1,800 bushels of No. 1 hard wheat. It would only require 20 bushels more upon the entire tract to make it average 28 bushels per acre. The land was summer-fallowed last year.

Dig Those Potatoes

With one of those potato diggers that J. M. Stephens is agent for. If you have only two or three acres to dig it will pay you to use a machine and by so doing save a good deal of valuable time that you need in the fall plowing. Stephens has a machine that is invaluable to all who raise potatoes for profit. He invites farmers to call and get full—particulars.

A SUDDEN DEATH.

Martin Anderson, a butcher at Stephen, met with a singular and fatal accident on Monday. He was driving to the slaughter house with an animal for slaughter, tied behind the wagon, when the animal ran to one side of the wagon and got entangled in the wheel, upsetting the wagon. A rifle that was in the wagon was discharged, the bullet striking Anderson in the head and killing him instantly.

Some Pumpkins.

Geo. Vine has on exhibition a number of fine, large, pumpkins that grew and ripened in his own cornfield on the flat near the slaughter house. Picking one of them up at random and chucking it upon the scales, our reporter saw that it kicked the beam at 31½ pounds, but George says he has very much larger ones than that. It is a singular fact that very few farmers in this county ever raise pumpkins, and that excellent pie timber has always commanded a good price in this market. Moreover there is not a better relish for milch cows in the vegetable kingdom and every farmer who has cows should raise a few pumpkins at least. Planted with corn the expense of producing them is really nothing. Some farmers seem to have an idea that pumpkins will not grow in Polk county. We have never seen a year that they would not, if there are any bees in the vicinity.

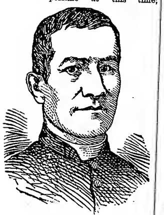
THE HILL SEMINARY

THE NEW ST. PAUL THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL DEDICATED

With Imposing Ceremonies—Mgr. Satolli and Many High Catholic Dignitaries in Attendance—The Cost of Construction, Over $500,000, Contributed by James J. Hill.



ARCHBISHOP SATOLLI.

St. Paul, Sept. 7.—Regardless of the sectarian aspect of the event, the formal dedication of the Hill seminary, so called, by a gathering of distinguished prelates, headed by a personage no less than the personal representative of the Papacy in this country, Archbishop Satolli, his grace of Lepante, was a great occasion. Not only did it emphasize the extreme liberality of the famous railway magnate, whose magnificent contribution made the occasion possible at this time; not only did it accentuate the extent of the progress of the Catholic church in the Northwest; not only did it demonstrate the strength of the archepiscopal province of St. Paul, but it added to the fame and character of St. Paul as an educational center; for to the Saintly City's list of great educational institutions was formally added another, destined to take rank with the best.

And the day, as it should have been, was perfect, making it entirely possible to carry out the plans which have been in process of incubation for weeks.

The object of interest, of course, was Archbishop Satolli, who was invisible to the laity until the time for the celebration of pontifical mass arrived, and then there was a general craning of necks to enable their owners to catch a glimpse of the papal ablegate.

Escorted by Archbishop Ireland, the prelate whom St. Paul best knows, the representative of Rome entered and celebrated the solemn rites of the church, while the multitude, numbering at that time in the neighborhood of 7,000, stood in humble attention. The ceremonial of the mass, which preceded while forming a part of the dedicatory exercises, was very imposing. Mgr. Satolli sang the mass himself. He was arrayed in the robes of his office in the church and was attended by deacons, subdeacons, a master of ceremonies and the usual attendants at such a function. The sermon was delivered by Dr. O'Gorman and following after it all the clerics in attendance formed in procession and the various buildings on the grounds were visited separately and each dedicated. The mass began at 10 o'clock promptly and the exercises lasted until nearly 1 o'clock.

The Evening Exercises.

The assembly hall in the chapel building was crowded to witness the evening exercises. It was a remarkable gathering, the majority of those present being in full evening dress. It was composed of the leading citizens of the city of all denominations, among the number being nearly all the army officers from Fort Snelling, the judges of the district court, prominent railroad men, state officials and others, with their wives and other members of their families. The

THE NEW SEMINARY.

St. Paul, Sept. 7.—The new Catholic institution is a personal tribute to Archbishop Ireland from James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern railway. He contributed every dollar of the cost of the construction (over $500,000), personally planned the buildings and superintended their construction. Henceforth this seminary will be the center of Catholicism in the Northwest. It is situated on the banks of the Mississippi river, and the new buildings are admirably adapted to the work of instruction. Ten teachers will be employed, and they are among the best educated men in the church. An extensive library of theological works has been gathered, which has completed the equipments of the buildings. In addition to the studies proper to the ministry, and which extend over six years, the curriculum will comprise a higher course in science, literature and political economy. The following chairs are endowed: Biology, physiological psychology, chemistry and natural philosophy, logic and metaphysics, apologetics, ethics, dogmatic theology, moral theology, sacred scripture, ecclesiastical history. Besides these main studies, canon law, political economy, church music and the languages, including Greek and Hebrew, will receive considerable attention.

Mrs. Perkins Bound Over.

Minneapolis, Sept. 7.—Mrs. Lora Perkins has been bound over to await action of the grand jury on the charge of murder, Mrs. Hawkins being the victim. Judge Holt arrived at that decision after listening to five days of testimony. Considering the strong evidence put in by the defense in the last two days, the action was a surprise to nearly all who have been watching the case.

Catholic University Admits Women.

Washington, Sept. 11.—The Catholic university has decided to admit women as pupils in all the higher studies, embracing courses of science, philosophy and the arts. The university, heretofore, has been available for priests alone.

St. Paul's Population.

St. Paul, Sept. 6.—According to a bulletin by the state census bureau the population of this city is 140,292, a gain of 7,186 since 1890.

Was of Incendiary Origin.

Milwaukee, Sept. 9.—A special from Houghton, Mich., to The Sentinel states that Captain Prohy Richards, one of the oldest and most experienced mining captains in the copper country, says that he is positive that the Osceola mine fire is of incendiary origin. He does not think that a fire could have originated where it did unless it had been wilfully lighted.

TERRIBLE EXPLOSION.

Six Hundred Pounds of Dynamite Goes Up at Spechts Ferry, Ia.

Dubuque, Ia., Sept. 9.—Edward Latshaw of Victory, Wis., a sub-contractor on the government work on the Mississippi river, had 600 pounds of dynamite stored away in the cellar of a house at Spechts Ferry, 12 miles north of here. His son, while practicing with a revolver, missed the target, the bullet entering the cellar and exploding the dynamite. The house was blown to splinters and the following persons killed:

EDWARD LATSHAW.
MRS. CHARITY LATSHAW.
RAY LATSHAW, aged 12
MAT LATSHAW, aged 8.
HANS BJORNSTADT, La Crosse, Wis.

The injured are:

Mat Faber may die.

Ed Bench, eye knocked out and badly bruised.

Mabel Latshaw, skull fractured.

The dead are terribly mangled. A 4-year-old baby in the party escaped unhurt. A special train from Dubuque took physicians to the scene and brought the wounded to hospitals here.

MASONIC TEMPLE DESTROYED.

Destructive Fire in One of Boston's Finest Buildings

Boston, Sept. 8.—Masonic Temple, one of the finest Masonic buildings in the United States, was almost entirely destroyed by fire. The building was magnificently furnished, and the loss will probably reach $400,000.

RATES ADVANCED.

Considerable Increase in Freight Tariff to Montana Points.

St. Paul, Sept. 7.—A considerable increase in freight rates to Montana and Western territory has been ordered to go into effect. This grows out of the conference held in this city a few weeks ago.

It was announced that important changes will be made in the freight tariffe of the Northern Pacific, Great Northern and Union Pacific reaching Montana territory and west, to take effect Sept. 2. During the past two years the tariffs to Montana and territory west thereof have been on a very low basis, the rates to this territory being somewhat affected by the very low rates made to Pacific coast terminals, by reason of the strong competition of the water lines between the Atlantic seaboard and the Pacific coast.

The new rates will restore the conditions to about the normal basis in effect before the reductions made about the time the Great Northern line was completed to the coast in 1892.

Formidable Chinese Rebellion.

Berlin, Sept. 8.—A special cablegram from Shanghai says that the rebellion in the province of Kan-Suh is becoming formidable. The insurgents have organized an army, and with it have captured 11 cities. It is reported that the government at Pekin meditates calling upon Russia for aid in suppressing the rebellion.

Tracks Washed Away.

Pittsburg, Kan., Sept. 10.—Never have such rains been known here as have fallen for the last three days. The whole country is flooded and the tracks of all railroads leading into the city are washed away and trains delayed.

FAVOR THE CANAL.

Recommendations Made by the United States Commission.

New York, Sept. 11.—A World dispatch from Corinto says: The committee sent from the United States to study and report regarding the canal question will shortly present a statement favoring the project. It will also recommend a radical change in the line of the canal on account of formidable obstacles in many places. The work can probably be finished in six or seven years, while the cost will be much greater than at first calculated, probably reaching $110,000,000. It is also reported that the commission will criticise severely the previous management of the canal.

A PECULIAR BRIDEGROOM.

Married Forty-eight Hours and Would Not Kiss His Bride for $500.

Topeka, Kan., Sept. 11.—After a month of married life, Mrs. Ethel Madison has brought suit for divorce from her husband in the Wyandotte county district court. She alleges in her petition that she only lived with him two days, and that the 48 hours thus passed were simply a 'foretaste of the future punishment. She says she tried to be a dutiful wife, that she wanted to kiss and fondle him, but that he spurned her advances. He told her that would not permit her to kiss him for $500 cash. This occurred within five hours of the time the wedding ceremony was performed. Mrs. Madison is a very pretty woman. The marriage was a romantic affair, the two agreeing to it on the spur of the moment. The heartbroken woman asks to be divorced from Madison and given $25 a month out of his salary.

FEW COMPLAIN.

Grain Inspection Is Giving General Satisfaction.

West Superior, Wis., Sept. 11.—The complaints among Superior grain commission men regarding inspection are confined to three individuals. It is admitted that the inspection of grain is more rigid than a year ago, but it is also admitted that it was too lax last year. Among the mill men and a majority of operators there is general satisfaction as to inspection. There were 848 cars of wheat and 45 cars of coarse grain on track Monday.

Mohican Out of Commission.

Washington, Sept. 11.—The Mohican, after being in active service for 10 years, has just been put out of commission at the Mare Island (Cal.) navy yard, where she will be repaired and furnished with a new crank shaft. Her men will be transferred to the Marion, which has been ready for commission for several weeks and is now in good shape.

Eliel Denies the Trust Report.

Denver, Sept. 11.—J. C. Eliel, the newly elected president of the National Wholesale Druggists' association, officially denies the report telegraphed from Denver, to the effect that the druggists' association and the National Proprietary association were contemplating the formation of a trust to raise prices.

Charged With Smuggling.

Winnipeg, Sept. 11.—On the arrival of the Great Northern train from St. Paul H. Cosigan, of the inland revenue service, quietly took into custody several well known parties charged with smuggling. It is stated a regular business has been carried on for some time between here and St. Paul.

Freight Agent Murdered.

Phoenix, A. T., Sept. 11.—Jay H. Miller, the commercial freight agent of the Maricopa and Phoenix railroad, was shot near his office. He died almost instantly. Two shots were heard in rapid succession, both taking effect in the head.

Do You Want to Stop Tobacco?

You Can Be Cured While Using It.

The habit of using tobacco grows on a man until grave diseased conditions are produced. Tobacco causes cancer of the mouth and stomach; dyspepsia, loss of memory, nervous affections, congestion of the retina and wasting of the optic nerve; resulting in impairment of the vision, even to the extent of blindness; dizziness, or vertigo; tobacco asthma; nightly suffocation, dull pain in region of the heart, followed later by sharp pains, palpitation and weakened pulse, resulting in fatal heart disease. It also causes loss of vitality.

QUIT BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE.

To quit suddenly is too severe a shock to the system, as tobacco—to an inveterate user, becomes a stimulant that his system continually craves. "BACO-CURO" is a scientific and reliable vegetable remedy, guaranteed to be perfectly harmless, and which has been in use for the last 23 years, having cured thousands of habitual tobacco users—smokers, chewers and snuff-dippers.

You can use all the tobacco you want while taking "Baco-Curo." It will notify you when to stop. We give a written guarantee to permanently cure any case with three boxes, or refund the money with ten per cent interest.

"Baco-Curo" is not a substitute, but a reliable and scientific cure—which absolutely destroys the craving for tobacco without the aid of will power, and with no inconvenience. It leaves the system as pure and free from nicotine as the day you took your first chew or smoke.

Sold by all druggists at $1.00 per box, three boxes (thirty day's treatment and guaranteed cure) $2.50, or sent direct upon receipt of price. Send six two-cent stamps for sample box, booklet and proofs free. Eureka Chemical and Manufacturing Co., Manufacturing Chemists, La Crosse, Wisconsin. [17-24]

IMMENSE CROWDS.

Fifty Thousand People Have Reached Louisville in Twenty-four Hours.

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 10.—The railroads estimated that during the night, and up till noon, they have carried 50,000 people into Louisville. With the blocking system on all lines crossing the bridges, the trains are handled very rapidly, and are unloaded at the most convenient places without entering the blockades at the depots. The railroads anticipate their rush will be during the next 24 hours, as most of the visitors will be here for the naval parade.

The posts of many state departments are quartered in school houses and other buildings about the city. The schools were dismissed this week and all school buildings are used by the veterans. The regimental reunions will be held in the state headquarters. The brigade and other reunions are assigned to various hotels, public offices and halls.

General Lawler Arrives.

The encampment was opened with a parade on the arrival of Commander-in-Chief Lawler and staff at 7:30 a. m. General Lawler and the Columbian post of Chicago and other organizations, on the escort special Monon train were met at the Union depot by members of the committees on invitation and reception, in carriages. The Kentucky national guard, local posts and other civic organizations escorted General Lawler and party to the Gault House.

Probably the most important business that will be transacted at the present encampment will be the joining of the Woman's Relief Corps and the Ladies of the G. A. R. in one order. While it has not been fully determined to do this, it will be recommended, and the sentiment in its favor is such that there is hardly a doubt of the consummation of the plan.

RIVERS OUT OF THEIR BANKS.

Houses Washed Away and Many People Homeless.

Ottawa, Kan., Sept. 10.—Gridley, a town of 400 people on the Santa Fe road 50 miles southwest of here, suffered total destruction of many of its best buildings. While hardly a structure in the place escaped injury it is believed no one was seriously hurt. The pecuniary loss is heavy. About 3 o'clock a storm of wind and rain burst on the town from the northwest. The wind was what was known as a straight blow and its mischief was mainly confined to the unroofing of buildings. A downpour of rain immediately followed and amounted to a deluge, 12 inches of water falling in an incredibly short time. The rain completed the destruction that had not been accomplished by the wind, and in a few minutes every stock of goods in town had been soaked and the household possessions of most of the inhabitants were in the same condition.

A special from Burlington says that the storm which did so much damage in Gridley, this state, extended from the north to the south end of Coffey county, destroying scores of houses, barns and granaries and greatly damaging orchards and crops. A boy in Key West township named Gridley was killed. George Rodman, his wife and three children were seriously injured. Mrs. Jaines and daughter were badly hurt at Strawn. Many others were slightly injured. The streams have risen rapidly and are all out of their banks, doing immense damage. The Verdi Gris river rose 35 feet and is still rising. Elk river is out of its banks all along its lower course and is several miles wide in many places. Elk City, 15 miles west of here, is entirely under water and the inhabitants have been forced to flee for their lives. Houses have been washed away and many people rendered homeless. A great deal of household furniture and other wreckage has been washed down the river, showing that the damage has been great.

Public Spirited Citizens

Should take a delight in adding anything to our town or county in the educational line which is valuable, unique and is not found in other communities. Our townsman, C. E. Misner, tells us he has an opportunity to place in our city a fine three and a half inch astronomical telescope, which will be for the educational benefit of our citizens. There is not as fine a telescope anywhere in our state, except at Carlton college, Northfield, where they have a fine astronomical observatory. Mr. Misner says that Prof. Hicks' paper, Word and Works, of St. Louis, offers him this fine instrument if he will get up a club of 800 subscribers to the paper. He is willing to put in a considerable part of his time and make a great effort to secure this fine telescope. If our citizens give him proper support it will not be a very hard matter to secure it. Word and Works is a fine monthly magazine and is well worth $1 a year, the subscription price. Mr. Misner will take subscriptions to this paper and every subscriber will have the privilege of looking through the fine telescope, which will be put up at Lynne's photograph gallery, free of charge. You get your money's worth if you do not look through the telescope, for Word and Works is a splendid family monthly and cheap at $1.00, but you have the satisfaction of knowing also that you have contributed toward the addition to our county of a fine instrument, not to be equaled by anything in northwestern Minnesota. Mr. Misner, or his agent, will be around to see the people of the county within the next six weeks and we hope he will receive encouragement wherever he goes. [15-tf]

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

First Publication Aug. 29, 1895.
Last Publication Oct. 10. 1895.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed by Henry M. Secord and Mabel A. Secord, his wife, mortgagors, to Minnesota Saving Fund & Investment Company, mortgagee, dated March first 1890, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Polk, on the 15th day of April. A. D. 1890, at 10:50 o'clock a. m. in Book 52 of Mortgages on Page 110, conveying and mortgaging the following described land and premises, situate in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: Lot Twenty-eight (28) in Block Four (4) Traill's Addition to East Grand Forks according to the plat of said Addition now on file or of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk county.

And whereas, by reason of said default, the power in said mortgage has become operative, and the mortgagee has paid out the sum of Thirty and 32-100 Dollars ($30.32) for taxes past due on said premises, and there is now claimed to be due and is due at the date hereof on said mortgage and the debt secured thereby and for taxes, the sum of Six hundred and twelve & 97-100 Dollars ($612.97) and no action or proceeding at law has been instituted to recover said mortgage indebtedness or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale therein contained and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of said above described premises by the sheriff of said Polk county at public auction, at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston, county of Polk, state of Minnesota, on Saturday the 12th day of October A. D. 1895, at ten o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount which will then be due on said mortgage and the debt secured thereby, together with the amount paid for said taxes and the costs and charges of foreclosure and Fifty Dollars ($50) attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage.

Dated at Minneapolis, Minn., Aug. 26th A. D. 1895.

CHEESE BOX MAKING.

AN EXTENSIVE INDUSTRY OF WHICH LITTLE IS KNOWN.

Half a Million Dollars' Worth of Cases Turned Out Yearly by Expensive Machinery—How the Logs Are Cooked and Then Cut Into Unbroken Sheets.

An idea of the magnitude of the cheese industry in this country is given by the fact that the boxes in which the cheese is shipped represent a cost of nearly $500,000 annually. It is not many years since cheese was shipped in any kind of barrel or box which would hold from one to half a dozen good sized forms, packed in straw to keep them from being bruised or broken in the handling. It was only factory made cheese that received such protection, while dairy cheese was sent to market destitute of any covering other than its own roughly bandaged rind, which in most cases proved invulnerable. Competition among manufacturers has changed all this, and at present the manufacture of boxes gives employment to a large number of hands and necessitates the use of powerful and expensive machinery.

It was customary in the early days of the business to saw the hoops, as the large body of the box is called, out of the log in planks about one-fifth of an inch in thickness. The waste of material was a most serious objection to this plan, fully 50 per cent of the timber going in sawdust. The invention of the rotary cutting machine has prevented this waste and at the same time produced a better hoop than the sawed article. The chief timber used in making cheesebox hoops is the common swamp elm. No other timber seems to possess the same qualities of lightness, toughness and elasticity so requisite for cheeseboxes as this once despised product of American forests. The logs, after being cut in the proper lengths, generally 5 feet for an ordinary cheesebox of 15½ or 16 inches diameter, are thrown into long vats filled with water, where they are boiled from 12 to 20 hours. The time required to soften the timber, or cook it, as the operation is called, varies according to the size of the timber and the season. Large logs require to be cooked longer than small ones, particularly when the logs are frozen. It is not uncommon to find the center of a log still frozen after 15 hours of boiling.

Experience is the best guide in this part of the business, and to know when the timber is thoroughly cooked and not overdone is one of the things acquired only by constant observation. When sufficiently boiled the logs are lifted in iron grapples from the vats and laid on skids, where the bark is removed. Then a log is lifted by a crane and swung into place in the machine, where it is held in a horizontal position by chucks or dogs that center it at each end.

In this position the log revolves like a roll of paper in a printing press. The knife which does the cutting is very heavy and is bolted to a heavy head called a carriage, which is fed forward by screws toward the revolving log. In the most approved machines the knife has an end or oscillating as well as a forward motion. This reduces the strain on the machine and permits the cutting of soft, unsound and shaky hearted logs. As the knife comes in contact with the timber, the inequalities of the log are first shorn off and gradually the log becomes perfectly round and yields an unbroken sheet of lumber, like the unwinding of a roll of cloth. This sheet of wood is broken off in convenient lengths, which are passed under dividing knives that cut them into uniform widths corresponding with the required depth of the box.

If the boxes are to be made up at once the hoops are bent around iron cylinders to give them the form of the box, after which the bottom is pressed in and nailed in place. Comparatively few boxes are put together in the larger mills. In most cases the product is dried and shipped to the cheese manufacturing centers, where the boxes are completed. The boxes in the finished state are too bulky for economical handling. An ordinary freight car will not contain more than 500 complete boxes, while 5,000 can be carried if shipped in the bale.

The remnants which are not wide enough for hoops are used for the cover band and for the narrow band that goes around the bottom of the box. The boxes vary in size both as regards depth and diameter. The most common size will hold a cheese of from 60 to 65 pounds. Such a box is 10 inches deep and 15½ inches in diameter. This is the size of cheese most in demand for export. The size for home consumption is as a rule much smaller and requires a box from 5 to 0 inches deep, but of the same diameter as the other.

Various kinds of timber are used to form the heads of the box, but elm is the accepted material for the hoops. Owing to peculiarities of the soil, the timber in some localities is inclined to be shaky, the checks or shakes running around the log and following the grain of the timber. Such timber was useless when the hoops were sawed; but in the rotary process much of it can be turned to good account. The bulk of the elm timber used in this business is brought in from Canada.

The western peninsula of Ontario lying north of Lake Erie contained one of the largest tracts of elm timber on the continent. It has been greatly depleted in recent years. Logs are taken out in winter when the swamps are frozen and are skidded near the railways or on the lake shore. The bulk of them are taken to the mills by water in tow of powerful steam tugs.—New York Sun.

BERKSHIRE PEOPLE.

The Spiritual and Intellectual Forces Are Strong Among Them.

And this region, so favored by nature, owes much of its character and interest to its history as well. Settled later than the seacoast, the western part of the state was in its beginnings made up of more varied elements than the eastern. From the valley of the Connecticut colonists pushed through the mountain gaps into that of the Housatonic; the hills attracted settlers from the flat and sandy lands of Cape Cod, while the Dutch from New York have left in name and character their impress upon the Berkshire people of today. Spiritual and intellectual forces were largely prominent in the laying of its foundations, and such forces have contributed and continued their influences ever since.

Missionary zeal, represented by such names as Eliot and Sargeant, founded Stockbridge. Jonathan Edwards here spent the years which represented the prime and fullness of his powers. Ephraim Williams, the fighter in the French and Indian war, dying on the battlefield, left his fortune to plant and endow the college which bears his name. Mark Hopkins, Berkshire born and bred, another Arnold of Rugby, set his stamp upon a whole generation; throughout its history soldiers, saints and scholars have both represented and impressed its life. The reasonings of Jonathan Edwards, which for good and evil have had so great an influence upon theological thought, found their most powerful expression in his treatise on the will, which was written while he lived in Stockbridge. Lenox heard the last public utterances of Channing; his successor, Orville Dewey, born 100 years ago (1794) at Sheffield, long made that place his home, and there, too, were born the two Barnards, one the president of Columbia college, the other the soldier scholar of our civil war. Oliver Wendell Holmes lived for years at Pittsfield. Catharine Maria Sedgwick drew around her at Stockbridge and Lenox a distinguished circle of the best literary society of our own country and many cultivated wanderers from the old world. Fanny Kemble here made for years her home. Longfellow, Lowell, Hawthorne, Herman Melville, Beecher, G. P. R. James, George William Curtis, Matthew Arnold and others lingered among and loved the beauty of these hills, where plain living and high thinking have found noble expression in the past and where here and there they still survive, spite of the inflowing tide of wealth and luxury that floods the Berkshire of today.—Arthur Lawrence in Century.

QUEER LANGUAGE.

The "Camphor Tongue" of a Wild but Inoffensive Race.

One of the queerest languages in the world, used for the queerest purposes, is the "camphor language" of Johoro, a country of the Malay peninsula. It has lately been studied and reported upon by Mr. Lake, an English engineer in the service of the sultan of Johore. This language is called the "Pantang Kapor," or camphor language, and is used by the natives and all others who are engaged in gathering the product of the Malayan camphor tree and only at that time. If they used either of the languages of the region, the Malay or the aboriginal Jakun, the natives believe that they could not obtain any camphor, and for a most curious reason. The camphor tree, Dryoblanops camphora, grows abundantly in certain parts of the peninsula, but only occasionally contains camphor crystals. The camphor is not the same as that obtained from the camphor laurel of Formosa and Japan, which is the source of the ordinary camphor of commerce. It is a sort very highly prized by the Chinese in the embalming of their dead, in incense and in medicine, and the gum brings much more than the common camphor.

The Malayans and other Johore natives believe that each species of tree has a spirit or divinity that presides over its affairs. The spirit of the camphor tree is known by the name of Bisan—literally "a woman." Her resting place is near the trees, and when at night a peculiar noise is heard in the woods, resembling that of a cicada, the Bisan is believed to be singing, and camphor will surely be found in the neighborhood. But the spirit of the camphor tree seems to be jealous of the precious gum and must be propitiated, and if she knows that hunters are in quest of it she will endeavor to turn their steps aside. So it is necessary to speak in a tongue which she does not understand. For this purpose the "camphor language" has been invented. It consists of a mixture of Jakun and Malay words, but these are curiously altered and reversed, and the natives positively believe that the divinity of the camphor tree is completely confused. The Jakuns who hunt the camphor are one of the wildest of people, but inoffensive. They live together with monkeys, dogs, cats, innumerable fowls and perhaps a tame hornbill in perfect harmony under movable leaf shelters built on poles in the woods.—Boston Traveller.

Animals That Commit Suicide.

Intelligent observers have testified to facts which appear to show that in certain circumstances the snake, scorpion and even some quadrupeds commit suicide. M. Henry, a clock manufacturer of Longuyon, France, has recently described an experiment of the kind which he made with a wasp. The wasp was imprisoned under a glass, and knowing that benzine asphyxiates insects he put some paper soaked in it beside the captive. The wasp became uncomfortable, then angrily attacked the paper, but finding all its efforts unavailing it finally lay down on its back, and folding up its abdomen planted its sting thrice into its body. M. Henry was so curious to confirm the fact that, in spite of his humane feelings, he repeated the experiment on three wasps with the like result.—London Globe.

The Red river drainage commission held a meeting at the capitol. Mr. Valentine presiding, made a report in regard to the work contemplated to be finished this fall, the Middle river ditch, Felton canal and Whisky creek, and the board decided to advertise for bids for the construction of the above named ditches, which are to be situated in Marshall, Clay and Wilkin counties.

TO BURN THE BUILDINGS.

Sioux Indians at the Rosebud Agency Make Threats.

CHAMBERLAIN, S. D., Sept. 10.—The Sioux at Rosebud agency, under the leadership of Hollow Horn Bear, a powerful and influential chief, have warned Indian Agent Weyght and employes to vacate the agency within 21 days, and threaten to burn the agency building.

A determination on the part of the Indian agency to reduce the rates paid Indians for hauling freight from Valentine, Neb., to the agency is the cause of the trouble. It is proposed to reduce the price from 50 to 25 cents per hundred. Although a trivial matter in the eyes of the white people, the Indians took mortal offense and runners sent to distant camps brought to the agency about 3,000 angry and excited Indians. The indian agent attempted to appease the Indians' wrath and finally consented to pay 35 cents per hundred.

The Indians are not satisfied, and further trouble is apprehended.

IF farmers were in a position to keep their wheat off the market for ten days the effect would be magical.

THE Defender easily won the first round in the great International yachting race on Saturday, and if nothing happens to her she will keep the cup in America. Thousands of people witnessed the race.

THE tendency to rush the wheat crop upon the market has the effect to depress prices below what the conditions warrant, and unless it ceases very much of the present crop will go for much less than it is actually worth.

WE are gratified to be able to compliment the daily Tribune on one creditable issue, that of Wednesday, when its patent outsides failing to arrive it was compelled to borrow plates from the Times.

THE Sunday issue of the Minneapolis Tribune was a screamer. It contained 48 pages—336 columns, of which 150 columns were ads and the balance interesting reading matter and illustrations. That issue shows a master hand at the helm and such enterprise is deserving of encouragement.

THE great State Fair opened on Monday morning under very favorable auspices and with an unusually large attendance for opening day. The displays of vegetables and cereals are simply wonderful and this event promises to be the finest of the kind ever held in this State. Tomorrow and next day will be the big days.

THE great Tammany boss, Dick Croker, seems to be laying the wires for the nomination of Whitney as democratic candidate for president. Dave Hill will have to do some pretty shrewd wire-pulling to swing Tammany if Dick has his finger crooked against him—but Dave knows a thing or two and it will be a battle royal. If David B. Hill really wants that nomination it will take a pretty good man to beat him.

For the Polk and Norman Co. Fair to be held at Fertile Sept. 18th to 20th, the Northern Pacific will make rate of fare and one third for the round trip. Final limit Sept. 21.

THERE is no question but that there is too much speculation in wheat at our home elevators but the way to avoid that is to ship your wheat to some reliable commission house in Duluth, and many farmers are doing it. A. H. Burke, whose ad appears elsewhere in the JOURNAL is a reliable man to ship to—a man we can cordially recommend to JOURNAL readers.

THE Minnesota "boys in blue" are off for the National Encampment at Louisville this week, living over the old days on tented field, and the significance of this meet is that it is the first time the boys have met below Mason and Dixon's line since they marched out with gun and knapsack, a victorious army. Thousands of the old-time Johnnies will be there and doubtless will be as ready to swap tobacco for coffee as in days of yore. This will be the most significant encampment ever held and will have a tendency to cement a feeling of brotherly love and friendship between the two great sections of our country that was too long wanting. The Minnesota boys will do some tall log-rolling in their effort to secure the encampment for '96 at St. Paul and the prospects now are they will be abundantly successful. Minnesota will give the old boys a truly royal welcome if they decide to come and see us.

THE condition of things in our wheat market this fall reminds us of the days when the Millers' Association was in full bloom and controlled the market. The agitation this caused resulted in the creation of the Board of Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners, and still, for some reason or other, the farmers were not quite happy, and they sought some means of relief from the elevator system. This resulted in the formation of the Farmers' Alliance as a business organization. The farmers saw that it was through thorough organization and acting in harmony that speculators had gained such absolute control of the markets and they wisely reasoned that organization would help them, so the Alliance was formed and was doing a good work until political demagogues and ringsters saw an opportunity to feather their own nests by joining the organization and, unfortunately for the farmers, they were allowed to do so, and what was done thereafter? Just what the JOURNAL at that time warned the farmers would be done—the schemers gained their objects and the interests of the farmers were forgotten or entirely neglected. If the farmers ever expect to compete in this business world they MUST ATTEND TO THEIR OWN BUSINESS and let political demagogues severely alone!

St. Peter Tribune: When we have a Republican president in the White House, and both branches of congress in the hands of Republicans, then indeed will again come true prosperity to the country. We have heard a great deal about business being better, etc., and then again we have heard, from both Republicans and Democrats, that such bluster is all a sham, or else they are the only ones that have not realized it in their business. Wind don't fill your wood shed, coal bin, or buy beef roasts. What we want is plenty of work for laboring men, for in these you have the consumers. We have plenty of producers now and to spare; what we want are consumers, and you can't have these by allowing Europe to do our manufacturing. The McKinley bill meant work for American labor. The Wilson Democratic free trade bill meant work for European labor. Be your own judge as to which suits you best, and which is the best for America.

Euclid Items.

Supt. Marshall, of the St. Anthony and Dakota Elevator Co., spent Wednesday in town looking after business interests.

Miss Anna Hancock is teaching at Fergus Falls instead of at Fargo, as appeared in last week's items.

Mrs. B. L. Misner returned Thursday with her children, from Fond du Lac, Wis., and will make her future home at Euclid.

Lewis Cottet and wife drove down from Warren, Thursday, to do some trading.

What might have proved a serious conflagration occurred in the field of John Hanson, last Thursday, about noon. The fireman on H. E. Mann's new engine was getting things in readiness to start work in the afternoon and suppposing there was no fire in the engine filled the fire box with straw and leaving a forkful sticking in the door went to the house for matches. While gone the straw ignited from some smoldering coals and the fire crept down over the platform to the stubble and to a straw stack near. The fire was discovered in time to extinguish without damage.

Mrs. E. B. Ballou departed Friday night for Red Wing, having been called to the sick bed of her mother and niece.

John and Fred Goosen drove to Crookston, Saturday, after engine repairs.

Some miscreant, in order to work out his spite against certain machine owners, has imbedded, stones, bolts, chunks of scrap iron, etc., in the bundles in the fields in which these machines work.

C. W. Davis, of Crookston, who was running H. E. Mann's engine at Barnard Tiedeman's field, had the misfortune of having his thumb crushed so badly that amputation will be necessary.

THE SENTENCE.

A saucy tease is Metabel,
  A roguish, laughing, chaffing tease,
But what she says I shall not tell,
And what she does you may as well
  Be sure is seldom done to please.

Yet when I threaten Metabel
  With penalties severe and high
Her sunny smiles my frowns dispel,
Her wheedling ways my anger quell;
  She seems the judge, the culprit I.

No mercy showeth Metabel,
  Yet sweet the fate her word imparts.
Last night she sentenced me to dwell
A captive in the deepest cell
  Forever of her heart of hearts.

NICKEL STEEL.

Its Extended Use Will Prove a Source of Profit to Canada.

"When nickel steel comes into general use for the construction of vessels, as it undoubtedly will," said a Canadian gentleman at the Great Northern the other day, "Canada will, in a sense, control the shipbuilding industry, because, so far as is at present known, there is very little nickel outside of the Dominion, while we have nickel bearing pyrites practically without limit. That whole vast stretch of territory reaching from Lake Superior to Labrador is rich in it and will produce hundreds of thousands of tons of it annually for an unlimited period whenever the demand requires it.

"How will this control the shipbuilding industry? Why, in this way: It has been demonstrated by conclusive tests at your proving grounds at Sandy Hook and elsewhere that steel mixed with, say, 5 per cent of nickel is double the strength of ordinary steel. In the construction of men-of-war the advantage is obvious, and in building merchant vessels the benefit to be derived from the use of nickel steel is equally plain, as it will enable them to be built much lighter than they are now, which means less coal and less engine power with an equal amount of security and equal amount of speed. It will only be a few years when a wooden vessel in the port of Chicago will be something of a novelty and the new vessels will before very long, for the reasons indicated, be made of nickel steel, and this will be the only metal in demand for the purpose at your great shipbuilding yards in Cleveland, Detroit, South Chicago and other points.

"Another advantage which steel having nickel in its composition possesses over ordinary steel is that it will not corrode and that barnacles cannot get a foothold on it, so that nickel steel ships' bottom will never require to be scraped." —Chicago Times-Herald.

A New Race of Roses Perpetual.

The Gardeners' Chronicle calls attention to a new race of roses which has been introduced by some Paris growers. They belong to the Polyantha group—that is to say, they bear their flowers in trusses. The new roses have the advantage over the others of being "perpetual," and consequently they flower continuously all through the summer. This advantage they owe to their origin, a natural cross (croisement naturel), observed in the Lyons gardens, between the flowers of the first specimens of Polyantha introduced from Japan and some hybrid perpetual roses. By repeated and careful selections, a new race of roses has been produced which, like annuals, germinate, flower and produce seeds in less than a year. The term "dwarf" is justified by the height, which in adult plants is only about 20 inches. The flowers are single, semidouble or double, in almost equal proportion, and present almost all the variations of color observed in cultivated roses. Flowering commences in the first year, and even a few months after sowing. This precocity is one of the most remarkable and interesting features of this new type.—Westminster Gazette.

SOME RUSKIN DICTA.

Extracts From Some Letters of the Subtle and Charming Old Critic.

"Talk is impossible to me," Ruskin writes in 1864, "owing to the state of quiet rage and wonder at everything people say and do, in which I habitually live." "I don't get mellow tempered as I get old," he writes some years later, which is true, for to another correspondent he says: "Nothing can advance art in any district of this accursed machine and devil driven England. I lecture here (at Oxford), but only on the art of the past."

"How inexpressibly subtle and penetrating," he writes to a young man, "is the principle of pride! How it mingles itself with, and even pretends itself to be, and takes the likeness of, the noblest feelings in the world—and what a constant struggle it needs even to detect, much more to expel it! It is like oxygen in iron—the hottest fire will not expel it altogether—and it steals in with the very air we breathe, turning all our steel into rust."

"Things that requires steady labor," he writes to the same correspondent, "there are indeed for all of us to do, but they are the coal heaving part of our life and to be done with a slow step and bent back, patiently, not in a passion, not trying to beat our brother coal heavers, but only to carrying as many coals as we can comfortably. But the great things which require genius to do are done easily if you have the genius. If you are to do anything that is really glorious, and for which men will forever wonder at you, you will do it as a duck quacks—because it is your nature to quack—when it rains."

"Do you know, Watts," he asked a friend in 1849, "to my mind the only real painter of history or thought we have in England?" "There's nothing here like Carpaccio," he writes from Venice to Sir Edward Burne-Jones. "There's a bit of humble pie for you. I don't give up my Tintoret, but his dissolution of expression into drapery and shadow is too licentious for me now." "I've been going to the old masters," he writes to Mr. Murray, "and staring at the Sir Joshua's. My stars, what that fellow could do!" And here finally are some flying shafts at certain modern imitators of Turner: "I have been now for 40 years vainly and always louder and louder growling and thundering into the deaf ears of the artists who fancied they admired Turner: 'Lead pencil point—pencil, sir! Pencil—pencil—till you can manage your blacklead—then color if you will.' They never attend to one word that I say, but go on daub, daub, daub to their deaths, and do nothing or worse."—Atlanta Constitution.

The Circus Kitchen.

At five minutes past 4 a shout from the crowd indicates the approach of the three huge cook wagons, each weighing 20 tons and drawn by six horses. From the first of them rise three chimneys, out of which black smoke is pouring. This wagon carries the 16 foot cooking range, where fires were started the moment the wagon was unloaded from the train. Already, while rolling toward the circus grounds, the ten cooks have been making active preparations for the breakfast which must be served within two hours to 700 hungry people.

When the three wagons have drawn up on the site of the still unraised cook tent, three butchers with heavy cleavers at once begin work upon the sides of beef, legs of mutton and loins of pork (500 pounds in all) that must forthwith be changed into steaming steaks, chops and cutlets. A boiler is set up and steam pipes are connected from it with the big urn which must furnish 2,000 cups of coffee shortly, and with the warming pans on the tables where the meats are served. While this is doing by one set of men, others are raising the tent, building 12 long tables and unpacking 20 large green boxes that contain 6,000 dishes and countless kitchen utensils.—McClure's Magazine.

Robert Collyer's Father.

And now about my father, writes the Rev. Robert Collyer, D. D., in The Ladies' Home Journal. I think still he was as good a smith as I have ever known, a man who would forge no lie in iron or steel, with soft, steadfast brown eyes, strong and sinewy arms to labor and never sick a day I can remember, always at his work until he fell dead that day with the hammer in his hand. Blacksmiths, I think, are usually silent men. The old Beechers were, as I have heard, who were of this craft, silent men who left the pent up speech to their sons and grandsons. This was my father also. He was a silent man, while both father and mother were as free from contagions and infections as the sound oaks are and the stars, so that the microbes, when they came in the dreadful form of fevers, found nothing in them for prey.

How to Make Cold Cream.

The basis of cold cream is always mutton tallow. Get this at the butcher's and select some very fine tallow. Cut it into bits and put it into a saucepan without any water. Set the saucepan into a jar of boiling water and let all remain until the fat is thoroughly "tried" out of the tallow. Strain through a fine sieve, and while it is still warm stir in a teaspoonful of the essence of camphor to every cup of tallow; next a tablespoonful of your favorite perfume and stir until all is a sweet smelling liquid. Before it has had time to cool pour in a little toilet jar and set upon the ice over night. It will keep indefinitely and will be found one of the best remedies in the world for skin that gets rough and "winter sore."

Napoleons of Finance.

Several of the leading illustrated magazines have entered the field with lives of Napoleon, and several new volumes of memoirs and reminiscences have just appeared. The reason for this sudden revival of interest in the Corsican no one seems able to guess. With as much cause we mention as brilliant and as brief a career in the field of speculation, that of Henry S. Ives, called "the young Napoleon of Finance." This is a summary: At 18, fresh from the farm, an office-boy for Harpers at $2 a week; at 10, a clerk at $6 a week; at 20, Wall street broker's clerk, salary $10 a week; at 21 a broker himself, capital $10,000; at 22 principal owner Mineral Range railroad, and had "made" $838,000; at 22¼, controlled Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton railroad, from which he "milked" $2,000,000; at 22½, held an option on entire Baltimore & Ohio railroad system; at 23, assigned with liabilities $20,000,000, assets $21,000,000; at 24, arrested for larceny and misappropriation of $6,000,000; at 25, tried and imprisoned; at 25½ free; at 27, made a big "deal" in a dry-goods house consolidation; at 30 died. Such Napoleons, like their prototype, are of no benefit to the world. Those whom we most admire are the Captains of Industry, like our great manufacturers and the projectors, builders and managers of our railroads, such as the Burlington system which makes commercial and social intercourse easy for the people of eleven popular states. For maps, tickets, etc., call on any ticket agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

I now have money again to loan on good improved farms.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6, 1895.

Many Democrats of more or less—mostly less—prominence have lately assumed to speak for Mr. Cleveland on the third-term question, but it will be noticed that no Democrat whose relations with Mr. Cleveland are such as to make it even presumable that he was conversant with Mr. Cleveland's desires, has committed himself on the subject, although some of them, like Comptroller of Currency Eckels, have talked in a non-committal way about it. Repeated attempts have been made by the shrewdest of newspaper interviewers to get a positive assertion from some member of the cabinet, but none have succeeded. There is but one inference to be drawn. Those who are asserting that Mr. Cleveland does not want a third term are doing so without any knowledge of what his wishes are—probably with the hope of influencing him; while those who are in a position to know his wishes are saying nothing, waiting for Mr. Cleveland to say what he wishes said. And Mr. Cleveland is waiting to ascertain Democratic sentiment on his candidacy for a third term before he commits himself either way. He wants that nomination again, and if he thinks he can get it will not hesitate to let his want be known. If the drift of Democratic sentiment indicates that he would be defeated if his name went before the convention, a letter filled with lofty platitudes against a third term may be confidently expected from him before the convention. In short, he wants it if he can get it, and doesn't want it if he can't get it.

Another $5,000 a year position was placed at Mr. Cleveland's disposal by the death of Fish Commissioner McDonald, and another scramble has thereby been inaugurated among the Democrats, who are still hunting for anything with a government salary attached. The late Col. McDonald, who held the position for some years, may or may not have been an expert in the propagation of fish, but there is no doubt of his having been an expert manipulator of F. F. V. influence. He succeeded in heading off more than one well-organized attempt to make the fish commission a bureau of the agricultural department, and in getting liberal appropriations from Congress for the fish commission, notwithstanding serious charges of extravagance made against him.

Gen. Coppinger, who commanded the troops sent to Jackson Hole, Wyoming, agrees with the civil officials in blaming the "Rustlers" for the recent Indian troubles. He is now trying to get the secretary of war to agree to ask congress to add the Jackson Hole region to the Yellowstone National Park.

Senator Gorman has had more than one fight in his long career as boss of the Democratic party of Maryland, but there is no doubt that he is now going through the very worst scare of his political life. Just after he got his ticket in the field he saw Secretary Lamont and Dan gave him to understand that he would find a way to whip the administration Democrats into supporting the Gorman ticket. With that assurance Mr. Gorman went to Saratoga. He remained there several weeks but is now back in Maryland, somewhat surprised to find that the administration Democrats have not been whipped into line. He is said to be in doubt as to whether Dan Lamont tried to find a way to make the Administration Democrats support the Gorman ticket, or whether he was called off by Mr. Cleveland before he tried to do anything. Meanwhile Republican confidence on the part of Marylanders continually increases.

Representative Dalzell, of Pa., whose chance for being chairman of the Ways and Means committee of the next House is considered excellent, was in Washington, this week. Speaking of probable congressional legislation he said: "The first duty will be that of passing legislation which will insure to the government sufficient means to meet the expenditures. The present condition of affairs is actually alarming. The Gorman tariff bill has been in operation for a year, and has demonstrated its inadequacy to provide the means for operating the ordinary machinery of the government. The legislation will be along the lines of Republican protection policy.

AYER'S
The only
SARSAPARILLA
Admitted at the WORLD'S FAIR
CHICAGO
1893

Why Was It

that Ayer's Sarsaparilla, out of the great number of similar preparations manufactured throughout the world, was the only medicine of the kind admitted at the World's Fair, Chicago? And why was it that, in spite of the united efforts of the manufacturers of other preparations, the decision of the World's Fair Directors was not reversed?

BECAUSE

According to RULE 15—"Articles that are in any way dangerous or offensive, also patent medicines, nostrums, and empirical preparations, whose ingredients are concealed, will not be admitted to the Exposition," and, therefore—

Because Ayer's Sarsaparilla is not a patent medicine, not a nostrum, and not a secret preparation.

Because its proprietors had nothing to conceal when questioned as to the formula from which it is compounded.

Because it is all that it is claimed to be—a Compound Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla, and in every sense, worthy the indorsement of this most important committee, called together for passing upon the manufactured products of the entire world.

and similar annoyances are caused by an impure blood, which will result in a more dreaded disease. Unless removed, slight impurities will develop into Scrofula, Eczema, Salt Rheum and other serious results of

Bad Blood

I have for some time been a sufferer from a severe blood trouble, for which I took many remedies that did me no good. I have now taken four bottles of S.S.S. with the most wonderful results. Am enjoying the best health I ever knew, have gained twenty pounds and my friends say they never saw me as well. I am feeling quite like a new man.

The working week opened bright and lovely on Monday morning with a regular Indian Summer day.

Willie Stone went up on the St. Vincent line this week in the interest of the firm of Stone and Columbus.

Judge Christianson went to St. Paul last week to attend the meeting of the state board of equalization.

Everybody is off to the fair this week—that is everybody who could spare the time from the threshing field.

Goin' ter dig dem taters? Call and see J. M. Stephens, who will show you how to do it quickly, cheaply and easily.

Richard Farrel, Gen. Trav. Pass. Agt. of the C. P. R. R., was in the city last week looking up business for that line.

P. W. Chandler, of Chandler, Hayes & Co., of Duluth, was in the city, this week, consulting with grain men and went north on the St. Vincent branch.

Miss Maude Leguee writes home that she has a very pleasant school this term, one and one-half miles from Fosston, with 22 pupils, and is much pleased with her surroundings.

C. C. Kaappen, of the Fisher Bulletin was in the city on Saturday enroute for a visit to the twin cities. He had with him a half a dozen potatoes the smallest of which weighed 2 pounds, and the combined weight one quarter of a bushel.

It will require at least a third more machines to thresh this crop than was necessary last year, owing to very heavy straw, but so far there has been no complaint of a lack of machines. Every machine, however, is busy and will be for some time yet.

The Brainerd Dispatch says of one who is well-known in this city: "It is reported that Father Lawler, formerly pastor of St. Francis church in this city, is very low with consumption, which disease is the result of exposure at the time of the Hinckley fire."

There seemed to be plenty of men hanging about the city this week, and once in a while some farmer would succeed in inducing a few of them to go out to the field with him. As a rule, however, they seemed to be afraid they would strike a job. Some would go out and get a good supper, a night's lodging and breakfast and then come back and be on deck again for the next "job."

That Tired Feeling

Is a common complaint and it is a dangerous symptom. It means that the system is debilitated because of impure blood, and in this condition it is especially liable to attacks of disease. Hood's sarsaparilla is the remedy for this condition, and also for that weakness which prevails at the change of season, climate of life.

Hood's pills act easily, yet promptly and efficiently on the bowels and liver.

The sheriff arrived from Faribault on Monday morning with Wm. Barnes and Roy Baker, who had gone away with him. Barnes was arraigned before Justice McLean at 10 o'clock and discharged on account of an error in the complaint. He was immediately re-arrested on another warrant, charged with embezzlement of money and the case came before Justice Holt at 11 o'clock on Tuesday. The result of the trial was that Barnes was committed to await the action of the Grand Jury in the matter.

Jerry Palmer, the tea and spice man, was in the city on Monday.

Capt. Hatcher, of the Salvation Army, is quite ill with typhoid fever.

C. E. Sawyer is enjoying life at the great cattle show at Midway this week.

Peter O. Onstad went down to Edna Saturday evening, returning on Monday morning.

Chris Hoch arrived home Saturday morning from a pleasant visit to the old home in Wabasha.

Miss Helen Halvorsen went to St. Paul, Saturday evening, where she will select her fall stock of millinery.

"Dan's place" means McKinnon's restaurant, every time. The place where you can get one of the best meals in the city for very little wealth.

James Gray, of Fergus Falls, was in the city over Sunday.

Geo. Ralph returned, last week, from a surveying trip.

John Morrison was in from Fanny to trade horses this week.

The N. P. carried about 25 people from this city to the State fair on Sunday evening.

If you haven't taken in the State fair you have two more days in which to do so. It is immense.

Next Thursday—if it don't rain—the Grand Forks street fair will begin, continuing through Wednesday.

Attorney Bennett was in from Fosston, last week, trying to work up a bit of enthusiasm for the Fosston fair.

W. B. Crawford, a brother of John Crawford, was up on Sunday to attend the funeral services of his brother's wife.

Mrs. Mary Burt was granted a divorce from James Burt, in Chambers on Monday, on the ground of cruel treatment.

Waxy Mathews arrived from Fergus Falls, on Tuesday morning with a string of noted trotters for the coming fairs in Polk county and took the morning train for McIntosh.

Peter Cornelius is trying to make arrangements to send his daughter, Mary, who is in quite ill health, to California for the coming winter, in the hope that she may be restored to sound health again.

The bride and groom, C. Strander and wife, returned from Detroit Lake, on Sunday morning, and Chris appears in the office all the same as though the most important event of his life was several years old.

Court Reporter, Benj. A. Strawbridge, returned from Warren, Saturday evening, where he has been reporting for referee Wilkinson. He leaves, this week, for a visit to the old home in Baltimore, Md.

Sheriff Steenerson went below on Saturday evening, after Wm. Barnes, the noted sprinter who cut such a dash hereabouts recently. Barnes is said to have fleeced a young man from Staples and had got away as far as Faribault when apprehended.

Next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock in the Congregational church Rev. Mr. Fisher will give the third and concluding address on the Great Awakenings of American History. The Sunday School service will be held at 10 o'clock.

On Tuesday the necessary papers were made out and forwarded for the admission of Paul Felix to the Soldier's Home at Minnehaha. Paul has been in ill health for some time and the Home seems to be just the place for him. He will go down the last of this or the first of next week.

Ayer's Hair Vigor tones up the weak hair-roots, stimulates the vessels and tissues which supply the hair with nutrition, strengthens the hair itself, and adds the oil which keeps the shafts soft, lustrous, and silky. The most popular and valuable toilet preparation in the world.

Fred Mix resigned his position at the Great Northern depot, last week, and his successor arrived on Saturday. Mr. Mix has been in the employ of the company for a long time and has been one of the most faithful men they had. He has not, as yet, decided what he will do in the future.

A TIMELY REMINDER

Each season forces upon our consideration its own peculiar perils to health. The advent of fall finds many reduced in strength and vigor, poorly prepared to continue the business of life. The stomach and bowels, the great highway of animal economy, is especially liable to disorder in the fall. The nervous system has also suffered in the struggle. Typhoid fever and malaria in particular find in the fall that combination of earth, air and water that mark this season as especially dangerous. The falling leaves, the decaying vegetables contribute their share of contamination. Hood's Sarsaparilla furnishes a most valuable safeguard at these important points, and should be used in the fall before serious sickness has laid you low.

An adjuster for the insurance company in which John Childback's farmhouse was insured in was in the city this week. The house was insured for $600 and was a total loss and the adjuster offered a couple of hundred or so to settle. Mr. Read who holds the policy for security declined to settle and so the matter stands at present.

On Sunday afternoon, as one of Peter Cornelius' daughters was driving out toward her home one of the traces dropped as she was about opposite Dr. M. Leguee's residence in Jerome's addition, which so frightened the team that they started to run. The young lady pluckily held on to the leathers and stopped the team just before they were about to collide with a horse attached to a single buggy, coming into the city and no one was hurt, although the ladies were considerably frightened.

There is nothing to prevent anyone concocting a mixture and calling it "sarsaparilla," and there is nothing to prevent anyone spending good money testing the stuff; but prudent people, who wish to be sure of their remedy, take only Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and so get cured.

With such a yield as Polk county has this year every farmer on our list who happens to be in arrears should be able to catch up this fall. We desire to get our list as nearly brought up to date as possible and we trust that all will be willing to do his part to accomplish that desired end. We have cheerfully carried some names for several years and trust that all of these will now be able to balance up the past due account.

Wm. Box, Jr. lost a big patch of oats by fire, last week. We did not learn how the fire originated, but it is said that about ten acres of heavy oats were destroyed before the fire was put out.

Next week we can all go to the Polk and Norman county fair at Fertile, commencing on the 18th. Thursday will be Crookston day and a coach will be attached to the morning train for the convenience of all who wish to go down.

Tommy Johnstone is driving about the streets a thoroughbred French Coach stallion, received last week from the house. The animal is four years past, stands way up in the air as stylish as you could desire and is "a beaut" and no mistake. What a magnificent carriage team such a pair would make. We had rather have 'em nor a bicycle.

A CRISP CRUST

Is the making of a pie. The making of a crisp crust depends largely upon the shortening. Use COTTOLENE, the new vegetable shortening, instead of lard, and sogginess will be an unknown element in your pastry. Cottolene should always be economically used—two-thirds as much Cottolene as you would ordinarily use of lard or butter, being ample to produce the most desirable results. The saving in a year represents a considerable item. There are many imitations of COTTOLENE; you should therefore be careful to get the genuine.

HARVESTS OF HAIR.

GIRLS PART WITH THEIR CROWNING GLORY FOR A FEW CENTS.

Jewelry and Wigs Are Made of the Queerest of Crops—Information, Some of It of an Odd Character, From a Man Who Makes Things of Hair.

It was quite by chance that the writer of this article happened on a man who has spent his lifetime in the manipulation of human hair, transforming it into wigs, crowns, frizettes and all the other kinds of "false" hair and weaving it into watch chains, eyeglass guards, bracelets, as well as mounting it in lockets, rings, pins, earrings and brooches and working it up into all kinds of floral designs and emblems.

"A charming head of hair on a woman," he said, "is a thing of beauty and indeed a crowning glory, but to a hair worker it is of little value. Even the longest hair, before it has passed through the hands of the manufacturers, is well nigh worthless. The hair of a woman's head which is 30 inches in length, for example, would not be worth more than 60 cents.

"I remember a woman coming into my shop one night and offering to sell her hair. She said she was a seaman's wife, and not having heard from him for many months was in desperate straits for money. She wanted to know how much I would give her for her hair, which was of considerable length. I refused to cut it off. I wouldn't cut any woman's hair off. It is such a demoralizing, degrading thing to do, and the fact is emphasized when dire need is the cause of the sale. However, I was in a position to obtain her assistance until her husband came back.

"We get our finest descriptions of hair," continued the subject of this interview, "from France and Italy, whence come all shades of black and brown. France, again, Germany and Spain supply the market with brown, light flaxen and red hair. Gray hair, being found in every parcel, is described as universal.

"On the continent there are regular hair harvests. During the summer time you can see at every fair peddlers surrounded by girls with their beautiful hair nicely combed out standing in file waiting their turn. The peddler has in his hands a pair of shears, each girl bends her neck, a few snips, and the hair is off, tied into a whisp and thrown into a basket standing at the shearer's side. And how much do you think that the girls get for this? A few cents, a gaudy trinket or a bright silk handkerchief.

"Some peddlers travel from cottage to cottage plying their trade, and the same performance is gone through. An average head of hair weighs four ounces. When sufficient hair is accumulated, it is sold to the hair manufacturers, who submit it to a process of cleansing and sorting into various lengths and shades. It is then ready for the wigmakers, who buy it as they require it, paying at the rate of 20 cents or so per ounce for lengths of 10 inches to 12 inches to as many shillings as there are inches for lengths of 36 inches and upward. The greatest demand is for hair from 14 to 24 inches in length. The longest female hair on record is 72 inches."

The tycoon of Japan once confiscated the hair of a whole province and had it woven into a ship's hawser over a quarter of a mile long. Then he discovered that steel ropes were in existence, and now the cable, composed of the pigtails of the unfortunate Japs, reposes before the eyes of the curious in Bethnal Green museum.

The gentleman interviewed possesses a magnificent trophy of hair, in size some 8 feet long by 2 feet high, in the form of a basket of flowers, every leaf, every petal and every stem of which is composed of cunningly wrought hairs from the human head. How long it took to create it, it is impossible to say, but years unquestionably. He has other similar displays, mostly the work of himself or his son, though they pale into insignificance beside the monument of patience in question.

The working of hair into ornaments has gone out of vogue considerably of late years, but seafaring men even now are great lovers of this form of memento. Naturally their favorite designs assume the forms of anchors, compasses and other things nautical.

One day a gentleman came to the subject of this article and desired him in a most mysterious manner to weave some hair, which he gave him, into the form of a serpent. The head and tail were to be of gold, and the tail was to be fixed into the mouth. The serpent was to be in two coils and to encircle a golden heart pierced by a dagger. In order to thoroughly comprehend the design he had to be let into the secret, and this was the explanation which was offered:

The serpent was to represent the nature of a certain young lady to whom the hair belonged and who had jilted the gentleman in question. The golden heart was symbolic of his pure and worthy affection, and the dagger showed how deeply he had been wounded. The tail of the serpent being in its mouth indicated that in injuring her quondam lover she had also bitten herself. The jilted swain was most particular about the execution of the work, sent it back twice for alterations and finally refused to have it at all, perhaps discovering the bathos of his scheme.—Boston Post.

Caught Their Ears.

The new canon of Westminster was once terribly interrupted by the incessant coughing of his congregation. Whereon he suddenly paused in his sermon and interjected the remark, "Last night I was dining with the Prince of Wales." The effect was miraculous, and a deathly silence reigned as the preacher continued: "As a matter of fact, I was not dining with the Prince of Wales last night, but with my own family. I am glad, however, to find that I have at last secured your attention."

ONE CAT WORTH $12,500.

Did You Ever See a Pure Tortoise Shell Tom?—Cats That Look Like Bulldogs.

It is estimated that there are 360,000 cats in England and 69 varieties. With the greater number of these varieties the average reader is probably quite unfamiliar.

Tortoise shell and white toms are very common, says an English writer, but a pure tortoise shell tom is so extremely scarce that many people declare that they exist only in the imagination.

Any one who happens to possess a female red tabby without any white spots could obtain a price which would keep him in comfort for at least a couple of years without work. Female red tabbies are as rare as tortoise shell toms.

The taste in Persian cats just now runs on the deep blue with orange colored eyes. Edward Lloyd, the tenor, had one for which he repeatedly refused $150. The bright slate or blue is a favorite variety of the Persian, the price sometimes going as high as $125.

White cats of really herculean proportions readily fetch $500. The Marquis of Dufferin is extremely partial to white cats, upward of a dozen of these splendid creatures being comfortably domiciled at the British embassy in Paris.

Russian cats fetch high prices. The Duchess of Bedford owns several of a species extremely rare—a very curious tint of blue. Russian white cats are also highly prized, but the white variety is seldom long haired.

Mr. Sam Woodiwiss is the owner of a smooth haired tom, Xenophon, of such gigantic proportions that when the writer, after an introduction, induced the cat to approach by calling in seductive accents, he experienced a feeling akin to dismay as the mammoth jumped on his knee, which in the course of a few moments began to exhibit unmistakable signs of fatigue, and no wonder—for 25 pounds is a fair weight. Xenophon is valued by its owner at $12,500.

Lady de Trafford has cats of such remarkable ugliness that the writer for a moment took them for a hairy sort of bulldog.

The value of cats is much enhanced if they possess the black markings on the chest known as the "Lord Mayor's chain." The writer has seen a cat of this sort for which the owner would not take $2,500.

Some cats are actually vegetarians, and a curious variety from Burma will only drink water.

FEARLESS OF DANGER.

How One of the Du Ponts Died In a Powder Mill Explosion.

Thus far no Du Pont of the famous gunpowder making family of Delaware has ever been false to the family law of bravery, while more than one has given his life in obeying it. One Saturday evening in the summer of 1857 Alexis I. Du Pont, son of Eleuthere, was in one of the mixing rooms with some of his men, trying to shift a heavy yellow pine box. As they slid the box along the floor, the friction caused a spark to strike, and instantly the room was ablaze. Fortunately most of the gunpowder had been taken out, it being the end of the week, but the walls and floor were sufficiently sprinkled with it to cause a sharp puff, which set the men's clothes on fire. Alexis, realizing the danger instantly, and being himself in flames, called to the men to follow him, and running out of the building threw himself into the mill race. The others did likewise, and thus, for the moment, all were safe. But Alexis, turning toward the mills as he swam, saw that sparks from the burning mixing room were falling in showers on the roof of the press and cutting mill, which contained, as he knew, several tons of powder. In spite of the appeals of the men, he rushed back to the point of danger, calling out as he ran, "Now, boys, pass me buckets of water."

Then he climbed fearlessly upon the roof, which was now nearly burned through—for in those days the roofs were made of pitch and cement—and began fighting the flames as best he could. Inspired by his courage, the workmen rallied with a will at the bucket line, but before they had got fairly started the explosion came, blowing Alexis Du Pont with fearful force against one of the drying stands, crushing his ribs into his lungs, and injuring him so that he died in great agony a few hours later.—Cleveland Moffett in McClure's Magazine.

Puff Balls Good to Eat.

Probably you have all noticed the little white puff balls in spring and "shot off" the same in autumn, when they are dry and full of dark powder. This is one of our choicest eatable mushrooms. One admirer says he cut a slice from a giant puff ball, which grew near his home, every day for a week and had so many fresh fritters, whereas, if he had cut it all down the first day, it would not have made nearly so many meals. One giant puff ball, when young and creamy, if well cooked, will satisfy the appetites of 12 people. In olden times slices of this mushroom were used to bind up cuts and were said to insure their speedy healing. In the days of flint and steel, before matches were invented, the powder of the dried puff balls was often used to catch and hold the sparks. Another strange use to which it was put was to burn it before a beehive. The fumes made the bees drowsy, and the honey could be removed without difficulty.—Margaret W. Leighton in St. Nicholas.

The Bicycle Demand.

It is doubtful if such a condition of affairs as exists at present in the bicycle business has ever before been witnessed by our naturally wide awake dealers. Scarcely a leading manufacturer of wheels but has found his sales—through agents greater in number than he ever supposed it was within his ability to gather—so far surpass his most sanguine expectations that he is today unable to supply to any appreciable extent the constant, steady and increasing demand for high grade wheels apparent on every hand.—Hardware.

THE EMPTY HOUSE.

The ancient apple tree that stands
Beside the black, decaying eaves
Once more has both her crooked hands
Half full of Maytime flowers and leaves.
But the old gray house where the gold haired children
Blossomed out from window and door
At the early kiss of the warm May sunshine—
The old gray house will bloom no more.

In that old apple tree again
Their loving nest the bluebirds fill;
They warble to the mild spring rain.
With music soft the mornings thrill.
But the old gray house with her vacant windows,
Where never a rosy cheek is pressed,
Where all is silence and void and shadow,
No birds come back to her empty nest.
—Irene Putnam in Good Housekeeping.

WHAT FIREMEN FIND.

They Pick Up Curious Articles Sometimes. A Touching Incident.

"Well, sir," said a stalwart looking fireman the other day, "we fellows don't have much time for looking about for finds when a house is burning and perhaps people's lives are at stake, yet we do come across things occasionally.

"A brother wearer of the brass helmet used to tell how he was once at a fire—and a big one, too—and in making his way through the house positively saw bank notes burning away like so many pipe lights. He picked up as many as he possibly could, stuffed them in his pockets and went on with his work. After the conflagration had ceased the man who was left in charge picked up among the embers an old fashioned pepper box—black and charred—filled with silver dollars, and a further search brought him to a number of rare old silver spoons.

"I have myself found two or three checkbooks, and once a set of false teeth, which I popped in my pocket and soon after was able to return to the owner, who proved his right to possess them without a doubt. I once brought out a genuine Stradivarius—a violin worth several hundreds of dollars—while diamonds and other jewelry have been saved in plenty.

"Indeed there are a thousand and one things a fireman finds and saves, though perhaps that which gave me the greatest satisfaction was an old rag doll. It was a touching little incident and quite true.

"It happened at a big fire, and in the midst of the excitement—which I assure you few people realize—the word went forth that a little child was 'up stairs.' I don't want to boast, but away I went. I found her on the second floor, asleep in her little crib, with this old doll by her side. I caught the child in my arms and—she awoke. She looked up in my face and seemed to understand that I was saving her from the flames.

"'Dolly! Dolly!' she cried.

"The next instant—aye, quicker than it takes to tell you—I had the old rag doll, and my pals told me that if any artist could only have painted us as we appeared—me with the youngster in my arms, and she cuddling up her treasure—why, there wouldn't have been another picture in the land to touch it!"—Boston Traveller.

Didn't Understand Twins.

A festival in the family drew homeward the scattered kindred. The boys, twins, had been long parted, and meanwhile one had married and in his widowerhood reared his little son, now 7 years old. To him, by name Bobby, newly arrived in the house, enters the uncle whom he had never seen, so perfect a corroboration of his father that Bobby runs to him at once, clings to him and hugs his knees. A moment later, when his father really came and the laughing company were on the brink of comment and explanation, the poor little man, giving him one mortally shocked glance, fell to the floor, sobbing, "Don't want—two—papas!"

The resident puppy, familiar with the bachelor brother, had almost as disturbing an experience. He stared and stared at Bobby's father, upon their introduction, sniffed at his garments, wavered and stared again. Then he leaped upon his own friend and next upon the image and echo of him bewildered, and finally backed into the corner, after making a brave stand against the supernatural, his insulted eye upon both men, barking and growling and indulging generally in the doggerel for thunder.—Chap Book.

Brummel and Byron.

Byron, while walking along Piccadilly one bright summer morning, encountered Beau Brummel, who was returning from his tailor's.

"How are you, Brummel?" said the poet.

"Pretty well, thank you," returned the beau. "I've been reading 'Don Juan.'"

"Yes?" said Byron, with a smile.

"There is some clever rhyme in it."

"So?" observed Byron, with affected surprise.

"And some pretty good versification."

"Ah?" returned the poet.

"Why don't you try your hand at poetry, Byron?" asked Brummel.

The two never spoke to each other again.

Followed Orders.

"Confound it!" exclaimed Jackson. "What a stupid fellow that jeweler is!"

"How so?" inquired his friend.

"Why, I told him the other day that I wanted engraved on the engagement ring the letters 'from A. to Z.'—'from Arthur to Zenobia,' you know—and the idiot went to work and put in the whole alphabet!"—Elmira Telegram.

The driest place in the world is that part of Egypt between the two lower falls of the Nile. Rain has never been known to fall there, and the inhabitants do not believe travelers when told that water can fall from the sky.

A Proverb Revised.

We are frequently reminded of the inutility of locking the barn door after the horse is stolen, but we are now told of a case where a man's stable has been stolen. The adage might be revised, however, so as to read, "Don't put your horse in his stall after your stable is stolen."—Boston Transcript.

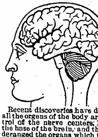
MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

THE MAYA WOMEN.

THEY ARE INTELLIGENT, SWEET TEMPERED AND BEAUTIFUL.

In the Olden Times These Wives of the First Owners of America Were the Mothers of a Courageous Race, and They Never Looked Into a Mirror.

An unfamiliar word, but as old as the hills almost, is this word Maya. Among the Brahmans it means illusion and is the name of the earth, the material world, which, according to the Brahmanical doctrine, is nonexistent—an illusion. Maya Devi was the name of the beautiful mother of Buddha. Maya in the feminine energy of Brahma and the mother of all the gods, even of Brahma himself. Any Greek dictionary informs us that Maya is the good mother of all gods and men. In Japan the goddess Maya is still worshiped. The beautiful Indian poem "Ramayana" tells us about a great navigator named Maya, who in ages long gone by took forcible possession of the countries at the south of the Hindoostanee peninsula and settled there.

The Maya people of America were in olden times a great nation, occupying the territory comprised between the isthmus of Tehuantepec and that of Darien. We know that they were navigators, their boats being depicted in very ancient books and paintings. In 1502, when Columbus came to America for the fourth time, he met on the high seas a large boat, in which were men, women and children. It also had a cargo of merchandise, consisting of weapons, tools, products of the earth and ready made garments. The travelers called themselves Mayas. They were in the habit of traveling to Cuba and other islands to trade with their inhabitants. The Mayas were neatly clothed in white cotton raiment. They were self possessed and courteous. Fifteen years later their land, today called Yucatan, was invaded by the Spaniards, but it cost the white men 25 years of warfare to get control of that country, for every Maya fought like a hero. They were sons of fearless mothers.

In reading the works left by the Spanish chroniclers—priests who accompanied the soldiers—we learn that the Maya women were very good looking, as many are at the present day; that they were charitable, sweet tempered, industrious, modest and so free from vanity that they never consulted the mirror, although their husbands did. In physique these women were large and beautifully shaped.

Their complexion was a light brown, and their silky black hair very abundant. Father Cogolludo, a Spanish priest, wrote, "These women are more beautiful and better tempered than those of Spain." They always dressed themselves, as they do at the present time, in flowing white garments, and in their happier days were greatly addicted to the use of perfumes and flowers. They were industrious, devoted wives and fond mothers, but exacted great deference from their children. Their ideas of modesty were so strict that they did not permit their daughters to look boldly into the face of a man, and if a girl showed a want of shyness the indignant matron would pinch her arms. After the Spaniards were in possession of the land they subjected these women to indignities and cruelty. Among many other things it is recorded that in one village they found two young women of remarkable beauty, one a bride, the other a maiden, and they hanged both, so that there should be no trouble about them. Many young mothers were hung from trees and their infants suspended from their feet. Those who escaped death were enslaved with their husbands and children.

Long ago, as far back as our studies enable us to know anything about that nation, the Maya women seem to have enjoyed the same privileges as the men, to have had equal power in politics and equal authority.

Today, when business is to be transacted, the wife takes the active part, her husband nodding his head affirmatively. It is not that she desires to domineer, but because he looks up to her, relying on her judgment. She complies with admirable moderation and modesty. She is eloquent and forceful without being loquacious, and she never scolds. When her husband gets himself into trouble, she pleads for him, being a more able reasoner than he is. If he gets intoxicated, she guides him home. If he strikes her, she says, "He does not know what he is doing," regarding him with angelic forbearance, so that domestic brawls are quite unknown. It is her pleasure to give him the best of what they have, keeping for herself the worst.

This woman's home has a thatched roof and earthen floor. She has no pretty objects around her. Hammocks serve as seats by day as well as beds by night. There is one low chair or stool on which she sits while her busy fingers make the garments of the family. In one corner stands a bench and grinding stones. Her hands grind all the corn used in that humble abode. The fire is built on the floor between three stones, on which rests the clay pot or the disk for baking tortillas. Outside at the back of the hut there is a long dugout, serving as a washtub, resting on trestles. There she stands for some hours every day, her small feet bare, soapsuds up to her elbows, yet her hands are small and pretty, her voice is sweet and low, her language never rude, and if you approach her hut she welcomes you with such perfect grace and self possession, mingled with cordiality, that you ask yourself if she is not a princess in disguise. She may be, but, alas! the palaces of her sires are crumbling away in the forests where her husband cuts timber for his master, the white man, now owner of the soil. The dying race must bear its fate, and the Maya woman meets it nobly, with resignation and grace.—Washington Post.

A MAN'S LAUGH NEVER CHANGES.

How the Fact Was Illustrated by an Incident In Chicago.

If the Bertillion system of identification had a phonographic record of the laughs of criminals it would probably be as near perfect as an identification system can be. The fact that man comes into the world wailing has been regarded as a sort of prophecy of the truth that as a rule the sorrows of life outnumber the joys when all the returns are in, but an optimist might see an opposite significance in the fact that a man's laugh remains the same through all the changing years. When the cares of manhood succeed to the happy go lucky days of boyhood, this laugh of his may be called into use, as it were, very little, but when it is put into operation it is the same old laugh, and every boyhood friend would know it instantly.

An old soldier who fought through the war with Fred Hartwick, who drives a mail collector's wagon on the North Side, happened to be in Chicago for a week not long since. He heard that Mr. Hartwick was on its postmaster's staff and went to the federal building to find him. He took his station at a point past which all the carriers filed to report for duty, and as Hartwick came along some one pointed him out.

Without disclosing his own identity the veteran approached and began asking Hartwick if he remembered various incidents in the history of their regiment during the war. Of course he did and very soon fell into conversation, organizing a kind of campfire meeting between themselves. One member of the regiment was in business in New Orleans, another was in a bank down in the state, several were farming, one was the local manager for one of the big commercial agencies in one of the large cities, and so on.

Several times Hartwick asked his old companion at arms his name, but the latter only smiled and went on with the conversation. Finally, when it became necessary for them to separate, as Hartwick was obliged to go out on his run, the man laughed outright as he said:

"Well, Fred, I never thought you'd forget me after what we went through together."

"The minute he laughed," said Mr. Hartwick, in relating the incident, "I knew just who he was and all about him, but I hadn't seen him for 30 years, and he had changed so I couldn't have told him from Adam. His laugh had grown older, too, of course, but it was the same old laugh."—Chicago Tribune.

The Tyranny o[illegible]

It is impossible t[illegible] even [illegible] dogmatic books on etiquette without being oppressed with the conviction t[illegible] a heavy and binding edifice ha[illegible] made to the code [illegible] laws which have [illegible] cards, invitations, convent[illegible] and other minor [illegible]. It has been reiterated by writers on t[illegible] subjects that not a single rule [illegible] quette is arbitrary, but that all prove their reason in the very nature of things, and that those who disregard them simply show their own lack of insight and incapacity to appreciate genuine refinement.

While this is all very well for society people pure and simple or those who have other definite and absorbing work in life compliance with all the thousand and one trifling points of etiquette is an utter impossibility. The question then becomes, Shall such persons be excluded from society or be allowed to enter it on their own terms? Society might be so conducted as to make of it a charming and delightful recreation instead of a tyrannical business, and those who see this clearly can do much toward making it so.—Philadelphia Press.

INCAPABLE OF IMPERSONALITY.

An Alleged Failing That Has Deferred Woman's Emancipation.

The bond of fellowship which exists between man and man simply by virtue of a common sex is entirely absent between woman and woman. It is, in fact, replaced by a fundamental antagonism, a vague enmity which renders the general attitude of a feminine creature toward her kind essentially different from that of the male creature in identical relations. In individual cases this feeling is counteracted by affection or by sympathy, but apart from personal sentiment it remains, severing every living woman from the rest of her sex. To a great extent this arises from woman's incapacity for impersonal feeling or abstract emotion. In life's fray she fights either for her own hand or, more often, for some one man or woman whom she loves, but rarely for the welfare of her sex at large.

Were it not for this strange lack of humanity in her nature, the emancipation of woman would not have been so grievously retarded. If the few women who suffered aforetime under the restrictions which hedged in their liberty had been able to count on the sympathy and cooperation of all women, the time of their subjugation would have been enormously abbreviated. As it was, the first seekers after freedom met with more opposition from their own sex than they did from the other; nor, indeed, do they fare better today. Enormous changes in their social status were effected by an inconsiderable minority of women brave enough and logical enough to impress the male powers that be with the justice of their demands. But for their courage they received no sympathy and for their success not one word of thanks—nothing, in fact, but execration from the huge inert feminine mass in whose service their strength was spent.—Saturday Review.

THE POULTRY BUSINESS.

It Is the Largest Agricultural Industry In the Country.

During the last quarter of a century the poultry industry has developed into the largest agricultural industry of this country. The value of the poultry industry is underestimated by the American people, and it has not been until recently that attention has been called to the vast wealth which lies at our very door.

Careful inquiry reveals the astounding fact that the United States, instead of producing more eggs than are required for home consumption, imports annually over $2,000,000 worth of eggs. New York state and city consume about $45,000,000 worth of eggs and poultry annually, and the population of both state and city is about 5,800,000.

The United States, with a population of 63,000,000, will consume proportionately about $495,000,000 worth of eggs and poultry a year. In order that the full value of the industry may be determined correctly, we must add to the above $63,000,000 for the value of fowls retained for breeding and laying stock and about $600,000 for fancy stock and eggs.

This shows a sum total of the industry to be over $500,000,000. The following figures show the cash value of products in the United States: Cotton, $410,000,000; hay, $436,000,000; dairy products, $254,000,000; poultry and eggs, $560,000,000. While the poultry industry is larger than any of the others, it is the only agricultural product that we do not export. Our entire yield, which is vastly insufficient to meet the demand, is all consumed at home, and, besides, statistics show we import from foreign countries over 13,000,000 dozen eggs annually.

Here, where we have so many natural advantages as compared with other countries, our profit should far exceed them in proportionate value. These facts also show that the value of poultry and eggs exceeds even wheat, the greatest agricultural product of our land, by over $72,000,000.

The general impression is that this vast industry is controlled by the farmer on his acres of land. Such is not the case. The farmer does not supply 40 per cent of the eggs raised in the country. The majority of eggs and poultry are raised by city and suburban residents and those who have a small number of acres and make a specialty of poultry raising.

It is an industry in which any citizen may engage with pleasure to himself and profit to his income. Not only is it not confined to the male sex, but is eminently adapted as a lucrative employment for the fair sex.

Besides being a paying enterprise, it is also a peculiar one—peculiar from the fact that practical experience is a most essential requisite. Without experience and a thorough knowledge of the habits and nature of the birds one would be like a pilot at sea without a compass.

The safest, surest and only practical method of acquiring a poultry education is by actual observation and careful attention to a few hens at first, gradually increasing the flocks in accordance with the experience gained. When this is mastered and an understanding is formed between the keeper and flocks the work will be routine and a business established that will net a larger income for the capital invested than anything else of its kind.

To obtain the best results from poultry the fowls must be kept under the control—that is, in small flocks and in small runs. A city resident can obtain better results from a small flock in the back yard than the farmer with the same flock on his unlimited range.

A house 12 feet square, with a run or yard having 500 square feet, will accommodate to a nicety about 20 fowls. Twenty hens, properly kept, should lay on an average of 200 dozen eggs a year. At 20 cents per dozen, these would bring at a low market price $40.

Three pounds of grain, or its equivalent, will feed 20 fowls a day. The feed will cost about $13 a year, which deducted from the value of the eggs gives a profit of $27, or about $1.35 profit per hen.

There should be no difficulty in selecting a breed of fowls to suit the fancy of the most fastidious person. There are 85 distinct varieties of poultry, six varieties of turkeys, ten varieties of ducks and seven varieties of geese recognized by the American Poultry association. These varieties are subdivided into 13 classes.

The Asiatic class includes the heaviest fowls, such as the Brahmas, Buff Cochins and Black Langshans. The standard weights of these birds are 12 pounds for cocks and 9¼ pounds for hens.

For those who have a small yard this class would best suit them. They are easily bred in confinement and are fairly good layers. They are especially good winter layers. For table purposes they are good.

The American class are the Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Javas and Dominiques. This class gives us middleweight poultry. The cocks weigh 9¼ pounds and hens 7¼ pounds. They are rated as better layers than the Asiatics, and for table purposes are considered very fine in quality. Like the Asiatic class, they will suit the city or suburban resident, being easily kept in yard by a fence 5 or 6 feet high.

The Mediterranean, Polish and Hamburg classes are the egg producing breeds. The Mediterranean class is made up of Leghorn, Minorca, Andalusia and Spanish. The Polish class has only the different varieties of the Polish family, and the Hamburg class is composed of the Hamburgs, Red Caps and Campines. These three classes are the smallest of domestic poultry, excepting Bantams.

For table purposes they are not rated as high as the American class. They are not so well suited to confinement, owing to their persistency in [illegible] a 7 foot fence with ease. On a [illegible] they do well and are small eaters.—George E. Howard.

A Liberal Education.

The late Professor Huxley held this opinion as to what constitutes a liberal education:

The man has a liberal education who has been so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will and does with ease and pleasure all the work that, as a mechanism, it is capable of; whose intellect is a clear, cold logical engine, with all its parts of equal strength and in smooth working order, ready, like the steam engine, to be turned to any kind of work and spin the gossamers as well as forge the anchors of the mind; whose mind is stored with a knowledge of the great and fundamental truths of nature and of the laws of her operations; one who, no stunted ascetic, is full of life and fire, but whose passions are trained to come to halt by a vigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience; who has learned to love all beauty, whether of nature or of art, to hate all vileness and to respect others as himself. Such a one, and no other, has had a liberal education.

Mrs. Elizabeth E. Hutter.

Mrs. Elizabeth E. Hutter, who recently died in Philadelphia, was widely known as the pioneer in many philanthropic movements in Pennsylvania. She was the widow of the Rev. Dr. E. W. Hutter, once editor of the Lancaster Intelligencer and afterward private secretary of President Buchanan and assistant secretary of state. During the war Mrs. Hutter frequently went to the front, rendering valuable service to the wounded and suffering. She took a conspicuous part in the great sanitary fair held in Philadelphia in 1861, acting as president of the committee of labor, income and revenue. She is credited with having raised $250,000 for the fair. She was the first woman to cross the line after the desperate three days' battle of Gettysburg. She went in a car provided by President Scott of the Pennsylvania railroad and by special permission of President Lincoln.—New York Tribune.

LA BELLE DAME SANS MERCI.

My love is young, my love is fair,
  Sweet, true and amiable is she,
With turkis eyes and topaz hair—
  Alas, my love is lost to me!

Her no crusades nor cranks confound,
  Nor Ibsenitish problems vex;
She has no theories to propound—
  I've never heard her mention sex.

She doesn't smile on risque mots;
  Her taste in dress is quite divine;
She's half an angel, goodness knows,
  But, ah, she never can be mine.

I knew she painted tambourines
  And pickle jars and copper bells,
With flowers and storks and river scenes
  And moonlight views on scallop shells.

She's painted photo frames galore—
  Wood, velvet, ivorine and brass;
She paints the panels of the door;
  She has not spared the looking glass.

The plush framed plaques upon her wall,
  Her limp art muslins everywhere,
The floral drain pipe in her hall—
  They know the pangs I've had to bear.

And now the Rubicon is passed,
  The great abyss between us set,
The final blow has fall'n at last—
  I've said goodby to Amoret.

Goodby to bliss that might have been,
  Goodby to happy hopes that were—

HER WEDDING PRESENT.

Marie Was No Doubt as Much Surprised as Freddie Was.

Young Mr. Smithers, having eaten an excellent dinner, sat down to smoke a good cigar while his wife ran up stairs to make her toilet for the theater.

So peaceful was his state of mind that he did not even look accusingly at his watch when, after the promised "minute" had developed into 60, she entered the room.

"Seems to me that you are looking very nice tonight, my dear," he remarked.

"I am so glad you think so, darling. Of course I care more for your admiration than that of any one else. Besides the Skinners sit right behind us this evening, and this dress will give her a bad headache before the second act is over."

Mr. Smithers looked anxious. "So that is new, is it? Wasn't the old one good enough?"

"N-not quite, dear. Besides I earned the money for this one myself."

"But how did you earn"—

"Oh, after you left I fell to thinking what a lot of money $25 was to spend on a wedding present for Marie when I really needed so many things. Then an idea struck me. I remembered all those pretty things I found in your big trunk after we were married—the ones that horrid girl, whoever she was, sent back when the engagement was broken. I wouldn't have one of them myself, but it seemed a pity for them to lie there, so I went up stairs and looked them all over. I selected that lovely silver backed mirror and cleaned it up until it looked just like new, and then I"—

"Sold it to buy the dress? I see!"

"Nothing of the kind. I bought the dress with the money you gave me. The mirror I sent to Marie with our best wishes. Won't she be surprised, and—why, Freddie, are you ill?"

"Not at all, my dear! You are quite right. Marie will no doubt be much surprised, for, you see, she herself was the girl who returned those presents; that is all!"—Baltimore Herald.

A Polar City.

Numbers of explorers who have sought the arctic regions in quest of the pole have told of a mysterious city mirrored against the northern sky—stately buildings in choice architecture, tall and imposing spires, but such as differ from anything we know about. Whether the foundation of this mirage is a reality and only unrecognizable because of transposition as to directions, whether it is a work of some mysterious remnant of our race that once occupied the pole, or whether this is some fanciful feature of the frost, as the peculiar shrubbery we see on the window pane—whatever this is, it must be consigned to the perplexing enigmas of the unknown region. Who knows but some spot, once the theater of busy and advanced human life, may have escaped the general cataclysmal wreck, and this city may be the silent and as yet undiscovered witness of prepolar times, standing alone in the dead desolation, in the rigid shroud of now polar death. If we must be barred from entering this undiscovered country, we may add to our equipment by a careful noting of its mixture, and then give to the base of these phenomena a most thorough study.—Philadelphia Press.

THERE IS NO COMBINE.

Inspector Clausen Says Elevator Men Cannot Fix Grades.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 10.—State Grain Inspector Clausen has returned from a trip to Duluth. Asked in regard to the report that a combine had been formed by the terminal elevator men to beat the farmers on grain grades, he said:

"I know nothing about it, and if any exists it would be interesting to know what it expects to accomplish. Public warehousemen at terminal points are obliged to accept the grain on grades established by the department and they are compelled by the provisions of the grain law to store grain of each grade separately. The department must accept this grain out of such warehouses on the same grade under which it went into store. When the houses are emptied at the close of the season the results will show that the same quantity of each grade has been delivered as was received. By our system of registration a perfect record of the exact amount and grade is kept with each public house, so that any attempt to tamper with grades would be discovered and punished by a cancellation of license and the penalty of law. These warehousemen have nothing to do with establishing grades, nor have they any interest in the matter except to see that the department takes out the grain on the same grade under which it is placed in store. Under such conditions it is difficult to see how any such combination could benefit them or have any such effect as stated.

Regarding the charge that wheat which graded No. 1 hard last year was this year placed at No. 2 Northern, Mr. Clausen said that a look at the official records at Duluth would show to the contrary. For the week ended Aug. 31, 2,168 car loads were received at Duluth, and of this 83 per cent graded No. 1 hard and No. 1 Northern. During the week ending Sept. 7, 3,465 cars received and 78 per cent graded in the two highest grades.

Mr. Clausen thought 25 per cent of the crop more or less effected by smut, and all of this would grade below No. 1 Northern.

DEFENDER THE WINNER.

Captured the First Race for the America's Cup.

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—Defender fairly beat Valkyrie III Saturday over a course of 30 miles by 8 mins. and 49 secs.

The wind varied from five to eight miles an hour. The course was from Seabright, N. J., to windward, east by south, 15 miles and return, the starting gun being fired at 12:20. Valkyrie crossed the starting line four seconds ahead, but Defender was to windward. They carried club topsails. Valkyrie had a baby jib topsail and Defender a No. 2. For a short time Valkyrie outpointed and outfooted Defender, and things looked blue for the 30,000 Americans on the largest fleet of excursion boats and steam and sailing yachts ever seen at an ocean race and probably any other kind.

In the first three tacks Valkyrie continued her good work. Defender was then sailed with rap full and at once out-footed Valkyrie, though apparently going to leeward. About 3 p. m. the breeze freshened to its greatest power of the day—eight miles—and Defender immediately passed her competitor and was never afterwards approached. Defender was 3 mins. 22 secs. ahead at the outer mark. Thence home, the wind having shifted to about southeast, it was a broad reach. Both yachts set balloon jib top sails. On the reach the wind dropped to five miles before the finish. Defender gained 4 mins. 48 secs. coming home. The excursion boats bothered both yachts somewhat.

More Troops for Cuba.

MADRID, Sept. 8.—A third army corps of 20,000 is to be organized ready to sail for Cuba in November in case of necessity. The Imparcial's Havana dispatch says that the troops under Olivera defeated a strong band of insurgents at Sitco Grande after a hand-to-hand fight in which 15 insurgents were killed.

WILD BILL'S HANDIWORK.

A Lasting Memorial of the Desperado's Skill With the Pistol.

On the west side of Market square in Kansas City stands a three story front of buildings known locally as Battle row, from the pugnacious bent of the inhabitants. These lapse into brawls and chance meddle encounters with an ease which should alarm. Up under the cornice of one of the buildings is an Odd Fellows' sign, "I. O. O. F." If one's eyes are sharp, the white paint interior of the first O will show a huddle of gray, weather hued spots very well in the center of the letter. They are the handiwork of that long haired gentleman of the border, Wild Bill.

It was back in the middle seventies when Wild Bill, "by request," and merely to show his witchlike skill with those weapons, stood across the street, fully 100 feet away, and with a 45 caliber Colt's pistol in each hand put all the 12 bullets into the center of this "O." He fired the pistols simultaneously, and the 12 shots made only six reports. The town was smaller at that time and in the interest of science didn't mind a little racket now and then. So Wild Bill's exhibition of crack pistol shooting excited nothing but compliment. Indeed Speers, chief of police then, as well as now, was one of the most interested lookers on, and emphatically indorsed the exhibition as one of the most skillful tricks with pistols it had ever been his luck to see.—Washington Star.

General Greely's Pun.

General Greely of arctic fame is as distinguished in the social circles where he is known as in the field of polar exploration. Brave and gallant, he is a great favorite in society, but it is doubtful if he has anywhere a more ardent admirer than one small maiden to whom he stands as a knight "sans reproche."

She was the host's daughter at an afternoon reception when General Greely was the lion of the occasion. The belles of the town were directing all their volley of superlative and bewitching glances at the hero, who, however, ignored these enticements and asked to accompany the 12-year-old miss to the dining room. Delighted beyond measure at this unexpected attention, the child accepted and went proudly off, scarcely knowing whether the salad he brought her were chicken or sawdust. The crowning joy came, however, when, talking to her as if she "had been Mrs. Cleveland," to quote her own words, her companion asked how many brothers and sisters she had.

She replied, "One brother and one sister, the boy between," and added, "Some persons call us a sandwich, but I think that is rather hard on us girls, because everybody likes meat so much better than bread."

"Ah, my dear," said the general, with a bow, "not when it is so well bred."

Can any sneerer at puns drive from the maid's memory her exclusive pleasure in this one?—New York Times.

Not Quite Right.

No man is a hero to his valet, and perhaps no poet to his baker. He lives in Putney, and almost every day he walks a few miles to Wimbledon and goes to a cakeshop there, where he buys cakes to give to a little group of poor children, who have learned to look forward to this frequent treat. Some one who knew the poet by sight said to the shopkeeper, "Do you know who this gentleman who buys so many cakes of you is?"

"Oh, he's a poor gentleman who isn't quite right in his head. He's always buying cakes for the children."—Chap Book.

A CRIME TO LAUGH.

Queer Sunday Laws of 1781 That Still Govern England's Lord's Day.

The introduction of the Sunday bill by Lord Hobhouse brings up the fact that we are governed in respect to Sunday observations by an act of the year 1781.

It seems that a Sunday lecture can always be made the subject of prosecution. Some time ago a Sunday lecturer at Leeds was actually sacrilegious enough to make his audience laugh. The proprietor of the lecture hall was thereupon prosecuted for keeping a disorderly house.

Music can now be given in the open air on Sunday, but if it is given in a room nothing must be charged for chairs. In other words, it will be possible for any body of men and women to run Sunday concerts and Sunday lectures with the view of making them pay expenses, but not for their own profit.

In the years 1200 and 1201 one Eustace, abbot of Flaye, preached throughout England the observance of the Lord's day. He enjoined that no kind of work should be done after the ninth hour on Saturday until sunrise on Monday.

According to the manner of the times his preaching was backed up by miracles. At Beverly a carpenter persisting in finishing a wedge after the ninth hour fell down in paralysis. In the same town a woman went on with her weaving after the ninth hour. Result, paralysis, with loss of voice.

At Rafferton a man made a loaf and baked it on Saturday evening. When he broke it on Sunday morning, blood started from it. At Wakefield a miller, grinding after hours, ground out blood instead of flour.

In Lincolnshire a woman made a loaf and put it in the oven. It remained dough! In the same county a pious woman, finding it was the ninth hour, set aside her loaves. Lo! On Sunday morning the loaves were beautifully baked without any fire at all.

And yet, the chronicler adds, in spite of these [illegible] people have returned to the [illegible] markets on the Sunday!—

When Tears Are Dangerous.

M. S. Gregory, sheriff of Amador, was telling some friends the other evening about a plucky deputy and wound up by saying: "When you find a man as cool and steady as a rock in the face of danger, you can bet on him. But the most dangerous men are those who laugh or cry when they have a dispute on hand. I knew a man named Drew, down in Texas, who was noted as a very bad man. When he was doing any shooting, he would laugh loudly—a hard, demoniacal laugh, without any merriment in it. Up at Indian Diggings, many years ago, two men named Archer and Pawson had a dispute with a German about a claim. When they claimed the property, he broke down and cried, and they, supposing they would have no trouble in taking possession, marched on the ground. The German took up a broken pick and laid them both out. Archer was badly hurt and was a long time getting over his injuries. After that whenever he saw a man start to cry he got out of the way."—San Francisco Call.

Time and Step.

"Sometimes," said an old soldier, "one sees the captain of a company marching proudly along, in time with the music, but out of step, the company right, the captain wrong. Distressing. But then I have seen a musician marching out of step to the music of his own band, and there is now and then a soldier who never really learns to keep step. The familiar order is, 'Left, left, left, left, the left foot down at the heavy tap of the drum.' "—New York Sun.

Agujardi's Voice.

Agujari, better known as La Bastardella, had an incredibly high range of voice. Mozart heard her in 1770 and expressed the greatest delight. She sang B in altissimo with perfect ease and performed cadenzas deemed impossible for the human voice. During a great part of her professional career she received about $500 a night, a sum then equal to about $2,500 in the money of our time.

THE SYSTEM IS WRONG

Eckels Says the Treasury Should Not Be a General Supply Market.

Congress Should Change This and Put an End to the Drain of Gold.

The Balance of Trade Against Us the Cause of the Shipments.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—Hon. James S. Eckels, comptroller of the United States treasury, has made the following statement on the request of a representative of the Associated Press: "Being thus far away from New York, and not knowing the exact conditions prevailing there which are causing the shipments of gold abroad, I feel I can say nothing on that subject which will be of special benefit to the public. Generally speaking these gold shipments come about from the fact that the American people are buying a great deal abroad and not selling sufficient of their own product to equalize things, thus necessitating a settlement of the balance due in gold. We maintain a financial system which makes the United States treasury a general market of supply for all requiring gold. Consequently, more or less embarassment comes to the administration of the treasury department when these balances require to be settled. However, the treasury has always managed to maintain unquestioned the payment in gold of its obligations, and always will do so. The system under which it is forced to operate makes it sometimes expensive to do so, but as long as representatives in congress refuse to change that system, and as long as the voters tolerate them, the people have no right to complain of the expense."

WOULD HELP THE TREASURY.

The Government Receives a Number of Offers of Gold.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—The true amount of the gold reserve at the close of business was $95,348,642. Since the recent heavy shipments of gold the government has received a number of offers of gold in exchange for notes. This is particularly true of banks in the Northwest, where small notes are in active demand in moving the grain crop. Other banks, apparently disinterested, have offered gold in exchange for silver certificates. Several of the banks offered gold suspected of being a little under weight, as it was stipulated that it be received at its face value. Some of the other conditions imposed by Western banks could not be accepted, but in all cases where the government consistently could do so the offers have been accepted.

South Dakota W. C. T. U.

PIERRE, S. D., Sept. 18.—The state W. C. T. U. has closed its session here. The officers for the ensuing year are: Mrs. Lulu Ramsey, president; Mrs. Anna Simmons, Huron, vice president; Mrs. Kalder, Woonsocket, corresponding secretary; Miss Kara Smart, Sioux Falls, recording secretary. It is rumored that the legality of the resubmission act passed last winter will be tested in the courts, but the executive committee refuses to state what action, if any, will be taken.

Setting the Example.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 18.—The associated banks of Rochester during the afternoon shipped to the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York city the sum of $250,000 in gold coin and will accept in return legal tenders. This action on the part of the banks was taken in the hope that the banks in other parts of the country may do likewise and from their stock of idle gold turn over to the national treasury such an amount as will offset the present shipments abroad.

No Definite Statement.

PIERRE, S. D., Sept. 18.—Land Commissioner Lockhart has returned from a trip made to assess property turned over to the state by Taylor. He says they have as yet gone over but six counties and have yet 28 counties to look after. The work has not yet progressed far enough to make a definite statement as to what the value of the property will be.

The Proper Caper.

Lots of lumber being hauled out by farmers to build granaries with so that they can hold their wheat for better prices which are sure to come later. Some farmers have not had room to store their wheat even if they wanted to, but this they propose to remedy. If all would do so it would have a great effect upon the market.

I now have money again to loan on good improved farms.

[1-tf] A. F. GEORGE,
Opera Block.

WHEAT PRICES.

In spite of the fact that the aggregate yield of wheat is less this year than for many years before the price of wheat has been steadily declining and wheat is now selling for less than it was last year at this time. One reason for this no doubt is the fact that everybody has been rushing it in as fast as possible instead of holding it for better prices and even with the prices where they are the Red River farmer is making more money on his crop than he did last year for he has almost two bushels this year where he had one last, for he has harvested one of the biggest crops ever in this far famed wheat raising country. If the largest part of the wheat could be kept right here a short time, the results would be better prices and the year would be indeed be a red letter year for the Red River Valley farmer.

DAY OF FUNERALS.

All Business Suspended at the Calumet Mines.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 14.—A special to The Wisconsin from Calumet, Mich., says: This is funeral day at Calumet. Every hearse in the county has been pressed into service and the mines are idle, the miners being kept busy going from one funeral to another. In addition to the 30 killed in the Osceola a week ago four miners have since been killed here by mine accidents.

INJUNCTION IS OFF.

Judge Sanborn Files His Decision in the Great Northern Case.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 17.—The Great Northern Railway company and J. J. Hill, its president, have won the first preliminary battle in the contest precipitated by Thomas W. Pearsall in his application for a preliminary injunction made to Judge Sanborn of the United States circuit court.

The decision has been filed, the court denying the motion of Pearsall the complainant.

The next step will be to hear the case on its merits, for it must be tried according to the procedure vouchsafed to every regular issue that comes before the court.

ARE YOU SATISFIED?

If you are, no matter how well you think you have been doing, you are about ready to be an angel. Man, by the very essence of his nature, is never satisfied—always wants more, or something different. The theologians draw from this characteristic an argument for immortality. May be so—but we are not now talking theology. The harvest is over for the farmer, the summer sales ended for the business man. If you have made some money, you may wish to make an investment elsewhere. To do so, take a journey to whatever part of the country you think offers opportunities. The farmer will find new lands in the Dakotas, Nebraska and Wyoming, good to hold for a rise, or to make a new and large farm; the investor can find many chances in ranching and mining in Colorado, Montana and Wyoming; the pine forests and iron mines of Minnesota offer good returns for investment; the prairies of Illinois and Iowa are attractive to the agriculturist seeking a fertile soil and moderate climate, Missouri calls to the fruit-raiser, the farmer and the miner alike—and Wisconsin is an all-round good state. To visit and travel over any of these, reaching easily all its principal cities and towns, you will do best by purchasing your railroad tickets over the Burlington route, any agent will cheerfully give you all needed information, or you can address, W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

FORFEITED THE RACE

VALKYRIE RETIRES AFTER CROSSING THE LINE

And Defender Sails Alone—Dunraven Asked for Postponement, But the Request Was Denied—The Englishman of the Opinion That He Was Badly Treated.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—The international series between Defender and Valkyrie for the America's cup is ended. On the whole it has been an extraordinary series, and while the result is satisfactory to the American people, two at least of the contests that went to make up the match were not. Defender won in a clean race on Saturday and on Tuesday last she crossed the line behind the English boat, but was awarded the race on a foul; Thursday she had a walkover. Lord Dunraven had said and he said most emphatically, that he would withdraw his boat if an absolutely clear course was not provided. He claimed that during the previous race his boat had been greatly interfered with, and as everything depended on the outcome of the third series, he adhered to that decision so closely that Valkyrie merely crossed the starting line and then retired from the contest. Defender, who was well in advance when the handicap gun was fired, continued on her journey and went over the course well within the time limit. By her three straight victories, Defender retains the historic cup for America.

Committee Not to Blame.

So far as the committee was concerned it seemed impossible to do more to secure open water than it had already done, for when the preparatory gun was fired the nearest boat to the racers was fully half a mile away, and the great majority of the excursion steamers and other craft were much farther off in the distance. The starting gun went at the appointed time, and almost at the same instant Defender crossed the line. It was evident to those who had been watching the English boat that she had no intention of racing, and so it proved, for no sooner was the line crossed than she hauled to on the starboard tack, instead of following her rival out, and passed under the stern of the lightship.

General regret was expressed that the series for the America's cup, begun so auspiciously and promising, had ended so disastrously. The withdrawal of Lord Dunraven in the third and, perhaps deciding event has had a depressing effect upon all those identified with the great match, and will probably have a more serious effect in regard to future international races.

DUNRAVEN'S STATEMENT.

His Reasons for Withdrawing From the Third Race Given.

LONDON, Sept. 14.—Reuter's News Agency sent a request by cable to the Earl of Dunraven for a statement of the reasons for his action in withdrawing from this third race for the America's cup. The following reply has been received from New York:

"Owing to the excessive crowding by steamers at the first two races, especially at the start of and on the last 10 miles of the second race, I notified the cup committee that owing to the danger of a serious accident by collision with the excursion steamers and otherwise, and owing to the absolute absurdity of carrying on races under such conditions I should decline to start unless some arrangement were made to race in clear water. I requested a postponement of this last race with a view of arriving at such an arrangement. The committee found it impossible to concede this. I then notified them that I should be at Sandy Hook lightship for the purpose of giving Defender a start."

WILL BE NO RACE.

Dunraven Declines to Sail His Yacht Again in American Waters.

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—Whatever doubt may have existed as to Lord Dunraven's intentions of racing the Valkyrie in this country again was dispelled by Mr. H. Maitland Kersey. When seen by a reporter, he said:

"No, the Valkyrie will never race again on this side of the Atlantic. The races are over. That settles it. I have nothing more to say on that point."

"It was rumored that Lord Dunraven intended to start for Niagara Falls," said the reporter.

"If that is so, the rumor is false. He may go to Newport in a day or two, when, I cannot say."

Mr. Kersey, speaking of the offer of Colonel Taylor of Boston, said that as Lord Dunraven had decided not to race his yacht again in America, it would be idle to discuss that or any other offer.

Wanted to Call the Races Off.

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—The Herald says: Mr. Iselin, in the interest of harmony, offered to call the two latest contests between Defender and Valkyrie off and sail again. This was voted down by the New York Yacht club. Then he proposed to call all three races null and void. This, too, was voted down. The reason given was that it would be a reflection on the work of the regatta committee.

That Tired Feeling

Is a common complaint and it is a dangerous symptom. It means that the system is debilitated because of impure blood, and in this condition it is especially liable to attacks of disease. Hood's sarsaparilla is the remedy for this condition, and also for that weakness which prevails at the change of season, climate of life.

Hood's pills act easily, yet promptly and efficiently on the bowels and liver.

A Pioneer Gone.

On Tuesday, Sept. 17th, at 7 o'clock p. m., there died at the city hospital one of the oldest settlers in the Red River Valley, Alex McDonald, who came to Glyndon either in 1871 or 1872, when the first settlers came, and who has lived in the Valley continuously ever since. He was a native of Canada, of Scotch descent and was a man who made many friends and had few, if any, enemies. He was a single man, 59 years old, a cousin of the late D. F. McDonald of this city, and had some relatives in North Dakota, where at one time he owned a fine farm which not long since he sold to a relative, on the proceeds of which he has been living during his illness of the past summer. When the grip was epidemic here he was a victim to it and never fully recovered his health. The funeral takes place to-day at St. Mary's church.

Great Lumber Fleet.

DULUTH, Sept. 18.—A fleet of over a dozen lumber carriers, who had been waiting for the northeast storm to subside, departed from Duluth, besides several other vessels. Such a procession has rarely left any port. The lumber carried out probably amounted to 10,000,000 feet.

Scared to Death by a Burglar.

ELKWOOD, Ind., Sept. 18.—A man giving the name of Frank Smith broke into Joseph Emmons's house and became engaged in a desperate conflict with Emmons. A sick child was scared to death, and Emmons presented a sickening sight when rescued by officers. Smith is in jail feigning insanity.

Injury Proved Fatal.

CASSELTON, N. D., Sept. 18.—Engineer James Buddie, who was seriously injured in the boiler explosion near Ripon last week, is dead. His remains were forwarded to Menahaga, Minn., where he had a family.

Burglars in Armenia.

FARGO, N. D., Sept. 18.—Burglars chloroformed D. O. Delonear, a farmer living near Amenia, this county, and secured $700 in cash. The men escaped, but are being pursued by a sheriff's posse.

A TIMELY REMINDER

Each season forces upon our consideration its own peculiar perils to health. The advent of fall finds many reduced in strength and vigor, poorly prepared to continue the business of life. The stomach and bowels, the great highway of animal economy, is especially liable to disorder in the fall. The nervous system has also suffered in the struggle. Typhoid fever and malaria in particular find in the fall that combination of earth, air and water that mark this season as especially dangerous. The falling leaves, the decaying vegetables contribute their share of contamination. Hood's Sarsaparilla furnishes a most valuable safeguard at these important points, and should be used in the fall before serious sickness has laid you low.

Maple Bay Items.

Plenty of work, but help very scarce.

Misses Randy and Lena Lee returned from Portland, N. D., where they have been for the past six months teaching school.

M. Gronvold has moved into the rooms over the store and finds it much more convenient to business.

Knute Tedmanson will buy wheat at Lee's elevator.

The body of a man was discovered lying near the track near Twin Valley, on Tuesday morning, by the engineer on the Northern Pacific railroad, who stopped the train and upon examination the man was found to be dead; one arm was broken and appearances seemed to indicate that his throat had been cut. The body was found in Norman county and the coroner of that county was summoned to inquire into the manner of the man's death. The circumstances seemed to justify a suspicion of foul play.

FARMERS ARE FOXY.

They Are on to Some Grain Trade Tricks.

Duluth Evening Herald.

From all along the lines of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific come reports of large shipments of new wheat. The grain trade everywhere has been looking for the rush to set in much before this time, but country shippers seem to have been waiting for a turn for the better in values. There is no doubt but that many large farmers are still holding their grain for higher prices, and intend to do so as long as they can. On the other hand grain men report that a considerable number of farmers having from 20,000 bushels upward to sell, intend to sell their cash wheat and buy an option against it.

The gentle farmer out in the Northwest is not an advocate of the anti-option bill. He generally does business direct with the receiver in this market, and is quite an adept at the kinks and twists in the grain trade. By selling his cash wheat instead of sending it into store in the elevators here and then borrowing money on the elevator receipt, he gets the use of the full value of the wheat at this time. Then as his wheat is sold, he turns about and buys the future for the amount. All that is necessary is for him to be able to carry the margins if the price should go lower, while if there is a recovery he gets the full benefit of the rise, and at the same time has the use of the money which his cash wheat brings. Most of the farmers are looking for a large advance in prices later in the season, and by turning what is known as speculators, they get in line to receive the benefits of whatever the advance may be.

The Fast Mail.

A production of unusual magnitude will be given at the Grand opera house to-morrow evening, September 10th. Lincoln J. Carter's superb scenic melodrama, "The Fast Mail," as its name indicates, deals largely with railroads in its incidents, but it presents an abundance of effects that are daring in their magnitude and admirable in their execution. The steamboat is said to be a wonder of clever conception and masterly mechanical work, and the scene, with its trains going at a terrific rate of speed, makes the stage seem like a piece of reality. The Niagara Falls scene is wonderfully beautiful, and it may safely be said is more elaborate than anything of the kind before attempted in this city. There are a multitude of minor effects that contribute to make the performance a revelation of realism. The whistles, bells and splashing are heard as the boat leaves the wharf. The sounds that tell of an approaching train herald the approach of the freight and the fast mail train—the latter rushing by with people gazing from the windows at the heroine who has just saved her lover's life by fastening a letter to the mail pouch. The roaring of Niagara Falls is heard, and the mist that rises from it is shown vividly. The play is under the personal direction of L. J. Carter, the author. The cast is said to be a capable one. The play is startling at times in the intensity of its climaxes, and these when presented with all the effects of the intricate stage settings, brings the interest to a degree that is rarely attained even in the melodrama. A large number of people are employed in the production, which is in many particulars plainly the result of care and skill combined.

THE RESERVATION.

Will be Opened This Fall or Next Spring.

A Washington dispatch says:—Chairman Baldwin, of the Chippewa Indian commission, had a consultation with Secretary Smith today in regard to the opening of Red Lake reservation and other matters that were outlined in the Journal upon the arrival of Major Baldwin in Washington. Nearly every question pertaining to the work of the commission was decided favorably by the secretary, and it is believed that the whole work can be completed before the close of 1896. A few purely legal questions, the most important of which is "What constitutes an Indian?" one that has not up to date been decided, will be taken up with the assistant attorney general, later, with a view to arriving at a decision governing it so far as it pertains to the Chippewas of Minnesota. There are also some legal questions pertaining to the allotment to Mille Lac Indians yet undecided. The questions pertaining to Leech Lake Indians have been settled, so that the work will be completed in a few months. The most important question presented to the secretary was as to the sale of pine timber on ceded lands of the reservation, over which a fire passed a year ago. It seems, however, that there is no authority, in accordance with the provisions of the Nelson act, by which the 50,000,000 or the 100,000,000 feet of burned pine on the Chippewa reservation can be saved from absolute destruction, although the assistant attorney general has not rendered his final opinion of this question. It is said that he has been unable to find any authority for the sale of the pine.

Secretary Smith reserves his decision in the matter of the opening of the Red Lake reservation, but Baldwin is positively of the opinion, and it is learned from Interior department sources that he is correct, that the right exists for opening the Red Lake Reservation immediately. He states that the reservation will not be opened later than next spring, but it is learned from other sources that Secretary Smith may decide to open it this fall, which could be done by a 30 day's proclamation. In the Red Lake reservation there are 3,200,000 acres, only about 120,000 of which will be needed for allotment to Indians. No estimate has been made as to pine upon it, but there is a vast amount. The Nelson act provides that this land shall be disposed of under the homestead law to actual settlers, at $1.25 per acre., in five equal payments. An important provision of this law provides that any person who has not heretofore had the benefit of the homestead or pre-emption law, and who has failed from any cause to perfect title to a tract of land, which was entered by him under either of said laws, may make a second homestead entry on this reservation.

Industrial Niagara.

Ten year ago it was impossible, commercially, to transmit power more than a few hundred feet away from the site of its production. It was equally impractical to use in manufacturing at Niagara itself so large an amount of power as would be required to justify the cost of improvement. For though there are fine transportation facilities both by rail and water, yet the immediate environment neither produces much raw material nor affords an extensive market, and freight rates on material would soon overbalance the possible benefits from cheap power. Electrical discoveries have entirely changed the problem, and with this subtle form of energy as a servant it is now remunerative y possible to distribute power over hundreds of miles from its source. The design of the Cataract Construction Company looking to the utilization of 100,000 horse-power, embraces such a combination as will enable it to deliver at Niagara all the power that there can be profitably used, and in addition, electrical machinery sufficient to serve all the adjacent territory with energy by transmission. The Niagara enterprise is therefore appropriately divided into two parts: First such development as is required to secure power from the falls. Second, the necessary apparatus and transmission lines to distribute the energy thus obtained to distant cities.—From "Industrial Niagara," by Arthur Vaughan, Abbott, C. E. in the September Review of Reviews.

ST. PAUL A WINNER

NEXT NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT TO BE HELD THERE.

Chosen on the First Ballot Over Denver and Buffalo—Colonel Ivan A. Walker of Indianapolis the New Head of the Order—Resolutions Adopted.

LOUISVILLE, Sept. 13.—The 30th national encampment of the G. A. R., will be held in St. Paul in 1896 with Colonel I. N. Walker of Indianapolis as commander-in-chief.

The encampment proper, the Woman's Relief Corps and the Ladies' Circle all began their proceedings at 10 a. m. and kept in session all day. The gentlemen of the encampment almost completed their work, while the ladies of the two auxiliaries did not get much done. There has been considerable agitation about uniting them in this year of reunited brotherhood and citizenship, but the ladies of the auxiliaries are as far apart as ever in spirit, if not in purpose, and they will remain divided.

The Confederate veterans, notably General Gordon, General Buckner and Mr. Watterson, took part again in the receptions and campfires, praising the good will that had brought peace in reality as well as in name. After delivering welcoming addresses during the day Mr. Watterson in the evening delivered his lecture on Abraham Lincoln. General Buckner is kept busy in being called for to address campfires. In the morning "the blue and the gray" will meet in a grand barbecue tendered by the latter to their guests and the programmes for the different campfires are also very elaborate.

Welcomed by Watterson.

At Music hall the preliminary exercises were of a very interesting character. General Lawler introduced Henry Watterson, who delivered a characteristic and hearty speech of welcome. In concluding Mr. Watterson said:

"I bid you welcome in the name of the people whose voice is the voice of God. You came and we resisted you; you come and we greet you; for times change and men change with them. You will find here scarcely a sign of the battle; not a reminiscence of its passions. Grim visaged war has smoothed his wrinkled front, and, whichever way you turn, on either side, you shall encounter, as you pass those moldering heaps, which remind you of your valor and travail, only the magnanimous spirit of dead heroes, with Grant and Sherman and Thomas and McPherson and Logan looking down from the happy stars as if repeating the words of the master: 'Charity for all—malice towards none.'"

Past Commander-in-Chief Warner responded briefly to Mr. Watterson. James Whitcomb Riley read an original poem and there was a presentation of a token to Past Commander Palmer. Then the Montana delegation presented Commander Lawler with a gavel made of gold, silver and copper and studded with diamonds, rubies and sapphires. These exercises over, General Lawler delivered his annual address.

The Next Encampment.

Upon he roll call for nominations for the next annual encampment, Colonel Albert D. Shaw of New York presented the name of Buffalo, and L. E. Brewster of Denver presented the name of that city. H. A. Castle of St. Paul renewed the invitation which St. Paul had sent to the encampment one year ago and told how at that time she had withdrawn in favor of Louisville. W. W. French of Tennessee extended an invitation for the next encampment at Nashville. Francis Downs of New Mexico seconded the nomination of Denver, while Governor Hoard of Iowa seconded the nomination of St. Paul in behalf of Wisconsin and Iowa. A vote was then taken and St. Paul was elected on the first ballot as follows: St. Paul 393, Buffalo 226, Nashville 33, Denver 103.

Walker for Commander.

W. A. Ketcham of Indiana presented the name of Colonel Ivan A. Walker of Indianapolis for commander-in-chief as a representative of that fearless and sturdy loyalty that rescued the nation. The Nebraska delegation named T. S. Clarkson, but that gentleman declined to be a candidate against Comrade Walker, and moved that the rules be suspended and the adjutant general be directed to cast the unanimous vote of the encampment for Comrade Walker. The motion prevailed, with a hurricane of cheers. In the contest for senior vice commander both the candidates were from Kentucky. They were General E. H. Hobson and Michael Minton, the former being elected. C. E. Cosgrove of Washington was elected junior vice-commander over J. O. Gregg of Montana.

COLONEL WALKER'S RECORD.

Something About the New Commander of the Grand Army.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 14.—Colonel I. N. Walker, commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, was born in 1842. With the Seventy-third Indiana volunteers he took part in the battles of Perryville and Stone River. He was promoted from captain to major; was assigned to the position of lieutenant colonel at the battle of Stone River and afterward received a commission from Governor Morton. At the battle of Blount's plantation near Gadsden, Colonel Hathaway was killed and Colonel Walker assumed command. The regiment was compelled to surrender. Colonel Walker with General A. D. Streight and 24 others in February, 1864, tunneled their way out from the prison to liberty. Colonel Walker was recaptured four days later and returned to the prison, where he remained until exchanged in the following May. He returned to his regiment and served until bad health from exposure compelled his resignation. He was a volunteer aide on the staff of General Wilson during the battle of Nashville. He lived at Nashville several years after the war, and then moved to Indianapolis. For nearly ten years he was first deputy in the office of the auditor of Marion county. He was a candidate for auditor of state in 1890 on the Republican ticket which was defeated.

Governor Hovey in 1891 appointed him state tax commissioner, and he still holds that office through appointment of Governor Matthews. In 1893 Colonel Walker was elected vice commander of the G. A. R.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

Matters Favored by the G. A. R. Encampment.

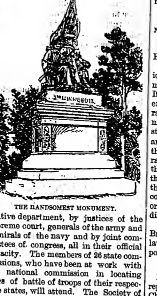
LOUISVILLE, Sept. 14.—Resolutions were adopted at the national encampment of the G. A. R., declaring it the sense of that body that all old veterans should be favored by civil service boards; that such boards should not discriminate against these heroes of the rebellion on account of their age. This was brought about by the fact that many civil service boards in Chicago, Washington and other large cities have put an age limit on examination applicants. In this way many able bodied old soldiers have been shut out. The resolutions were vehement in their demand that an exception should be made in favor of veterans. Another matter of interest was the adoption of a resolution favoring the placing of flags upon every public school building and the introduction of military drill in the public school curriculum.

Resolutions of condolence and sympathy for the parents and friends of the young militiamen who were killed by the explosion of the caisson Wednesday, were adopted. There was an adverse report made upon the resolution favoring the establishment of a national university of patriotism, and the report was adopted. The camp further declared itself against long marches at future encampments. This was brought about on account of the large number of veterans who are becoming to old to endure them.

THE CHICKAMAUGUA CELEBRATION

Dedication of the Greatest Military Park in the World.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Sept. 17.—The battlefield of Chickamauga is once more fairly swarming with humanity. Many thousands of people are here and many more thousands will come from North and South within the next 24 hours. This time, however, they come with no hostile intent, but to participate in one of the most imposing ceremonies of the age—the dedication of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga battlefields as a public park. Veterans of both armies, who fought so bitterly in 1863, will have equal share in the exercises of 1895. These exercises have been prepared under the guiding hand of the secretary of war and by authority of congress, and will be attended by governors of two thirds of the states, by members of the executive department, by justices of the supreme court, generals of the army and admirals of the navy and by joint committees of congress, all in their official capacity. The members of 26 state commissions, who have been at work with the national commission in locating lines of battle of troops of their respective states, will attend. The Society of the Army of the Cumberland, of the Army of the Tennessee, the G. A. R., and the Association of Confederate Veterans will be present in usual numbers. This concourse of people is to be increased by a gathering of an army of visitors already known to be so great that it will tax the capacity of the railroads centering here and the city to their utmost capacity.



THE HANDSOMEST MONUMENT.

The Official Dedication.

The official dedication, under the auspices of congress and the secretary of war, will occupy the 18th and 20th instants, but exercises of a general character, which will be attended by most of the officials which are to arrive, will occupy the whole day of the 18th and the evenings of the 18th, 19th and 20th. The dedications of state monuments will occur mainly on the 18th. Michigan, her governor presiding, will lead off at Snodgrass Hill at 9 a. m., Ohio, with an elaborate programme, will follow at noon, at the same place, and Minnesota at 2 o'clock.

These exercises will all take place at the platform and amphitheater erected for the national dedication exercises at the foot of Snodgrass Hill, the famous Horse Shoe Ridge of General Thomas' battle. The Missouri dedication will occur on the 20th, at Bragg's headquarters on Missionary Ridge.

BIG STRIKE ORDERED.

Coke Workers of the Connellsville Region Vote to Quit.

SCOTTDALE, Pa., Sept. 18.—At a convention of the coke workers here today, it was decided to order a strike at once, at all the works, until the demand for an advance, made recently, is granted by the operators. If the order is obeyed it will affect about 20,000 men and will close down all the works in the Connellsville region.

REVOKED THE ORDER.

Fox River Manufacturers Can Use 40,000 Cubic Feet of Water Per Minute.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 18.—The acting secretary of war has issued an order, revoking a former order of the department regarding the Fox river in Wisconsin. The paper mills on the Fox river will now be permitted to draw off 40,000 cubic feet per minute, provided the level of the water does not fall 18 inches below the crest of the dam at Menasha.

Passengers Cremated.

LONDON, Sept. 1?.—Fire broke out on board the steamer Iona, from Edinburgh to London. The flames spread with so much rapidity that before aid reached the vessel six of the passengers and the stewardess of the Iona were burned to death. The fire was put out after four hours struggle.

HEAD END COLLISION.

Wreck of Passenger Trains on the Great Northern Road.

FERGUS FALLS, Minn., Sept. 13.—By disobedience of orders on the part of an engineer the worst disaster that has been experienced on the Great Northern road for three years occurred Wednesday, the eastbound and westbound passenger trains coming together in a cut near Ashby, the collision resulting in death to five trainmen and serious injury to several passengers.

Running at a Rapid Rate.

Both trains were long and pulled by heavy engines. The westbound train, being behind, was running at the rate of about 45 miles an hour, and the eastbound nearly as fast. Engineer Haines had been ordered to take siding at Melby, but probably forgot his orders. Conductor Manley was dumbfounded to see the train pass Melby without stopping, and instantly pulled the air brake, but was too late, for almost the same instant the engineer could see the eastbound train coming, and also applied the air. The road is a trifle down grade and the train was so heavy and going so fast and the distance so short that the speed of the train was hardly slackened before they struck. The entire train was piled up in a space about the length of two cars and everything

Smashed Beyond Recognition,

the sleeper of the westbound train being on top of the wreck and fully 80 feet in the air. How the passengers of this sleeper escaped death is a miracle. Engineer Haines of the westbound train is buried under the debris. Engineer Emerson of the eastbound train was found in a ditch with his head cut off and body disemboweled.

The injured passengers are all from Mason, Wis., and formed a party en route for the coast. Miss Maggie Allison is the only one of the party who is thought to be fatally injured.

CORONERS VERDICT.

Railroad Company Censured for the Great Northern Accident.

ST. CLOUD, Minn., Sept. 14.—The verdict of the coroner's inquest on the Melby wreck was as follows: "We find that the direct cause of the accident is to be laid to Engineer Haines in acting on wrong orders. We further blame the company for ordering passenger trains to meet at a blind siding where no agent is and no lights are kept, also in allowing a conductor to send two orders to the engineer when only one was needed."

DECIDED THE OMAHA CASE.

New Police Board Declared Legal By the Supreme Court.

OMAHA, Sept. 17.—A special to The Bee from Lincoln, Neb., says:

The supreme court has filed its decision in the Omaha fire and police commission case with the clerk of the court. It is quite voluminous, comprising several thousand words, covering all points raised by the attorneys and quoting many authorities. The decision in substance finds for the new board of fire and police commissioners and declares the act constitutional. Upon the point raised by attorneys for the old board that Governor Holcomb did not attend the meeting of Churchill and Russell, at the time the new board was named, the court holds that the interests of a state or municipality are not to be jeopardized by the action of one party.

In conclusion the court finds that Broatch, Vandervort and Foster are the lawfully constituted board of fire and police commissioners of Omaha.

To Stir Up Officials.

FOO CHOW, Sept. 18.—It having been reported that the Chinese officials at Ku Cheng were not pushing the inquiry into the massacre of missionaries, Aug. 1, with the zeal that the occasion demands, two foreign gunboats are said to have been dispatched up the river to stir up the officials to greater activity.

LONG ISLAND LOSING ITS TAIL.

Inroads of the Sea Causing Alarm to Property Owners at Orient Point.

Long Island, which looks on the map like a big fish about to swallow New York city, is apparently being slowly swallowed by the ocean. Portions of its shores have disappeared beneath the waves, and now the northern fork of its huge tail is vanishing. About two miles of Orient point, that formed a sandy beach two years ago, is now under 15 feet of water. The lighthouse on the point was six rods from the sea a few years ago. It has since been toppled over by the sea, and only a small part of the surrounding beach is visible.

The bluffs on both the sound and the bay side of Orient point have been sinking at the rate of about 10 or 12 feet a year. The same state of affairs is true of Montauk point, but there the bluffs jut up so abruptly and so high above the sea that the rising of the water is not so noticeable. A rise of a foot or two on the low shores near Peconic bay will submerge acres of land. Much of the threatened land on Orient point forms fertile farms, and the steady advance of the shore line is causing no small concern to the owners. The water has in several places found its way across a low spot on the point from the sound to the bay. The result will be to ultimately divide the peninsula into a series of small islands, similar to Plum, Little Gull and Great Gull islands, all of which were doubtless once a part of the mainland and were cut off by the rise of the sea. The village of Orient is situated in a particularly narrow and low portion of the peninsula, and the next serious inroad of the ocean will probably occur there. In that case 2,000 acres of land and a village of 1,000 people will have to be abandoned.—New York Sun.

From Every Clime.

Twenty-nine nationalities are represented in a New York public grammar school. There are in the primary and grammar departments of this school 1,300 children, and at the last census there were represented among them Hebrews, Italians, Germans, Irish, Greeks, Russians, Poles, French, Scotch, English, Welsh, Swiss, Chinese, Silesians, Assyrians, Tunisians (North Africa), Javanese, Kongo West Indians, Cubans, Norwegians, Swedes, Austrians, Hungarians, Herzegovinians, Wallachians, Moldavians, Egyptians, Danes and Armenians. Not over 10 per cent of those children speak English in their homes, the proportion in the primary being under and that in the grammar department over this estimate.

Mrs. George J. Gould is very fond of sitting for her portrait. Mr. Gould has in his possession twenty-three different paintings of his wife.

Financial Affairs of France.

The financial speech of the ex-Prime Minister M. Loubet, in the senate, is to be posted, by order of that house, all over France. There are some statements in it worthy of consideration. Thus, the national debt is set down at £1,200,000,000. It also appears that the difficulty of making both ends meet has greatly increased since M. Meline secured the triumph of his system. The court of audits has discovered 211 irregularities in the last budgetary account of money paid. By irregularities it means embezzlements, set down under the head of "virements."

Among them figures the £800 spent on behalf of a minister for "cabs," and £040 a month for little "dejeuners" at Voisin's, where a minister of justice entertained his friends. The "virements" at the home office are set down at £650, those of the war office at £1,830, those of the colonial office at £2,090, those of the public works office at £2,375. When M. de Freycinet was war minister, the "virements" of his department amounted to about £6,000 a year. He, as minister of public works and war, swelled the national debt more than any one else in power since Thiers' retirement. The redeemable loans were an expedient of M. de Freycinet to give employment to the public works department.—London News.

Do You Want to Stop Tobacco?

You Can Be Cured While Using it.

The habit of using tobacco grows on a man until grave diseased conditions are produced. Tobacco causes cancer of the mouth and stomach: dyspepsia, loss of memory, nervous affections, congestion of the retina and wasting of the optic nerve; resulting in impairment of the vision, even to the extent of blindness; dizziness, or vertigo; tobacco asthma; nightly suffocation, dull pain in region of the heart, followed later by sharp pains, palpitation and weakened pulse, resulting in fatal heart disease. It also causes loss of vitality.

QUIT BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE.

To quit suddenly is too severe a shock to the system, as tobacco—to an inveterate user, becomes a stimulant that his system continually craves. "BACO-CURO" is a scientific and reliable vegetable remedy, guaranteed to be perfectly harmless, and which has been in use for the last 23 years, having cured thousands of habitual tobacco users—smokers, chewers and snuff-dippers.

You can use all the tobacco you want while taking "Baco-Curo." It will notify you when to stop. We give a written guarantee to permanently cure any case with three boxes, or refund the money with ten per cent interest.

"Baco-Curo" is not a substitute, but a reliable and scientific cure—which absolutely destroys the craving for tobacco without the aid of will power, and with no inconvenience. It leaves the system as pure and free from nicotine as the day you took your first chew or smoke.

Sold by all druggists at $1.00 per box, three boxes (thirty day's treatment and guaranteed cure) $2.50, or sent direct upon receipt of price. Send six two-cent stamps for sample box, booklet and proofs free. Eureka Chemical and Manufacturing Co., Manufacturing Chemists, La Crosse, Wisconsin. [17-24]

"Dan's place" means McKinnon's restaurant, every time. The place where you can get one of the best meals in the city for very little wealth.

Public Spirited Citizens

Should take a delight in adding anything to our town or county in the educational line which is valuable, unique and is not found in other communities. Our townsman, C. E. Misner, tells us he has an opportunity to place in our city a fine three and a half inch astronomical telescope, which will be for the educational benefit of our citizens. There is not as fine a telescope anywhere in our state, except at Carlton college, Northfield, where they have a fine astronomical observatory. Mr. Misner says that Prof. Hicks' paper, Word and Works, of St. Louis, offers him this fine instrument if he will get up a club of 800 subscribers to the paper. He is willing to put in a considerable part of his time and make a great effort to secure this fine telescope. If our citizens give him proper support it will not be a very hard matter to secure it. Word and Works is a fine monthly magazine and is well worth $1 a year, the subscription price. Mr. Misner will take subscriptions to this paper and every subscriber will have the privilege of looking through the fine telescope, which will be put up at Lynne's photograph gallery, free of charge. You get your money's worth if you do not look through the telescope, for Word and Works is a splendid family monthly and cheap at $1.00, but you have the satisfaction of knowing also that you have contributed toward the addition to our county of a fine instrument, not to be equaled by anything in northwestern Minnesota. Mr. Misner, or his agent, will be around to see the people of the county within the next six weeks and we hope he will receive encouragement wherever he goes. [15-tf]

COWS FOR SALE.

Having decided to rent the farm I will offer for sale the fine herd of Jersey cows now on section 9, town of Fairfax, or will rent the farm including the dairy stock. For particulars enquire of H. E. Cooke at the JOURNAL office, Crookston.

M. in Book 52 of Mortgages on Page 110, conveying and mortgaging the following described land and premises, situate in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: Lot Twenty-eight (28) in Block Four (4) Traill's Addition to East Grand Forks according to the plat of said Addition now on file or of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk county.

And whereas, by reason of said default, the power in said mortgage has become operative, and the mortgagee has paid out the sum of Thirty and 32-100 Dollars ($30.32) for taxes past due on said premises, and there is now claimed to be due and is due at the date hereof on said mortgage and the debt secured thereby and for taxes, the sum of Six hundred and twelve & 97-100 Dollars ($612.97) and no action or proceeding at law has been instituted to recover said mortgage indebtedness or any part thereof

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale therein contained and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of said above described premises by the sheriff of said Polk county at public auction, at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston, county of Polk, state of Minnesota, on Saturday the 12th day of October A. D. 1895, at ten o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount which will then be due on said mortgage and the debt secured thereby, together with the amount paid for said taxes and the costs and charges of foreclosure and Fifty Dollars ($50) attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage.

Do You Catch the Idea?

A chewing tobacco made to please a universal taste, must be prepared from the highest grade leaf, with a skill that can only be acquired by the longest experience. It must possess a delicious flavor, and a lasting substance, and must neither be too light nor too heavy, too sweet nor too flat. In Climax Plug every element dear to the tobacco chewer is so skillfully concentrated and blended as to make the most delicious chewing tobacco ever put on the market. Try it and you're sure to catch the idea.

THE STORY OF A PORTRAIT.

How the Painting Was Rescued From an Ignominious Fate.

Probably Chicago's first painting with a history was an excellent portrait of one of her fairest citizens—a belle of 1837. Fine work as it was, however, at one time there was imminent danger of its becoming a decorative signboard of a prominent local livery stable.

Long before the days of the iron horse a wandering artist strayed along what is now the corner of Lake and Clark streets, and there opened a studio. Among the early patrons of his brush was a dazzling creature who yearned to have her beauty perpetuated upon canvas. She was a leader in the swelldom of the town, the adored object of both secret and outspoken admiration of all the bachelors of her set. Her family had not come over in the Mayflower, but her blood was the most cerulean in the faraway down east whence it came. Hence it was with propriety that she proposed to gratify her ambition, and posed, bedecked with a wonderful "amazone" and waving numberless plumes, disporting herself with equanimity on the back of a rearing, plunging steed.

The artist had a fine subject. Needless to say he rendered it full justice. When the canvas was finished, the impressive ensemble was placed upon exhibition in the artist's studio, and everybody who was anybody dropped in and lavished his admiration upon it. After a time the novelty of the display wore off. People had seen all they wanted of it, but the fair equestrienne's portrait still hung upon its creator's walls, unclaimed, and, alas, unpaid for. The landlord of the embryonic Sir Joshua Reynolds grew unpleasant to him. He became addicted to the abominable habit of "dropping in" upon the young artist and making unnecessary remarks about "the rent" at all kinds of inopportune moments, until at last life became a burden to the child of art, and in despair he decided to return to his native east and abandon all his dreams of fame in the wild prairie town of the west.

Among the inartistic and unpretentious citizens of the town was a certain highly prosperous stable keeper who was aware of the circumstances connected with the unpaid for picture and the painter's impecuniosity. The night preceding the former's proposed departure for the city of his birth it was given out among the good people roundabout that the stable keeper had purchased the famous portrait for $500, and that henceforth it should be the attraction of his signboard over his new livery stable. The rumor spread like wildfire within a few hours, and at nightfall artist and stableman had the satisfaction of receiving a visit from the haughty relatives of the picture's original. The required sum was gladly paid by them. Two hundred fell to the lot of the shrewd liveryman, the painter received his first price, $300, and every one was serene over the historic transaction.—Chicago Tribune.

SMALL BOY AND BIG VOICE.

They Create a Commotion on a Chicago "L" Train.

The boy and his voice were not mates. That was evident the moment the former attempted to use the latter. The one was not quite a "5 foot boy," while the other would easily pass as a "7 foot voice." They both got on an Alley L train at Congress street, and the boy undertook to say something about having 5 o'clock papers to sell, whereupon the windows rattled and the car began to rock. The old man who had jumped so high that his head nearly struck the roof looked at the boy reproachfully for a moment and then attempted to be humorous.

"A little louder, please," he said.

"Huh?" returned the boy inquiringly.

"Speak a little louder. Have you lost your voice?"

The other passengers laughed, and the boy seemed somewhat discomfited.

"Paper?" he asked, going close to the man.

"No," replied the man, gratified at the success of his little joke. "I was merely wondering why you didn't speak out instead of whispering."

The boy was close to the man's ear by this time, and he let out a cry of "Evening papers!" that fairly jarred the engineer.

He got to the door first, and the book that the old man threw after him merely raised a bump on the side of the conductor's head.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Chinese Court.

The ceremonial of the Chinese court is somewhat exacting. It used to include, if it does not now, complete prostration before the throne. Last century a Persian envoy refused to go through the degrading ordeal. Directions were given to the officials to compel him by stratagem to do so. On arriving one day at the entrance to the hall of audience, the envoy found no means of going in except by a wicket, which would compel him to stoop very low. With great presence of mind and considerable audacity the embassador turned round and entered backward, thus saving the honor of his country.—London Standard.

The Pleasing Part.

Fuddy—How did you like Hammerton in "Julius Cæsar" last night?

Duddy—Well, I can't say that he was altogether satisfactory in the earlier scenes, but it was a real pleasure to see him die.—Boston Transcript.

How charming is divine philosophy! Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose, but musical, as is Apollo's lute, and a perpetual feast of nectared sweets, where no crude surfeit reigns.—Milton.

In 1870 the population of native extraction—that is, Americans or the children of Americans—was 26,000,000 and of foreign extraction 21,000,000.

The [illegible] "fis," as a termination to the name of a country, [illegible] Celtic origin.

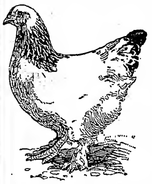
GAPES IN CHICKENS.

A Writer Who Claims It Is Nothing but a Cold.

A subscriber from Delsplaie, Va., writes as follows to the Baltimore Sun: "I would like to say something about gapes in spring chickens. I say spring chickens, because summer chickens are not troubled to any extent with gapes. I am aware that my idea will be hooted, but, nevertheless, it is my experience. I am not a chicken man, but raise enough every year to have for use on my table nine months in the year and to have several dozen to dispose of. I have raised chicks on the same ground for the past 30 years, and have lost not over six chicks by gapes. It is true that my chicken run is on a hill, and I have plank floors in all my coops. I do not let chicks run out in the morning until the air is tempered with the sun. I feed on baked cornmeal seasoned with a little salt and pepper. Gapes in chickens is nothing but a bad cold (croup, if you prefer to call it so). Do everything you can as to cleanliness, keep the chicks from exposure as you would your infant child, and you will not be bothered with gapes." The above is a new theory regarding the gape question. As old fowls are much more affected with roup than chicks and never have any signs of that yawning or gaping so characteristic of the disease, it would seem the writer of the above is wrong in his conclusions.

Light Brahmas.

The Light Brahma is a superior winter layer, producing the larger number of her eggs from October to May. As poultry the chicks have to be killed quite young, say ten 10 weeks old for broilers, the most profitable time as roasters being at 8 months.



LIGHT BRAHMA PULLET.

Buff Leghorns.

Within the last few years a craze for buff colored fowls has seized the poultry fraternity. The old and deserving Buff Cochins have returned to favor, and varieties of the same color have been made up from other breeds by crossing. As a result we have Buff Wyandottes, Buff Plymouth Rocks and Buff Leghorns. This variety was first accepted by fanciers as a standard breed in 1893. They do not yet breed as true to feather and other features as varieties that have been longer established, but this difficulty will be overcome in a few years by proper handling.

Buff Leghorns have the excellence of all Leghorns—that of being famous layers. They have the reputation of excelling all the other Leghorn varieties in the size of their eggs and in the weight of their bodies.

If the breeders of this new variety wish to make it popular with farmers, they must so manipulate it as to maintain its present reputation. The color is a popular one, and a prolific laying habit is desirable, but those who keep poultry for everyday, practical purposes demand eggs of a fair size and a carcass that sells well in market and affords a good supply of meat when brought on the table. If fanciers are wise, this hint will be sufficient.

Hens That Will Lay.

Never feed all corn or cornmeal, but feed all the fowls will eat to both old and young, the year round of suitable food. I have no faith in the theory, says an expert in an exchange, that lean pullets will lay more eggs than fat ones. For laying hens, give morning and noon a feed of two parts cornmeal, three parts wheat middlings and four parts wheat bran; add a little salt, mix with hot water, feed warm in cold weather. Give green food, especially in winter, chopped apples, onions, beets, carrots, etc., mixed with the warm mash, adding a little meat, lard or suet scraps, three times a week. Keep a cabbage hung in the henhouse within reach of the fowls, give warm water two or three times a day in winter, feed wheat or corn at night. Keep ground bone, oyster shells, broken crockery and charcoal where young and old can have access to them the year round, and my experience for it—if your henhouse is reasonably warm—you will have winter layers, if your pullets are hatched by the 1st of May. Do not keep too many in a small house. Ten pullets in a house 8 by 10 will lay more eggs in proportion than 20 with the same care.

The Indispensable Hen.

Our real American bird is the turkey, and a lordly fellow he is when arrayed in all his pride. But, though he has not lacked advocates, he is not likely to take the place of the eagle in our national devices.

When it comes to merit of the highest order, the first of all birds beyond comparison is the hen. It adds to the wealth of the country every year in eggs alone $135,000,000, or about the combined value of our output of iron and wool. The hen in England is a great institution, and yet that country imported $22,000,000 worth of eggs and poultry last year. Nobody ever complains of an overproduction of eggs, and they are a cash article. But no political economist has ever thought the hen worthy of his scientific consideration.

The world could easily survive the loss of all political economists, but what a stir there would be if the hen should be threatened with extermination!

THE Message, Rev. R. H. Battey's paper, looks very much improved by its nice new head. The paper is now devoted wholly to temperance work and will be a vigorous advocate of the cause.

WE feel like saying "didn't I tell you so?" The Hennepin Co. grand jury that investigated the case of Mrs. Perkins, charged with killing her twin sister to obtain the life insurance takes the same view as the JOURNAL has held of the innocence of the accused. An action for heavy damages is now liable to be brought.

THE Minnesota State Fair just closed last Saturday was one of the finest exhibitions ever beheld in this state. The display in every department was enormous and that of Polk county particularly fine. Very many strangers from other states beheld the glories of the great state of Minnesota for the first time in their life and could get a pretty accurate idea of our resources.

THE National Encampment G. A. R. for 1896 will be held at St. Pau This was decided at the Encampment at Louisville last week and was the result of hard pushing and enthusiastic work done by the Minnesota boys, who have been working on this matter for more than a year. St. Paul and Minnesota will give the boys in blue a royal welcome.

JUST as long as the finances of the country are controlled by Wall street just so long will the present uncertain state of things continue and one of the first things the next session of congress should undertake is a separation of the treasury affairs from so intimate a connection with Wall street. This has been done before, can and must be done again and the present is the best opportunity that may occur in years.

IN New York Tom Platt seems to be right in it politically. That means a boom for Levi P. Morton for president, although there is a very respectable number who would really like to see Chauncy M. Depew shy his castor into the ring—but as yet Chauncy seems to be too shy. At this date it looks very much as though Levi P. can cull the turn on New York.

An Interview with Archbishop Crocke of Ireland.

"Looking at Ireland," said I, "as it is to-day and as it was when you were a boy, how do you think it has changed?"

"For the better," said the Archbishop unhesitatingly. "Very much for the better. Education is very much more widely diffused, the people are better shod and better fed."

"What about drunkenness?"

"If it was not for drunkenness there would be no crime in Ireland at all As it is there is no crime which does not arise out of that evil. There is indeed a great deal too much drinking in the country. I will never confirm any boy or girl before they have taken a pledge never to touch any alcoholic drink before twenty-one years of age. But there is a great and wonderful change in the habits of the better-to-do people. The quantity of punch which was drunk fifty years ago or even thirty years ago was enormously greater than that which is drunk to-day. People thought nothing of drinking then to an extent which to-day would be thought quite disgraceful. The improvement which has been wrought among the gentry is spreading to the townspeople and from them I hope it will descend to the mass of the people. As for the number of licensed houses stands in any relation whatever to the quantity of drink consumed. Our places are very simple; they have no fascinations to lure the people into them, and a man can get drunk in one place as soon as he can in a half a dozen.

"And what about religion?" I asked.

"Religion," said the Archbishop. "Is the most satisfactory record of all. I do not believe that from the days of St. Patrick down till now has there ever been a time when the Irish people were so devoted to their religion, practicing their religion, as they are to-day. That is a great comfort in the midst of all adversity and disappointments."—From a character sketch of Archbishop Croke, in the September Review of Reviews.

"Dan's place" means McKinnon's restaurant, every time. The place where you can get one of the best meals in the city for very little wealth.

An Early Autumn Magazine.

"Compulsion in child training," is the subject which the Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., discusses wisely and well in the September Ladies' Home Journal. His article is ably supplemented by Edward W. Bok's excellent editorial on "Our schools and our Teachers." "The Woman who Paints cats" is the striking title of a full page devoted to Madame Henriette Ronner, the celebrated cat painter: several copies of her most celebrated pictures being given. "The Men who Write our Comic Operas" are represented by portraits and sketches of "The Composer of 'Wang,' "The Composer of 'Robin Hood,'" and "The Composer of Princess Bonnie.'" Graceful in theme and melodious in construction is Mr. Robert Coverly's song, "Love's Reflections," written exclusively for this issue of the Journal. Grace Greenwood writes of "The Man Who Most Influenced Me," Amelia E. Barr of "Conversation at the Dinner Table," and Frank R. Stockton's "Love Before Breakfast" comes to a happy conclusion. Mrs. Mallon's "The Early Winter Bonnets," and "Silk and Woolen Bodices" are daintily illustrated by Abby E. Underwood, as are "Party Dresses for Children," by W. Granville Smith, and "The Early Autumn Coats," by Frank O. Small. Women who love dainty needle work will be delighted with Helen Mar Adams' "Greek Embroidery Designs" and Mrs. Barnes-Bruce's "A Bridal Table Set." This autumn's brides will find much practical advice in Mrs. Hamilton Mott's up-to-date article on "This Autumn's Wedding Etiquette." J. Harry Adams writes of "Some Artistic Doorways," and several bright women give some charming ideas for "Beautifying the home." Eben E. Rexford writes of "Cultivating the Lily," and Emma M. Hooper of "Dressing the Young Girl." Altogether this attractive issue, which goes out with a cover especially designed by Mr. C. D. Gibson, is worth ten times its price of ten cents. The Ladies' Home Journal is published by the Curtis Publishing Company, of Philadelphia, for ten cents per number and one dollar per year.

Senator Nelson as a Farmer.

St. Cloud Journal-Press: A good many people have thought Senator Nelson's claim to being a farmer was one originated for political purposes but after looking over his splendid farm of nearly 400 acres, and his comfortable farm house where he has lived since 1871, we can testify that he is not only a farmer, but even a better farmer than a politican, if such a thing is possible. It is well kept and intelligently cultivated, and the result is immense crops. Mr. Nelson is blessed with a charming wife, and she has contributed her full share to his success.

A number of State Governors will be present at the opening of the Atlanta Exposition. Among them will be Governor Charles T. O'Ferrall, of Virginia, with his entire staff. Governor Levi P. Morton, of New York, will also be present, with his entire staff and the New York Commission. Two days later Governor Urban A. Woodbury, of Vermont, will be here with his staff to attend the reunion of the veterans of both armies of blue and gray.

Lincoln As a Lover.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S sentimental perplexities are to be shown in an article of singular interest which John Gilmer Speed has written from unpublished letters of Lincoln to Joshua Speed, for the next issue of The Ladies' Home Journal. The article will show that the great president was not steady in his affairs of the heart, that he floundered in his love, and finally induced his friend Speed to marry and tell him (Lincoln) whether marriage was a failure or not.

A Book for Young Men

EDWARD BOK, the editor of The Ladies' Home Journal, has written a book for young men called "Successward; A Young Man's Book for Young Men," which the Revelle will publish in a fortnight. The book aims to cover all the important phases of a young man's life: his business life, social life, his amusements, religious life, dress, his attitude toward women and the question of marriage. This is Mr. Bok's first book.

A Horse-Show Story.

MRS. BURTON HARRISON has written a new novelette, dealing in the main with the "fashionables of New York at the Horse Show, which The Ladies' Home Journal is about to begin. Mr. W. T. Smedley has illustrated the story.

Before going on a sea-voyage or into the country, be sure and put a box of Ayer's Pills in your valise. You may have occasion to thank us for this hint. To relieve constipation biliousness, and nausea, Ayer's Pills are the best in the world. They are also easy to take.

An "Unbecoming Business."

While the Catholic church is officially not prepared to place outside its pale every nominal Catholic engaged in the sale of liquor, it has expressed the official judgment that the sale of liquor for private gain is an "unbecoming" business for Catholic Christians to pursue, and it strongly urges adherents of the church in no such selling. On the part of Irish Catholics, in particular, there is a very noticeable movement in different parts of the country to rid the streets of the disgrace of Irish names on the gilded sign boards of grog-shops. In Archbishop Ireland's diocese this movement has been conspicuously successful. But even where the Catholic church is not so aggressively hostile to the saloon-keeping interest, there is an evident disposition to permit no compromise on the Sunday question, but to enforce the view that saloons ought not to be open at any hour on the first day of the week. Thus at the very moment when scores of easy-going politicians of American birth and ancestry—trained in the spirit of reverence for a quiet and religiously observed Sunday—are loudly declaring that the "American Sabbath," so-called, must give way to the more liberal habits and customs of European newcomers, there are thousands of those very newcomers themselves who are protesting against a "Continental Sunday" and showing themselves more American than many Americans in their staunch preference for a conservative and strictly-kept day of rest.—From "The Progress of the World," in the September Review of Reviews.

BIMETALLISM IN ENGLAND.

Minneapolis Tribune.

The Globe believes that bimetallism is gaining in England, despite Mr. Balfour's recent declaration that he is not authorized to pledge his associates to any bimetallic policy. Whether bimetallism is gaining in England or elsewhere undoubtedly depends upon the kind of bimetallism meant. In this country the bimetallism that means the concurrent use of gold and silver money on such a parity that one dollar is as good as every other dollar, is very strong. But the bimetallism which would allow Tom, Dick and Harry to take 50 cents worth of silver to the mint and get it coined into a dollar, is losing ground. So in England there is undoubtedly a growing sentiment in favor of the larger use of silver and the readjustment of the ratio between that metal and gold by international agreement, so as to bring the commercial and monetary parties close together. But there is no "bimetallic" sentiment in England in the sense that the term "bimetallism" is used by the free silverites in this country. The late election was not fought on the money issue; and although Mr. Balfour and other conservative leaders proclaim themselves bimetallists, they are not as yet prepared to propose any practical measure looking towards bimetallism. Perhaps the subject may come up in parliament at the long session and be made the subject of exhaustive discussion. If so, the debate will be interesting, and may result in a demand for an international conference. But that is as far as the bimetallic movement in England is likely to get for some time to come.

Towne's Sudden Tumble.

Little Falls Transcript: Mr. Towne's views must have been wrong at one time or the other, and not formed on complete familiarity with the subject. He claims to have made the financial question a careful study for years, and we are convinced that he was fully capable of forming a correct opinion a year ago. Believing that, what tolerance can we now have for his professions? He has sacrificed the confidence of the people and they will be slow to again trust him.

The movement to bring the school-boys and school-girls of the South to Atlanta has met with prompt encouragement, both from the schools and railroads. The Chief of Publicity and Promotion is in receipt of letters from general passenger agents of a number of railroads, saying that they will co-operate heartily in the matter, and printed matter has been sent out through the railroads to the schools.

In this connection information comes that the University of Tennessee will send down a battalion of cadets from Knoxville to Atlanta in November to go into camp near the exposition. The university will be represented also by a fine exhibit in the Liberal Arts department.

Saturday afternoon a special train on the Seabourd Air Line brought in 200 Chinamen, imported for the Chinese village at the Cotton States and International Exposition. The Chinamen landed at Vancouver several weeks ago, were brought to New York by the Canadian Pacific, and reached Atlanta over the Seaboard.

The Cotton States and International Exposition will open more in advance than the World's Fair did and a very large proportion of the exhibits will be in place. Within a week after the opening the whole thing will be practically complete.

LOADING AN OCEAN LINER.

The Storage Is Something Tremendous and Requires Careful Packing.

To watch the loading of grain, either from an elevator or a lighter, into one of the mammoth vessels engaged in its transportation, is to witness one of the chief operations in the movements of the world's commerce. It is carried in long pipes, with a funnel shaped movable appendage at the end, which is shifted by means of a rope from one part of the hold to another, according as the stream of grain fills up the spaces reserved for it. The grain flows into the vessel with the noise and velocity of a torrent and sends a dense volume of dust and chaff upward, obscuring the depths beneath and making the men attending the stowage below look like ghosts in the rising mist.

The "trimming" of the grain in the holds is an important part of its storage. After several thousand bushels have been streamed into the hold, a dozen or more men are delegated to shovel the downpouring column in between the vessel's beams, a job for which they are paid at the rate of a cent a minute. In vessels of the Cunard stripe it takes between 12,000 and 15,000 bushels to fill a hold, and these vessels average 50,000 bushels in the total cargo. Ships carrying grain alone can take as high as 125,000 bushels, and when it is considered that from 4,000 to 7,000 bushels can be stored in an hour, every 40 bushels weighing a ton, an idea can be had of the force of the torrent directed into the vessel.

Large vessels have four or five holds, and a distinction is made in storing the cargo in them. Grain, from its compact and dead weight, is reserved mostly for the center of the vessel, while cured provisions are packed as far forward and as far aft as possible, for their better preservation from the heat of the ship's fires. In some vessels, like the great Cunarders, which carry passengers as well as freight, the heaviest weight is stored in the lowest hold; in the technical parlance of the stevedors, "stiffening" the ship. It takes about 1,500 tons to "stiffen" a great Cunarder, and when this is done the lower hold is fastened and battened down and work is begun on the next.—Donahoe's Magazine.

COLERIDGE.

Indolence Capable of Energies Characteristic of His Whole Appearance.

The antivivisectionists sometimes horrify us by describing the poison which paralyzes all the active powers of the body while leaving the sensibilities untouched. Coleridge offers a study of that kind to psychologists. His will, no doubt, was congenitally feeble. "Indolence capable of energies," as he says in a remarkable passage of early self portraiture, was characteristic of his whole appearance. He could absorb enormous masses of reading and write or speak with amazing fluency, but the energy could not be co-ordinated or concentrated. It flowed hither and thither spontaneously along the channels dictated by the dominant feeling of the moment.

As psychologists phrase it, he had lost his power of "inhibition." He could not suppress or restrain his emotions. He valued metaphysical research, as he says in his pathetic ode, because

> Haply by abtruse research to steal
> From my own nature all the natural man

was his "sole resource, his only plan." He could distract his mind from one pursuit by another, but could not force his energies to converge upon a single or distant aim. Painful emotions were evaded, instead of being met face to face. When he heard suddenly at Malta of John Wordsworth's death he tried to stagger out of a public room and before he reached the door fell to the floor in a convulsive hysteric fit, and was ill for a fortnight. He then declared that he was unable to open any letters lest they should bring news of the death of one of his children.

The intensity of his feelings paralyzed instead of stimulated his powers. "Vexations and preyings upon the spirit," he says, "pluck out the wing feathers of the mind." He is like a criminal upon the wheel, held down, not by chains, but by impotence of will, feeling every blow with singular intensity, but only capable of meeting it by shutting his eyes as long as possible or trying to distract his mind by puzzling over the problems most remote from practical application.—National Review.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13, 1895.

Senator Gray, of Del., was the first democrat of any prominence to publicly endorse the nomination of Mr. Cleveland for a third term. But his endorsement carries no weight with anybody, because it is well known that Mr. Gray is exceedingly anxious to get the vacant seat upon the Supreme Court left by the late Justice Jackson. He may get it, but if so it will surprise lots of people in Washington, including at least two members of the Cabinet. Dan Lamont had a pow-wow with Mr. Cleveland at Gray Gables this week which will doubtless have some effect upon that third term business, either in pushing it forward publicly or in silencing for a time the cuckoos public support of it.

Another thing about which Dan Lamont talked to Mr. Cleveland was who shall succeed Gen. Schofield, whose age will place him on the retired list on the 29th inst., as the commander of the army. According to right and precedent the senior major general—Gen. Nelson A. Miles, would succeed Gen. Schofield. But a lot of democratic schemers wish to carry party politics into the army, ignore right and precedent, and jump one of the other major generals over the head of Gen. Miles, because they say that Gen. Miles is a republican. There are reasons for believing that Dan Lamont is in sympathy with those schemers; also for believing that Mr. Cleveland would like to ignore Gen. Miles, but it is far from certain that he will care to face the storm of indignation which would certainly follow such an act of injustice to as gallant an officer as ever drew a sword. Gen. Miles is popular, and Mr. Cleveland knows it.

John M. Reynolds, of Pa., at present Assistant Secretary of the Interior, evidently knows a good thing from a worthless article. He was nominated on the Democratic ticket for Judge of the new Superior Court of Pa., but knowing the impossibility of getting elected, and having no desire to give up his present very comfortable salary he promptly telegraphed his declination of the nomination.

It is said that Senator Mills, of Texas, accompanied his declaration against the free coinage of silver with one against the nomination of Mr. Cleveland for a third term, in order to prevent Texans accusing him of having become a cuckoo. Mr. Mills was once a silver man of the most radical type. He has been in Washington ever since Congress adjourned, but he has until now refused to define his financial position. He was virtually forced into it by a letter from the Chairman of the Texas Democratic Committee, which he could not ignore unless prepared to drop out politics at the end of his term in the Senate. He will doubtless find when he gets back to Texas—he started this week—that he did not improve his popularity with either silver or anti-silver men when he said that although opposed to the free coinage of silver he would vote for it in the Senate if next year's Texas Democratic convention endorsed it.

The Bowler farce is to be repeated. Secretary Carlisle set September 20th as the date to hear ex-Senator Manderson's argument in an appeal from the decision of Bowler, referring the claim of the Oxnard company, of Nebraska, for sugar bounty, to the Court of Claims. Inasmuch as the order to hold the sugar bounties came from Mr. Cleveland there is no probability that Secretary Carlisle will reverse Bowler, no matter how convincing the argument of Mr. Manderson may be, unless some other method of keeping the money in the treasury has been decided upon.

Numerous fairy stories are being printed about Speaker Reed being bossed by this or that man into selecting or not selecting this or that member of the House for chairman of the most important of the House committees. Mr. Reed is notoriously fond of a joke, and he probably enjoys reading these stories. Everybody who is at all acquainted with Mr. Reed's character knows that while always open to being convinced by argument, and sometimes allowing himself to be persuaded, he cannot be bossed by any man. That very fact is the foundation of his public reputation.

The Review of Reviews for September calls attention to the change in European sentiment on the liquor question, as shown especially in the establishment of the French monopoly of the manufacture and wholesale supply of strong liquors, in the work of the Belgian commission and in the still more important action taken by Russia in setting up a government monopoly of the entire wholesale and retail traffic in liquors throughout the empire. "Everywhere in Europe," says the editor of the Review, "the fact is becoming recognized that liquor selling is not only an unbecoming business, but one that is socially and politically dangerous—requiring new and rigid regulation or else total suppression."

Those— —Pimples

Are tell-tale symptoms that your blood is not right—full of impurities, causing a sluggish and unsightly complexion. A few bottles of S. S. S. will remove all foreign and impure matter, cleanse the blood thoroughly, and give a clear and rosy complexion. It is most effectual, and entirely harmless.

Chas. Heaton, 73 Laurel Street, Phila., says: "I have had for years a humor in my blood which made me dread to shave, as small boils or pimples would be cut, thus causing shaving to be a great annoyance. After taking three bottles S.S.S. my face is all clear and smooth as it should be—appetite splendid, sleep well and feel like running a foot race all for the use of S. S. S.

David H. Beecher, of the Union Nation Bank, Grand Forks, was in town last week looking after some real estate interests near here.

There were a few loads of wheat refused at the local elevators Wednesday and yesterday owing to its having been threshed when too wet. The wheat buyers are unable to handle much of this grain at a time and it is certainly advisable for the grower to only thresh when the straw and grain is dry in order to secure the best grades. The best price is none too high.

A majority of the farmers are shipping their grain direct. The railroads are furnishing cars at all stations and sidings. The elevators are receiving much grain, and expect when stack threshing commences to get the larger portion.

For the past few days the city has been over-run with strangers apparently not looking for work as many of them have repeatedly refused to go out into the country, claiming they do not have to work for a living. If such is the case it seems strange that they would come to this city.

Wednesday, two representatives of the insane asylum at Fergus Falls were in town and succeeded in getting possession of Thos. Sanders, who recently made his escape from that institution. Friends of Mr. Sanders claim that he is sane and an effort will be made to establish that fact. Mr. Sanders himself in an interview with the writer a few days ago, strongly protested against being returned to the asylum, claiming that a son of his was after his property. In any case a thorough investigation should be made, and, if Mr. Sanders is found possessing sufficient mental capabilities he should be released and his property restored to him.

FLOOD OF THE NILE.

THE GREATEST EVENT OF ALL THE YEAR AT CAIRO.

Impressive Ceremonies at the Cutting of the Bank to Allow the Water to Flow Into the Canal—The Ancient Nilometer on the Island of Roda.

The tourist who only comes to Egypt to shun "winter and foul weather" knows nothing of the majestic glories of the Nile flood. The ancient Nilometer at the south end of the island of Roda, just above Cairo, is one of the most interesting sights of the place. The water enters from the river by a culvert into a well about 18 feet square, with a graduated stone pillar in the center. On each side of the well is a recess about 6 feet wide and 3 feet deep, surmounted by a pointed arch, over which is carved in relief a Kufic inscription; and a similar inscription is carried all around the well, consisting of verses of the Koran. A staircase goes down the well, from the steps of which the initiated may read the height of the water on the pillar, but they are few in number, and the hereditary sheikh of the Nilometer, whose duty it is to keep the record, is a person of some importance. The Nilometer dates from A. D. 861, and I believe in the archives of Cairo may be found the daily record for 1,000 years.

I need hardly tell you that when our English engineers took the river in hand we established a number of gauges at Wadi-Halfa, Assuan, Cairo and many other points on more scientific principles than the venerable Nilometer of the Roda island.

After the river has begun to rise its height is daily chanted through the Cairo streets until it reaches 16 cubits on the gauge. At this point the Khalig el Masri, the old canal that flows through the heart of Cairo, is opened—up to this point it is dry, and full or empty it is little more than a sanitary abomination at present, but in former days it occupied an important place, and when the Nile water was high enough to flow down its bed it was looked on that the flood had fairly set in, and that the kindly fruits of the earth might be duly expected.

The head of this canal is on the right bank of the river, just south of Cairo. The water enters a channel some 80 feet wide, with a high wall on its left and a sloping bank on its right or southern flank. The water then flows under the pointed arch of an old stone bridge. The bed of the canal is cleared so that it would flow in at a gauge of about 14½ cubits, but an earthen bank is thrown across it about four feet higher.

There is no more interesting ceremony in Egypt than the annual cutting of the khalig, as the opening ceremony is called. It takes place between Aug. 5 and 15. Days before preparations are made for the festival. Tents with innumerable lamps are placed along the wall on the one side. Frames for all manner of fireworks are erected on the sand bank on the other side. All the notables are there in full uniform or in canonicals. The khedive himself or his representative, the Sheikh ul Islam, the highest dignitary of the Mohammedan faith; the Sheikh el Bekri, the Sheikh el Sadat, all the learned scribes of the great university of the Azhar, the cabinet ministers and under secretaries, the sirdar of the army and his staff, the judges and the financiers.

The Egyptian troops are turned out, salutes are fired, and about 8 o'clock in the warm summer night the classes all assemble under the gayly lighted tents, the masses crowd round the frames for the fireworks, the street is lined with harem carriages full of closely veiled figures, though it is not much that they can see from their broughams. Out in the river just opposite the canal's mouth is moored an old hulk of a certain seagoing outline, which has been towed up from Bulak during the day and is an emblem of the time when the great republic of Venice sent an envoy to witness the ceremony. This boat is full of lamps, and fireworks too. As the night deepens the excitement increases. The populace on the bridge and opposite bank are shouting, yelling and dancing wildly round the fireworks.

On the other side are the gay uniforms and lighted tents, from which we can look over the wall down on the dark water, where you see brown figures plunging in and, waist deep, digging with their hoes at the embankment that blocks the canal's mouth. Long before midnight the fireworks have gone out and left the splendid stars to themselves; the grandees have all gone to bed, but the people keep up the revelry, and in the morning, by 7:30, every one has come back. Then but little of the bank is left uncut, and a few more strokes of the big hoes will do it, and the brown skins and brown water reflect the bright sunlight from above. Then the Sheik hul Islam solemnly thanks the Almighty, Allah the all powerful, the all merciful. He implores his blessing on the flood, and at a signal the bank is cut, the waters rush in, and with them a crowd of swimmers. A bag of silver piasters is scattered among them, and the ceremony is at an end.—Nature.

Always on Time.

Washington had many admirable traits worthy of imitation, and one of them was rigid punctuality. This was well illustrated by an incident during his visit to Boston 100 years ago. Having appointed 8 o'clock in the morning as the hour at which he should set out for Salem, he mounted his horse just as the Old South clock was striking that hour. The company of cavalry which was to escort him did not arrive till after his departure and did not overtake him till he had reached Charles river bridge.—Exchange.

MINNESOTA NEWS NOTES

The State Dental association held its annual convention at St. Paul

The Swedish Methodist conference will be held at Duluth next year.

Ninety empty pocketbooks were found at the state fair grounds during the fair.

Labor commissioners of the various states are holding a convention at Minneapolis.

Five men were arrested on the charge of selling liquor near the state fair grounds.

At Princeton, a stroke of lightning revealed the skeleton of a woman in a hollow tree.

Duluth is already preparing for the bonspiel of the Northwestern curlers next winter.

Survivors of the Ninth Minnesota volunteers held a reunion at Minneapolis Thursday.

Mayor Youmans has vetoed the curfew ordinance passed by the city council of Winona.

The National Credit Insurance company, Minneapolis, has assigned, owing $45,000 with $100,000 securities as assets.

Grain rates from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Duluth will, on Sept. 25, be advanced from 5 cents to 7½ cents per 100 pounds.

A meeting of the creditors of the N. P. Clarke Lumber company was held at Minneapolis, but no final action was taken.

Insurance Commissioner Smith of Minnesota, who has been in very ill health for some time, is reported to be improving.

A Richmond (Ind.) man has attached $400,000 worth of property of the E. F. Drake estate, St. Paul, to collect a $4,000 claim.

A golf club has been organized at Winona. Its members will wear the Scottish plaid and kilt. Congressman J. A. Tawney is one of the members.

The Iron Exchange bank of Duluth, which has not been doing a profitable business lately, has decided to go into liquidation and wind up its affairs.

Acting Secretary Reynolds has approved as basis for patent Minnesota swamp land list No. 48, containing 3,925 acres in the St. Cloud district.

Governor D. M. Clough will go to Atlanta with the Minnesota Editorial association to visit the exposition of the cotton states. The party leaves Sept. 28.

Business circles at Duluth are agitated over the unexplained absence of A. Bieloch, one of the wealthiest and best known business men of the city. He has been gone a week.

A meeting of members of the capitol commission was held Thursday, but nothing of importance in connection with the plans for the new building was passed upon. Adjournment was taken to Sept. 26.

According to census bulletin No. 13 Clay county has 15,154 population, a gain of 3,635; Cottonwood 10,187, gain 2,775; Cook 427, gain 329; Dakota 21,345, gain 1,105; Dodge 12,754, gain 1,890; Douglase 16,942, gain 2,336.

The State Bar association held its annual meeting in the supreme court room of the capitol with about 40 prominent members of the profession from different parts of the state in attendance. A banquet at the Windsor was a feature.

The Minnesota Iron company has decided to advance the wages of all employes in its mines on the Mesaba range from 20 to 25 per cent. Contract miners will hereafter receive $2.25 a day. The section hands on the Duluth and Iron Range road have been granted an advance from $1.15 to $1.50 per day.

Frank Chermah of Chatfield and his horse and a swarm of bees got badly mixed up at Bear Creek Hill. Chermah's face and hands were bristling with bee stings, 150 of which were taken out of his face. The horse was punctured all over and was evidently sick from the attack of the savage little insects.

Governor Clough has appointed George H. Hazzard as commissioner to supervise the state park of the Dalles of the St. Croix. Mr. Hazzard's duties will practically be that of superintendent of the park in so far as Minnesota's interests are concerned. The park will be formally opened late in the fall, when excursions will be run from the principal cities in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and the prominent men of the two states will deliver addresses.

The Temperance Reform League has under contemplation a plan to establish a land bank or rent bank, similar to those of Germany, which have been so successful in populating former waste tracts, and causing an increase of natural wealth. The plan is to utilize the unemployed capital of the East in developing the West, or that part of it tributary to Minneapolis and St. Paul. The league is represented here by George F. Ormsby of Boston, the vice president. Its aim is to decrease crime and promote industry by occupying man's attention with healthy and profitable employment.

NOT SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE.

Believed the Grand Jury Will Release Mrs. Perkins.

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 17.—The indications are that Mrs. Lora Perkins, who stands accused of the murder of Mrs. Lola Hawkins, will not be held for trial.

So far as can be learned from observation and desultory conversation with certain of the witnesses who have been called into grand jury room, the impression prevails that the jury is of the opinion that not sufficient evidence to convict could be adduced.

Realizing this, and not caring to put the county to the expense of a lengthy trial, it is probable Mrs. Perkins will be discharged from custody in the very near future.

CHEESE BOX MAKING.

AN EXTENSIVE INDUSTRY OF WHICH LITTLE IS KNOWN.

Half a Million Dollars' Worth of Cases Turned Out Yearly by Expensive Machinery—How the Logs Are Cooked and Then Cut Into Unbroken Sheets.

An idea of the magnitude of the cheese industry in this country is given by the fact that the boxes in which the cheese is shipped represent a cost of nearly $500,000 annually. It is not many years since cheese was shipped in any kind of barrel or box which would hold from one to half a dozen good sized forms, packed in straw to keep them from being bruised or broken in the handling. It was only factory made cheese that received such protection, while dairy cheese was sent to market destitute of any covering other than its own roughly bandaged rind, which in most cases proved invulnerable. Competition among manufacturers has changed all this, and at present the manufacture of boxes gives employment to a large number of hands and necessitates the use of powerful and expensive machinery.

It was customary in the early days of the business to saw the hoops, as the large body of the box is called, out of the log in planks about one-fifth of an inch in thickness. The waste of material was a most serious objection to this plan, fully 50 per cent of the timber going in sawdust. The invention of the rotary cutting machine has prevented this waste and at the same time produced a better hoop than the sawed article. The chief timber used in making cheesebox hoops is the common swamp elm. No other timber seems to possess the same qualities of lightness, toughness and elasticity so requisite for cheeseboxes as this once despised product of American forests. The logs, after being cut in the proper lengths, generally 5 feet for an ordinary cheesebox of 15½ or 16 inches diameter, are thrown into long vats filled with water, where they are boiled from 12 to 20 hours. The time required to soften the timber, or cook it, as the operation is called, varies according to the size of the timber and the season. Large logs require to be cooked longer than small ones, particularly when the logs are frozen. It is not uncommon to find the center of a log still frozen after 15 hours of boiling.

Experience is the best guide in this part of the business, and to know when the timber is thoroughly cooked and not overdone is one of the things acquired only by constant observation. When sufficiently boiled the logs are lifted in iron grapples from the vats and laid on skids, where the bark is removed. Then a log is lifted by a crane and swung into place in the machine, where it is held in a horizontal position by chucks or dogs that center it at each end.

In this position the log revolves like a roll of paper in a printing press. The knife which does the cutting is very heavy and is bolted to a heavy head called a carriage, which is fed forward by screws toward the revolving log. In the most approved machines the knife has an end or oscillating as well as a forward motion. This reduces the strain on the machine and permits the cutting of soft, unsound and shaky hearted logs. As the knife comes in contact with the timber, the inequalities of the log are first shorn off and gradually the log becomes perfectly round and yields an unbroken sheet of lumber, like the unwinding of a roll of cloth. This sheet of wood is broken off in convenient lengths, which are passed under dividing knives that cut them into uniform widths corresponding with the required depth of the box.

If the boxes are to be made up at once the hoops are bent around iron cylinders to give them the form of the box, after which the bottom is pressed in and nailed in place. Comparatively few boxes are put together in the larger mills. In most cases the product is dried and shipped to the cheese manufacturing centers, where the boxes are completed. The boxes in the finished state are too bulky for economical handling. An ordinary freight car will not contain more than 500 complete boxes, while 5,000 can be carried if shipped in the bale.

The remnants which are not wide enough for hoops are used for the cover band and for the narrow band that goes around the bottom of the box. The boxes vary in size both as regards depth and diameter. The most common size will hold a cheese of from 60 to 65 pounds. Such a box is 10 inches deep and 15½ inches in diameter. This is the size of cheese most in demand for export. The size for home consumption is as a rule much smaller and requires a box from 5 to 6 inches deep, but of the same diameter as the other.

Various kinds of timber are used to form the heads of the box, but elm is the accepted material for the hoops. Owing to peculiarities of the soil, the timber in some localities is inclined to be shaky, the checks or shakes running around the log and following the grain of the timber. Such timber was useless when the hoops were sawed, but in the rotary process much of it can be turned to good account. The bulk of the elm timber used in this business is brought in from Canada.

The western peninsula of Ontario lying north of Lake Erie contained one of the largest tracts of elm timber on the continent. It has been greatly depleted in recent years. Logs are taken out in winter when the swamps are frozen and are skidded near the railways or on the lake shore. The bulk of them are taken to the mills by water in tow of powerful steam tugs.—New York Sun.

A STRANGE CASE.
How an Enemy was Foiled.
The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recommendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.
Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

HARVESTS OF HAIR.

Jewelry and Wigs Are Made of the Queerest of Crops—Information, Some of It of an Odd Character, From a Man Who Makes Things of Hair.

It was quite by chance that the writer of this article happened on a man who has spent his lifetime in the manipulation of human hair, transforming it into wigs, crowns, frizettes and all the other kinds of "false" hair and weaving it into watch chains, eyeglass guards, bracelets, as well as mounting it in lockets, rings, pins, earrings and brooches and working it up into all kinds of floral designs and emblems.

"A charming head of hair on a woman," he said, "is a thing of beauty and indeed a crowning glory, but to a hair worker it is of little value. Even the longest hair, before it has passed through the hands of the manufacturers, is well nigh worthless. The hair of a woman's head which is 30 inches in length, for example, would not be worth more than 60 cents.

"I remember a woman coming into my shop one night and offering to sell her hair. She said she was a seaman's wife, and not having heard from him for many months was in desperate straits for money. She wanted to know how much I would give her for her hair, which was of considerable length. I refused to cut it off. I wouldn't cut any woman's hair off. It is such a demoralizing, degrading thing to do, and the fact is emphasized when dire need is the cause of the sale. However, I was in a position to obtain her assistance until her husband came back.

"We get our finest descriptions of hair," continued the subject of this interview, "from France and Italy, whence come all shades of black and brown. France, again, Germany and Spain supply the market with brown, light flaxen and red hair. Gray hair, being found in every parcel, is described as universal.

"On the continent there are regular hair harvests. During the summer time you can see at every fair peddlers surrounded by girls with their beautiful hair nicely combed out standing in file waiting their turn. The peddler has in his hands a pair of shears, each girl bends her neck, a few snips, and the hair is off, tied into a whisp and thrown into a basket standing at the shearer's side. And how much do you think that the girls get for this? A few cents, a gaudy trinket or a bright silk handkerchief.

"Some peddlers travel from cottage to cottage plying their trade, and the same performance is gone through. An average head of hair weighs four ounces. When sufficient hair is accumulated, it is sold to the hair manufacturers, who submit it to a process of cleansing and sorting into various lengths and shades. It is then ready for the wigmakers, who buy it as they require it, paying at the rate of 20 cents or so per ounce for lengths of 10 inches to 12 inches to as many shillings as there are inches for lengths of 36 inches and upward. The greatest demand is for hair from 14 to 24 inches in length. The longest female hair on record is 72 inches."

The tycoon of Japan once confiscated the hair of a whole province and had it woven into a ship's hawser over a quarter of a mile long. Then he discovered that steel ropes were in existence, and now the cable, composed of the pigtails of the unfortunate Japs, reposes before the eyes of the curious in Bethnal Green museum.

The gentleman interviewed possesses a magnificent trophy of hair, in size some 3 feet long by 2 feet high, in the form of a basket of flowers, every leaf, every petal and every stem of which is composed of cunningly wrought hairs from the human head. How long it took to create it, it is impossible to say, but years unquestionably. He has other similar displays, mostly the work of himself or his son, though they pale into insignificance beside the monument of patience in question.

The working of hair into ornaments has gone out of vogue considerably of late years, but seafaring men even now are great lovers of this form of memento. Naturally their favorite designs assume the forms of anchors, compasses and other things nautical.

One day a gentleman came to the subject of this article and desired him in a most mysterious manner to weave some hair, which he gave him, into the form of a serpent. The head and tail were to be of gold, and the tail was to be fixed into the mouth. The serpent was to be in two coils and to encircle a golden heart pierced by a dagger. In order to thoroughly comprehend the design he had to be let into the secret, and this was the explanation which was offered:

The serpent was to represent the nature of a certain young lady to whom the hair belonged and who had jilted the gentleman in question. The golden heart was symbolic of his pure and worthy affection, and the dagger showed how deeply he had been wounded. The tail of the serpent being in its mouth indicated that in injuring her quondam lover she had also bitten herself. The jilted swain was most particular about the execution of the work, sent it back twice for alterations and finally refused to have it at all, perhaps discovering the bathos of his scheme.—Boston Post.

Caught Their Ears.

The new canon of Westminster was once terribly interrupted by the incessant coughing of his congregation. Whereon he suddenly paused in his sermon and interjected the remark, "Last night I was dining with the Prince of Wales." The effect was miraculous, and a deathly silence reigned as the preacher continued: "As a matter of fact, I was not dining with the Prince of Wales last night, but with my own family. I am glad, however, to find that I have at last secured your attention."

A BACHELOR MAID.

Once there lived a bachelor maiden.
Years and years ago (?),
And her mind with truth was laden.
But her heart was cold as snow.
For she thought, with good old Plato,
She could live alone,
So she smiled on many a suitor,
But her heart was hard as stone.

Came a bachelor man a-suing
For her friendship true.
This, alas, was her undoing,
As it might have been with you.
For her friendship still be sued her—
Such a simple thing—
Till before she knew he wooed her,
Wooed her with a friendship ring.

Now, although she's fond of Plato,
Her cold heart's grown warm,
And her theories of living
Have imbibed a wondrous charm,
For she says: "'Tis human nature,
Spite of Plato's pen.
Men were made for loving women,
Women made for loving men."
—Mary W. Slatter in Kate Field's Washington.

BUYING SOCIAL POLISH.

An English Couple Who Instruct In the Art of Being Fine.

A new profession for "gentlefolk" has been discovered in London by two impecunious members of the class. They have discovered that there is a livelihood to be obtained by "polishing off" the nouveaux riches and others whose manners "have not that repose which stamps the caste of Vere de Vere." They are a well born, well bred married couple who are still sufficiently young to be adaptable. They have been used to the ways of the leisure class, and they are clever enough to teach them. Anything from the cure of the cockney accent to the proper way to entertain a duke is taught for a "consideration."

The wife describes her share of the work thus: "I generally," she says, "undertake to engage the services of all specialists, such as superior maids, who know what is what and can give judicious and useful hints to their mistress; also manicurists, teachers of deportment and sometimes teachers of elocution. I have cured one very bad case of mere outward vulgarity in three weeks for 10 guineas, and I have corrected a cockney accent in three mornings for 3 guineas, while, on the other hand, a certain city man, who never aspired to anything better than heavy British dinners, Fridays to Mondays at Brighton, and Mansion House balls until he married the daughter of a west end restaurant manager—she knew nothing of life beyond her own narrow sphere—gave us carte blanche to make 'fine folks' of them.

"Not much could be done for him beyond keeping him quiet, but she lent herself to our process. Now they have a very pretty place in Hampshire and entertain some rather nice people in the summer. We ourselves received 100 guineas for our advice, but the husband must have spent over 25,000 in adopting our hints as to mode of living, and he tells us that what he has got for it is worth double as much."—Philadelphia Press.

Some Points About Wills.

Do you know that you cannot [illegible] away your [illegible] that [illegible] will giving your body after death to person or institution [illegible] ing? Your executors cannot be f[illegible] carry out your wishes, though they do so through deference to your expressed preferences. It is also important to remember that there [illegible] needed in devising real estate [illegible] two, as in bequeathing personal property. "When a woman will, she will, depend on't," says the proverb. But there are so many sharp turns and short curves in the course of the law that though a woman wills to will what she will, how she will in nine cases out of ten she cannot make her will so that she wills what she will as she wills to will.—New York Press.

A Liberal Education.

The late Professor Huxley held this opinion as to what constitutes a liberal education:

The man has a liberal education who has been so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will and does with ease and pleasure all the work that, as a mechanism, it is capable of; whose intellect is a clear, cold logical engine, with all its parts of equal strength and in smooth working order, ready, like the steam engine, to be turned to any kind of work and spin the gossamers as well as forge the anchors of the mind; whose mind is stored with a knowledge of the great and fundamental truths of nature and of the laws of her operations; one who, no stunted ascetic, is full of life and fire, but whose passions are trained to come to halt by a vigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience; who has learned to love all beauty, whether of nature or of art, to hate all vileness and to respect others as himself. Such a one, and no other, has had a liberal education.

May and Matrimony.

The pagans had a myth that "only bad women marry in May." They had another, that if the marriage did take place the couple would live most unhappily, and children born of the marriage—if it was not hopelessly rendered barren by thus slapping the fates in the face—would be deformed or imbecile. With prizes like that in prospect, it is not much wonder that the ignorant and superstitious taboo May marriages, but there is no excuse yet for this idiosyncrasy of thinking people—at least, no sensible one.

Ovid was a firm believer in the superstition and said that no widow or young girl would marry in May unless she wished to invite the displeasure of the gods, and that the imprudent woman who braved their wrath would fill an early grave. Ovid pinned his faith to rosy June, the birth month of June, and when he got ready to launch his daughter on the matrimonial sea he studied the stars and all the superstitions to make sure that he would not run upon Scylla in steering off Charybdis.

Resolved to match the girl, he tried to find
What days unprosperous were, what moons were kind.
After June's sacred ides his fancy strayed—
Good to the man and happy to the maid.

ON A DUCK RANCH.

One Grower Who Sells Twelve Thousand Fowls a Year.

A writer in The Country Gentleman gives the following sketch of his visit to a duck ranch in the shadow of the Blue mountains of Pennsylvania: At the time of my visit, early in September, there were about 4,000 nearly ready for market, and such a multitude of pure white birds was a pretty sight. The variety grown is the Peking, that at maturity will weigh 14 to 20 pounds to the pair. They have rich, yellow skin and orange colored bills and legs. They bear confinement well, and it is claimed they may be reared successfully with water sufficient only for drink. However, it is found that without water in which to wash themselves their plumage is soiled by the mud, and the feathers, worth 40 to 50 cents a pound, are injured in market value.

The Pekings are prolific in eggs, laying from 125 to 150 each in the year, but many of the eggs are infertile. In fact, the proprietors of this ranch thought they did not get to exceed 50 ducks from 100 eggs. The duck naturally, or as ordinarily kept on the farm, rarely lays before springtime. Ducks reared in the approved modern style, hatched in May, will begin to lay about the holidays and continue laying all winter, and this weakens their vitality. But why is not the constitution weakened also in respect to making rapid and great growth of frame? The barnyard fowl has undergone the same revolution of habit, and I have found their eggs as fertile in winter as at any other time. Is not this lack of fertility attributable rather to the fact that the natural habit of the duck is not completely revolutionized by domestication? By nature the duck is monogamous—that is, the drake mates with one duck—and it is probable that in large flocks there are drakes that will mate each only with one duck, while other drakes will care for two or more each, and thus the fertilization proves unequal and irregular. Ducks at their best do not show the development of the polygamous habit to the same extent as barnyard fowls. The best authorities recommend in breeding only five or six ducks to one drake.

The eggs are hatched in incubators, which are set in operation as soon as there is a complement of eggs to fill a machine. On a well managed duck farm the ducklings should begin to peep about the 1st of February, and the incubators are kept running until about the 1st of July. The ducks are reared under artificial brooders in their houses and in small yards and not allowed access to water for bathing until a month old. I presume in winter they never go out of their yards until killed. From the time they are hatched until ready for market the ducklings are fed all the wholesome food they can digest, and at 10 weeks old the Pekings should dress ten pounds to the pair.

Of course such weights are obtained only by farmers who thoroughly understand the business. It is proposed to try to rear 20,000 at this ranch next year. It is estimated that Peking ducks may be reared to the age of 10 weeks for 5 cents a pound, and the price received will probably average 20 cents a pound. The earliest shipments will realize 30 cents a pound or more, and 18 cents is about the lowest figure for them at any season.

There is one peculiar feature in the market for choice poultry—the breeder need not consign his stock for sale and take the chances of the market. A class of New York dealers are always in search of poultry of superior quality and will buy it outright at excellent prices.

These ducks rapidly grown are like rapidly grown lettuce or radishes—very tender. Their market was originally made on this tender, fat condition without the use of celery to add to the flavor.

The wholesome food of course changed the quality of the flesh, and now the supply is not equal to the demand. They are fed celery finely cut and mixed with their food for probably a month previous to killing. There is no distinct taste of celery on the flesh, but its union with the natural qualities of the flesh imparts a flavor that is simply delicious, little if any inferior to the canvasbacks which feed on wild celery.

Stuffing Fowls For Market.

L'engraissement or stuffing has been practiced in France for many years. Before the improved appliances were invented the operation was carried on in several ways. One of these, called engraissement aux petons, consisted of inserting little cakes of dough into the fowl's mouth and forcing them down with the finger. In another case engraissement de l'entonnoir, the food, in liquid form, was poured into the bird through a funnel. A third method, still more primitive, called gavage a la bouche, consisted in the feeder's filling his mouth with the food and blowing it down the fowl's throat. As soon after the hatching as they are able to determine the sexes are separated, and when they are 3½ months old they are put in the "pens of plenty." Fowls thus treated have been known to double in weight during their confinement in the pens. Their meat is far tenderer and sweeter than that of fowls raised in the ordinary manner and is devoid of all objectionable stringiness.

The Ad. Brought the Cat Back.

SIR—I lost a valuable cat—lost, strayed or stolen. I advertised for it in a prominent newspaper, but didn't get the cat back. Then I tried The News. You told me, as you put the cash for the advertisement in your money drawer, that you had no doubt the cat would see the ad. in The News and come back of herself. Within 36 hours from the appearance of the advertisement the cat appeared at my window and scratched to come in. I am not prepared to say whether the cat saw the ad. herself and acted on it or whether some one found her, picked her up and dropped her in my yard after seeing the ad. At any rate the cat came back, and I feel grateful to The News.—Letter in Providence

The Scholars of France.

As a sample of the payment of distinguished scholars in this country it may be mentioned that M. Gaston Boissier, who was lately elected life secretary of the Academy, only received $600 annually as rector of the College de France. In his new position he is entitled to $1,200, or double the sum paid him as head of the great educational establishment over which Ernest Renan ruled. The immortals, according to the foundation rules, are supposed to be paid $300 yearly, in addition to their fees for attending meetings. As a matter of fact, however, they only receive $200 annually. The remainder of the sum forms a sinking fund, out of which eight aged academicians get allowances, if their private annual income falls short of $1,200.—Paris Letter.

IN THE RUINS OF POMPEII.

Evidences of the Commonness of Slavery Found on All Sides.

Evidences of the commonness of slavery in the time of Pompeii's destruction are abundant on all sides. The gladiators were a class of slaves trained for fighting, and some of the wall scribblings refer to their condition as one of slavery. Here is the translation of an advertisement painted on a wall near the amphitheater:

"Twenty pairs of gladiators, paid by Decimus Lucretius Saltius Valeus, prince in the time of Nero, the son of Cæsar Augustus, and ten pairs of gladiators, paid by Decimus Lucretius, the son of Decimus Valeus, will fight at Pompeii on the 11th, 13th and 14th of April.

"There will be a proper hunting scene and the awnings will be spread. Written by Clev-Emilius Clev, writer of inscriptions; wrote this by moonlight."

The gladiators' barracks were ample for the housing of 2,000 or 3,000 men, and it is a matter of record that at least 2,000 were engaged at one time in the life or death combats which stretched over a long festival. The actors in these murderous sports were "barbarians" from various parts of Europe or from Asia Minor and Africa.

In the Naples museum is a bronze collar which was worn about the neck of a man whose skeleton was found in a Pompeiian house cellar; on the collar is engraved, in Latin, these words: "I am a slave. Arrest me because I am running away." I could not help thinking while looking at this ingenious and cruel substitute for a convict's dress that it was possible that the poor wretch who wore it may have been one of the descendants of the blond haired Britons brought home by Julius Cæsar to grace his triumph 100 years before Pompeii disappeared beneath its pall of lava and ashes.

In the Gheezeh museum, Cairo, one may look upon the black and shriveled face of that Rameses whom we know as the Pharaoh of the Oppression. Mummies of other Egyptian kings, priests and people are common enough. These primeval men, who far antedated Pompeii and Rome, stand undecayed in our presence. But Pompeii presents the picture of an entire city resurrected from the dead, with all its appliances of life and means of pleasure, profit, comfort, luxury, vice and sustenance. The life is gone out forever, but the mummified city remains—a monument of human ingenuity and human frailty.—New York Times.

Caseneuve's Rival.

Although the French courts are conducted with more ceremony than our own, they are occasionally enlivened by amusing incidents.

Maitre Caseneuve, a famous advocate of Toulouse, now dead, had a pet dog, of which he was very fond. One day he ventured to take this dog, which was small, and named Azor, into court with him. He seated Azor at one end of the bench assigned to the counsel and began an argument.

Maitre Caseneuve had a high pitched voice, and as he warmed up with his plea he raised it to a loud tone. Azor could stand it no longer. He stood up on the bench and howled—wow! wow! wow!

Maitre Caseneuve moderated his voice and cuffed the dog "aside," whereupon Azor subsided into silence. The lawyer argued on, and by and by, forgetting himself in his earnestness, raised his voice once more to a high pitch and a loud tone.

"Wow! wow! wow!" howled the little dog once more.

This time the lawyer stopped short, turned to the dog and eyed him severely.

"See here, Azor," he said aloud, "this can't go on. If you are arguing this case, you'd better do it alone, but if I am then you've got to keep still!"

After that Azor held his peace.—Youth's Companion.

The Bible.

The Bible contains 3,566,480 letters, 810,697 words, 31,175 verses, 1,189 chapters and 66 books; longest chapter is the 119th Psalm; the shortest and middle chapter is the 117th Psalm; the middle verse is the eighth of the 118th Psalm. The longest name is in the eighth chapter of Isaiah. The word "and" occurs 40,627 times. The thirty-seventh chapter of Isaiah and the nineteenth chapter of the second book of Kings are alike. The longest verse is the ninth of the eighth chapter of Esther; the shortest the thirty-fifth of the eleventh chapter of John. The twenty-first verse of the seventh chapter of Ezra is the only one of the entire collection which contains every letter in the alphabet. The word "Lord," or its equivalent, "Jehovah," occurs 7,698 times in the Old Testament, or, to be more exact, the word "Lord" occurs 1,853 times and the word "Jehovah" 5,845 times. The word "God" does not occur in the book of Esther.—St. Louis Republic.

The Color In Irish Verse.

Of course there is no deficiency of local color in such a book. We hear much of the "Suggarth aroon," the "Tubber-na-Scorney," the "Cushla Macree" and other things pre-eminently Irish. Now, the "Suggarth aroon" is a capital fish, especially when served with "sauce Hollandaise," and all the world knows that the "Tubber-na-Scorney" is one of the most picturesque of ancient symbolic Irish customs. Still the merely Saxon reader, who is not familiar with the Irish language, is sometimes "maire bhan astorred" when he comes across a poem plentifully sprinkled with Irish expressions, with the exception, of course, of such a universally understood remark as "Begorrah," or that touching phrase of endearment, "Faugh a ballagh."—W. THAT DOG NAPOLEON.

HE GREW UP WITH HIS YOUNG MASTER, WHO WAS FOND OF HIM,

Did Some Things Like All Dogs and Other Things Besides—How He Frightened Aunt Chesterfield and Earned a Quarter For His Owner.

I paid a man $2 for him when he was a little pup—the dog, I mean—and he told me—the man did—that if I would treat him kindly and give him plenty of corn bread—give the dog—he would guarantee—the man would—that he would grow up—the dog would grow up—to be an honor to him—to the man.

Napoleon got to be the largest dog and did it in the quickest manner of any dog I ever knew. I wore long curls at that time, I remember, into which boys used to cast burs, which hurt me a good deal, especially when Napoleon would take his claws and try to run them through my locks, although the locks never opened in that way. They were combination locks, I suppose, and I didn't yet have my letters in my head to set the combination on. He also grew very strong, Napoleon did, so that I found it difficult to keep him at home unless I tied him, and even then it bothered me if another dog happened to be going by. Catching sight of that dog, Napoleon would utter a glad cry and bound over the fence, utterly unmindful of the rope or me at the other end of it. Down the street he would prance, giving vent to short barks and drawing the attention of people after him, also myself. Neighbors coming to the windows used to marvel at the black and white streak we made in passing by. Sometimes I wouldn't get home till long after mealtime, which in those days was quite a detriment to me, though not to Napoleon, whose appetite soon became celebrated throughout the whole town, for when he couldn't get a pair of rubbers or a fur muff to slake the gnawings of hunger he would go out and collect the loaves of brown bread that bakers had left upon the adjacent stoops. I wouldn't like to print the things that people used to say about him at such times.

We grew up together—at least Napoleon did, for he had two feet the start of me. We were inseparable. Neighbors said they never saw anything more so, but that was chiefly because I couldn't get the rope unfastened in time.

It was Napoleon's appetite that ultimately accomplished his ruin, just as it has many another man's. Aunt and Uncle Chesterfield came to visit us that fall. They lived at Jay Corners, and really ought never to have gone anywhere else, but there they were, getting out of the stage at our front gate, and what could we do? I heard father say that to mother as they stood looking out of the window together. Uncle Chesterfield wasn't really our uncle, you understand, but just an old friend of father's—I don't know how old, but he looked every day of it, and more. We called him uncle because he appeared that way. Aunt Chesterfield had tic douloureux, which used to cause her to make up the awfulest faces. I realize now that it was from pain, but at that age I used to laugh, whereupon she said I was a wicked boy. She also had a brown wig and rheumatism. Uncle Chesterfield didn't have anything but just warts—I think I counted 70—and Aunt Chesterfield. But I heard father tell mother that was enough.

Mother put them into the spare chamber, where the old fashioned canvas bottom bed was with the white valance. There were also some green worsted lamp mats on the bureau. We all said good night, father wound up the clock and everybody went to bed. I was always a sound sleeper as a boy, so you must know that Aunt Chesterfield had to shriek pretty loud to get me out, but she did it, and could have fetched me, I think, if I had been dead. I got right up and ran into the spare chamber before anybody could stop me.

Aunt Chesterfield was sitting in the middle of the bed in a red flannel nightgown. I didn't know her at first, because her mouth was wide open, shrieking, and her face twisted with tic douloureux, and the whitest, shiniest head you ever saw, which I remembered with copious locks of brown. But I saw how that was in a minute, for there was Napoleon over in the corner with a brown wig in his mouth, which he was tossing and worrying and carrying on dreadfully. Uncle Chesterfield you couldn't see at first, but by and by you found him with his legs stuck through the arms of a rocking chair, and every time he moved Napoleon would growl, not being acquainted with Uncle Chesterfield, and he was almost scared to death.

They took the stage back to Jay Corners the very next day. Mother was dreadfully shocked, but I noticed that father didn't get excited.

"I wonder who let that dog up stairs?" he said musingly after the stage was gone.

I intended to say that I didn't know, but I got to stammering and mixed myself up, and before I realized what I was doing I blurted the truth right out and said that I did. Father gave me a quarter. I didn't know what for, but I supposed at the time that it was for telling the truth.

"But the dog must go," he added. "His appetite is growing too indiscriminative."

So we sold him to a man who kept a farm, and who soon afterward shot him for biting a calf on the legs. Napoleon used to do that to book canvassers when he was with us, and nobody found any fault with him, but on a farm it is different.—W. O. Fuller, Jr., in Rockland Tribune.

AN ALLIGATOR STORY.

It Reminded the Little Man of an Adventure He Once Had.

The owl car was bowling merrily toward Carondelet at an early hour the other morning. A party of belated citizens was gathered in one corner swapping yarns which would have made the pale cheek of Baron Munchausen mantle with the blush of envy. A portly man with rubicund face had just finished telling a thrilling story of an adventure with alligators in the everglades of Florida. An unassuming little man with gray whiskers, who had been an interested listener, moved over toward the group, and after apologizing for the intrusion remarked that he had had some little experience with alligators himself. He was hailed with delight by the little coterie, and being pressed for a story stroked his whiskers thoughtfully for a moment and then began:

"In the summer of 1889 I was fishing with a party of friends on the Tallahassee river, in the northern part of Florida. All morning we tramped up and down the banks in a vain attempt to entice the illusive black bass from his lair. About noon I separated from the party and went about a mile and a half farther down stream to a point where I thought fishing would be better. I selected a favorable spot and stepped out upon what I took to be a log which floated near the bank. For two mortal hours I stood upon that supposed log and never got as much as a nibble. Along about 3 o'clock I gave it up in disgust, packed up my tackle and started for the shore. Just as I was stepping on the bank what I had all along taken for a log moved under me, and, gentlemen, what do you think I had been standing on for more than two hours?"

"An alligator! I knew it! An alligator!" fairly shrieked the man with the rubicund face. "An alligator," reechoed the three congenial spirits.

"No, gentlemen," said the little man as he made for the door. "It was a log."

He vanished in the darkness, and the owl car bowled merrily on.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE TOOTHSOME SHAD.

A Few Particulars as to Their Appearance on the Atlantic Coast.

The shad begin to appear in the rivers about March 15, and they continue to arrive until the middle of June. It is a remarkable fact that each colony is invariably divided into three grand divisions, which arrive at different times, thus making three successive shoals, or, as the fishermen call them, "runs." The first run is both small in numbers and especially poor in quality, and it is interesting to observe that this is true of the herring as well as of the shad. This advance guard is largely composed of what are known as "hickory" shad, and they differ from the others in such marked degree as to form a distinct variety. The fishermen in the Chesapeake bay have an un-Mosaic legend that at the creation there were a great many small bones left over, and that to dispose of them the "hickory" shad was made.

A few days after these skirmishers have passed up the river the second or great run begins and continues three or four weeks. After the fish appear nothing will disturb their constant upward progress except cold weather, which, inopportunely arriving, will cause them to seek the protection of the mud at the bottom of the river, where they remain until the chill has left the water. It is impossible to estimate the number of fish entering a river in one of these runs. The estimate of 2,000,000, which has been made for the Delaware, is very moderate, in view of the fact that more than 10,000 shad have been taken in one haul of the seine in the waters of that river. The third run is small, like the first, and though the fish are fine in quality it receives little attention. It is probably composed of stragglers from the main body who are somewhat tardy in their arrival.—Lippincott's.

The Devil Up to Date.

The popular contemporary conception of satan is of a highly successful man of the world. It is admitted that there are shady spots in his past history, that he has done some things that he should regret, that he is a hazardous associate and an unsafe person to have transactions with. But conversely it is realized that he is rich, powerful and attractive and intimately concerned and interested in promoting the material prosperity of the human race. He is known to be full of enterprise and public spirit, disposed to make things pleasant and powerful in carrying the enterprises with which he is concerned to a profitable issue. It is true that he is understood to be unscrupulous, but it is felt that success excuses very much, and that when an individual has attained a position which enables him to be useful to the public it is a mistake to be overnice about rejecting his good offices because in early life, when his necessities were more pressing, his methods or affiliations were not always such as a conscientious person could approve.—Scribner's.

Knew His Way.

A young gendarme had to take a prisoner before the magistrate and after the trial convey him to the court prison. He had never been in the building before and stood in the corridor with his charge, not knowing which way to turn. At last the old offender had pity on him and said:

"Come along, I'll show you."—Rappel.

The total amount of gold coined at our mints from 1793 to 1892 was $1,582,000,000; of silver during the same period there have been $057,000,000 and of subsidiary coinage of all denominations $24,000,000.

In the estimated value of farm products, according to the returns of the eleventh census, Illinois is first, with $184,759,013; New York is second, with $161,593,009; Iowa is third, with $150,847,844

When Tears Are Dangerous.

M. S. Gregory, sheriff of Amador, was telling some friends the other evening about a plucky deputy and wound up by saying: "When you find a man as cool and steady as a rock in the face of danger, you can bet on him. But the most dangerous men are those who laugh or cry when they have a dispute on hand. I knew a man named Drew, down in Texas, who was noted as a very bad man. When he was doing any shooting, he would laugh loudly—a hard, demoniacal laugh, without any merriment in it. Up at Indian Diggings, many years ago, two men named Archer and Pawson had a dispute with a German about a claim. When they claimed the property, he broke down and cried, and they, supposing they would have no trouble in taking possession, marched on the ground. The German took up a broken pick and laid them both out. Archer was badly hurt and was a long time getting over his injuries. After that whenever he saw a man start to cry he got out of the way."—San Francisco Call.

The Birds' Service to Men.

Before many years have passed the legislatures of our states and nation will be forced to some action on the needless destruction of birds. The robins and bluebirds and wrens and the hundreds of glad little singers of the woods and fields have been driven away not merely from the cities, which they used to inhabit, but from the villages on the outskirts, and in some cases from even the isolated hamlets. The increase in insect pests within two or three years betokens a grave danger, and the cheapest and surest way to meet it is to stop killing the birds and let them return and dine upon the moths and caterpillars and the rest of the evil tribe that strip our trees and gardens. It will take many years, at best, to restore them in such numbers as they could be reckoned by a dozen or 20 years ago, but people by ceasing to be sportsmen, or at least by ceasing to kill the birds that are of no use as food, can bring good times back.—Exchange.

LOST IN THE STORM

Schooner T. R. Williams, Ore Laden, Wrecked on Lake Superior.

Captain, Stewardess and Crew of Five Men Go to the Bottom.

Immense Damage in Wisconsin as a Result of the Wind.

DETROIT, Sept. 25.—A special to The Free Press from Escanaba, Mich., says: The schooner T. R. Williams, iron ore laden, from this port to Toledo, sank in in the big gale on Green bay with all on board. Of the crew only the names of Captain Hutton and Maggie Bennett, the stewardess, are known, the crew of five men being strangers here. The Williams was in tow of the steamer Santa Maria, which returned during the afternoon and reported the wreck. Captain E. E. Rathburn of the Santa Maria says that up to 9 o'clock the lights of the Williams could be seen. In the morning her topmast was seen sticking out of the water under St. Martin's Island. Her cargo was 570 tons of ore. She was built in 1873 and belonged to W. L. Fay of Elyria, O.

SEVEREST IN YEARS.

The Storm in Wisconsin Did Immense Damage.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 24. — Reports from various parts of the state show that the storm on Sunday night and Monday morning was one of the severest experienced in Wisconsin for years. In the towns of Pleasant Valley and Clear Lake a number of buildings were blown down in a small cyclone entailing a loss of about $25,000 to buildings alone, besides damaging considerable other property. At Oconto many trees were unroofed. At Merrill the buildings on the fair grounds were demolished and piles of lumber were wrecked and strewed over the town. The loss will be fully $20,000 at Merrill. At Menominee over 100,000 feet of lumber was blown into the river and drifted away. Reports from Whitehall, Arcadia, West Superior, Spencer, Marinette and many other points also report much damage. Throughout the state telegraph wires were blown down and railroad travel was delayed by many trees being blown over tracks. It is estimated that the losses in the state will amount to several hundred thousands.

SWAMP FIRE NEAR APPLETON.

Big Strip of Valuable Timber Destroyed. The Loss Heavy.

APPLETON, Wis., Sept. 25.—Sunday night's gale fanned the big swamp fire into a sea of flame and swept away a strip of timber a mile and a half long and a mile wide. Farms in the threatened region are being protected by means of backfires and it is hoped that the damage can be confined to the timber. The losses to the timber already amount to $10,000 and will reach $20,000 if the remainder of the swamp goes, as is now likely. Swamp fires also are reported in the towns of Black Creek, Freedom and Grand Chute, within two miles of Appleton.

Change of Sixty Degrees.

EMPORIA, Kan., Sept. 25.—The greatest change in the weather ever experienced here occurred within the past 24 hours, the mercury dropping from 90 in the forenoon to the freezing point at night, nearly 60 degrees.

Eleven Inches of Snow.

DENVER, Sept. 25.—F. B. Vandenburg, local weather observer, reports that the snow fall in Denver Saturday night amounted to 11.4 inches, leaving all previous September records far behind.

CHILDREN BURNED.

A Wisconsin Mother Locks Her Young Ones in the House.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 25.—Special from Spring Green, Wis.: Two children of Emory Slauson, living two miles west of Arena, were burned to death in their home. The father was at Dodgeville with a load of melons, and the mother, having occasion to go for a pail of water a mile away, locked her two children in a room. The house took fire during her absence.

PENSIONS.

The address of the new G. A. R. National Commander-in-chief Walker has the right ring, showing that his heart is with the old boys, and in an interview with a newspaper at Indianapolis he said:

"There is no question in my mind that the courts will hold that a pension is a vested right when the matter is brought to their attention, and it is my intention to proceed at once toward the institution of a test case in order to secure a ruling. The suit will be brought in the federal courts of course, and as soon as possible. First, however, I shall have to consult with the council of administration, and the details of the suit must be settled after they and I have met. This will take some time, but the matter will be rushed as rapidly as can be. I feel that it is due old soldiers and members of the Grand Army that due steps be taken to bring the matter to an issue, and that every possible means be utilized to secure recognition of the right by the courts. As to where the suit will be brought, and as to who the attorneys may be who will prosecute the case, I cannot say as yet."

Commissioner Francis Dead.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., Sept. 25.—Phil Francis, United States commissioner, died of nervous prostration. He was prominent in police circles for many years. At one time he broke up the most desperate gang of thieves that ever infested Eastern Iowa. He has been city marshal and United States deputy marshal. He was a member of the First Iowa cavalry and was to have responded to the address of welcome at the reunion at Lyons Wednesday. He will be buried at Lyons.

Hotel Beulah Burned.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 25.—An East Troy, (Wis.) special says: Hotel Beulah, on the shore of Lake Beulah, was destroyed by fire during a terrible storm. Four guests made their escape without injury, but lost from $400 to $500 in valuables each. The loss is $30,000, with partial insurance. It is supposed that a street lamp was blown against the porch of the building.

California Forest Fires.

SANTA CRUZ, Cal., Sept. 25.—Forest fires are sweeping through hundreds of acres of forests in this vicinity. Railroad traffic is interfered with by trees falling across the tracks. The fire is the worst that has ever visited Santa Cruz county.

On the Robbers' Trail.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 23.— Superintendent Marsh telegraphs from Waupaca that upwards of 100 men are now scouring the country for the Waupaca train robbers. Ex-Sheriff Williams discovered where dynamite had been packed or handled. He also found that an exconvict lives near the spot where the dynamite evidences were found. It now looks as though the gang would be captured before morning.

A Grant Monument.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 21.—The Society of the Army of the Tennessee reassembled at 10 a. m. for the second day's session. A resolution was adopted to erect a statute of U. S. Grant at Washington, and ask the co-operation of congress.

Passed Away.

Tuesday noon, at the home of his father, at Ardoch, N. D., Henry Symington breathed his last, after an illness of three weeks of typhoid fever. Henry was born at Toronto, Ontario. His mother died when he was 12 years old. He leaves a devoted father, a sister and brother to mourn their loss, who are now located at Ardoch. The past few years of Henry's life has been spent here in Crookston with his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Beatty, who regard him in the light of a dear son.

Henry was a bright loving boy of 18 years, with no bad habits. His amiable disposition made friends for him everywhere and many there are who will miss him sadly. His plans were laid to attend school here this winter. The funeral will be held from the family residence this afternoon at 4 P. M. and Henry will then be laid at rest beside his mother in the cemetery at Hunter.

GIBBS TALKS TO FARMERS.

Farmer John L. Gibbs Discusses on Prosperity and Diversification.

HUTCHINSON, Minn., Sept. 18.—The McLeod county fair is in session here to-day, and is the best in the history of the county. The exhibits are excellent and the crowd is very large. Hon John L. Gibbs addressed the farmers at length to-day, and in the course of his remarks he said:

"With want and discontentment prevailing to a large extent in many of our cities, there is enough and to spare on the farm. Just so long as the world shall endure, there will be remunerative labor for the farmer whose efforts are wisely directed. All great and successful business concerns run year after year without stopping. The daily profits may not be large, but they are continuous. On any other plan they could not run. The farmer is a capitalist and a laborer. He is entitled to a fair rate of interest on his capital, and compensation for his labor. Good farming will not be satisfied with anything short of this. All successful business enterprises pay dividends on the capital invested, and why should not the farm? No man can travel through this state without seeing evidences of prosperity on every hand. But the exceptions make the heart ache. I think you will agree with me that the farmer who owns a good farm, well stocked, and is out of debt, can make a good living for himself and family, if he and his wife and children will work hard enough. I am also sure that you will agree with me that if he will manage well the family can live comfortably and enjoy many of the luxuries of life without any member of the family overworking himself. He can even lay up something each year for old age, and give the children a start.

Twenty-five years hence the United States will contain 140,000,000 of people. And what will be the value of the rich farming lands of McLeod county then? Perhaps $100 per acre. Twenty-five years from now the money loaner will be fortunate who can secure 3 per cent. on good farm lands, and the rich farming lands in the Mississippi valley will rise in price accordingly. I believe that the best investment for capital to-day is in the purchase of good farming lands in Minnesota.

"The wheat belt has continually moved to the West, and to-day Minnesota and the Dakotas are the granary of America. I do not believe it's for our interest to always hold the position. Southern Minnesota has passed through this kind of farming. There is still a good deal of wheat raised, and this year the granaries are full to overflowing, but the farmers are in no hurry to sell. And right here is one of the strongest arguments in favor of diversified farming. If the price for one product of the farm is low, there is something else to sell."

"What has done more than any one thing to develop southern Minnesota, during the past few years, is the dairy interest. It has been the direct cause of making Freeborn and Steele counties known far and wide.

"I would advise farmers everywhere to build their own creameries. There is no necessity nor sense in contracting with outside parties to build the plant for more than the actual cost. This has been the case too frequently, and has been the cause of more or less complaint and hardship. It has resulted in building creameries where there are not a sufficient number of cows to make them profitable. Creameries without cows are like a ship without a sail. There is no fear of overproduction. The whole country is increasing in population at a very rapid rate—much faster than cows are increasing in number. The American people consume more butter proportionately, than any people in the world, and they like good butter. Let us make our proportion and make it in our creameries. These creameries should run all the year Sundays and holidays excepted. I have given the subject of feed a good deal of thought, and I can say without hesitation that I can winter my cows with as little expense as I can summer them, and I believe this is the experience of all good dairymen."

I now have money again to loan on good improved farms.

UNABLE TO COMPETE

RECEIVERS SAY THE NORTHERN PACIFIC IS IN POOR CONDITION.

Nine Millions Need to Be Expended in the Next Five Years—Expenses Have Been Cut Down and the Earnings Have Increased.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 21.—The general report of the receivers of the Northern Pacific railroad showing the condition of the property, which was ordered by Judge Jenkins, was filed in the United States court late in the afternoon. The report is a voluminous document, comprising nearly 40 pages of printed matter, together with the trial balance sheets and the records from the comptroller's office. The report deals largely in generalities, as it would be impossible, the receivers say, to present a detailed history of their administration in so brief a space. Tables are adduced, however, to show that in the two years of the receivership, the operating expenses have been decreased. The troubles of the receivership, embraced in the strike, the conflict with the Coxeyites, the floods and the endless litigation are pointed out. The receivers say further that the condition of the road is not such as to enable it to compete on an equal basis with its rivals and that to remedy this will require an expenditure of $9,000,000 in the next five years.

Condition of the Road.

At the outset the report states the condition of the road at the time the receivers took hold. The total indebtness, including the mortgages, was $21,677,725.78, and the annual fixed charges $10,421,025.96. For the years ending June 30, 1894 and 1895, the report states that the expenditures under the head of maintenance of way and structures were decreased 10.27 per cent, while the maintainance and equipment were increased but .66 per cent. The expense of conducting the transportation department has decreased 7.96 per cent. The operating expenses for the year ended June 30, 1894, decreased $286,464.99, against a decrease of $251,745.75 for 1895.

The earnings for 1895 were $17,434,980.80, against $16,547,209.51 the year before. The operating expenses for 1895 were $11,319,682.41, against $11,816,120.17, while the net earnings for 1895 were $6,115,298.2[illegible] against $4,731,089.34, the net earnings per mile for 1895 being $1,360.82, against $1,052.26.

Must Expend Millions.

During the next five years the report states, it will be necessary to relay about 14,000 miles of steel rail at a cost of about $4,000,000. It would be also advisable to continue the replacing of temporary wooden structures with permanent earth fills or steel bridges. This would cost about $3,600,000. Summed up, the report continues, provision should be made for extraordinary expenditures in the next five years of $9,000,000, in order that the property may be placed on an equal footing with its rivals for economical operation.

JENKINS STANDS PAT.

He Maintains His Jurisdiction Over the Northern Pacific.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 24.—All doubts of the intention of Judge Jenkins to maintain jurisdiction over the Northern Pacific receivership and of the receivers acknowleging his jurisdiction and disregarding the order of the Seattle court, were removed when Judge Jenkins entered an order requiring all parties with preferential claims arising from the receivers' operation of the Wisconsin Central lines and the terminal property in Chicago, to make answer to a petition of the receivers regarding the adjustment of the claims by Nov. 1. The petition is in effect that the court divide the claims equitably between the Northern Pacific and the Wisconsin Central and the Chicago and Northern Pacific, and that in the meantime the receivers be given permission to pay out a large sum of money. All through the petition shows a total disregard of the order of the Seattle court, and it is evident that the receivers have elected to have the question of jurisdiction passed on in this way. The question of jurisdiction will be raised as to the right of the court to allow the receivers to deal with such large sums as are involved, and there is little doubt that Judge Jenkins will find that he has jurisdiction as he has heretofore held. This will insure the question being brought squarely to a higher court for jurisdiction.

OFFERS $4,000,000.

C. D. Smith Wants to Buy the Wisconsin Central Railroad.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 21.—A special to The Wisconsin from New York city says: George Capelle, chairman of the bondholders' committee of the Wisconsin Central railroad, has received a proposition from Charles D. Smith of Fond du Lac, in effect that if the Wisconsin Central Railroad company is reorganized on a basis that will place the bonded indebtedness at $18,000 per mile and the stock debt at $16,000 a mile, he will undertake to raise $4,000,000 to purchase the entire stock issue of the Wisconsin Central road with the view of consolidating the company with the Chicago and Old Colony Railway company, which was organized in Wisconsin as an operating company last winter.

"Dan's place" means McKinnon's restaurant, every time. The place where you can get one of the best meals in the city for very little wealth.

"What's in a Name."

Well, we dont know about that, but we do know that there was a good deal of good solid thinking stuff in the two sermons that the Rev. Mr. Wriggley, of the Glyndon church preached in the Congregational house in this city on Sabbath day. And we are not very much surprised that everybody who heard him in the morning was greatly pleased and that in the evening there were double the number out to hear him, (even though it did rain) for Glyndon always would have the very best pulpit talent to be had for the money and never would be content with mediocrity. We only hope the Glyndonites were as well pleased with our pastor, Mr. Fisher, in which case an even exchange was no robbery.

Environment.

Since the promulgation of the Darwinian theories, and their acceptance—to a greater or less degree—by the scientists of this generation, it has been generally recognized that the environment (surroundings) of a nation or race, like that of an individual, may have much to do with its place in the world and may determine the question of its survival. Among these surroundings may be considered not only the ability of the country to produce sustenance for its inhabitants, but also its topography and climate. It may be stated, without fear of much dispute that the Aryan nations are (and have been) the dominating element in the world, and that their origin, as well as their present habitat, is in the northern temperate zone. Foremost in commerce, in arts and in war, have always been these people of the temperate zone. To be capable of the highest success, see that your climatic environment is right. In our own country, the states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, Colorado, Wyoming and Montana form a section where the environment is favorable to health, energy and the gaining of wealth. The conditione in any of these states may be investigated by traveling over them, and this will be best done by making your journey always on the trains of the Burlington route. For maps, tickets, rates, etc., address any agent or W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

New Temperance Ideas.

Princeton Union:—Rev. R. H. Battey, of Minneapolis, R. W. G. lecturer of the I. O. O. T., and publisher of the Good Templar Message, lectured in Princeton the first three days of this week. Rev. Battey, while he does not score Prohibitionists, takes the novel stand, for a temperance lecturer, of advocating the retirement of the temperance question from partisan politics. The liquor traffic through the good old days of Gough and the crusades showed a steady decrease, but since the appearance of the Prohibition party in the political field there has been a continual increase. He advises fighting the liquor interests through public sentiment instead of prohibitory measures. His work has been fruitful of good results wherever he has lectured and he feels that Princeton will not prove an exception.

The Alexandria Meeting.

The General Congregational Association of Minnesota held a four days annual meeting at Alexandria, beginning last week, Tuesday. It was the fortieth anniversary of Congregationalism in the North Star State, and it was made a kind of jubilee occasion. On the lips of all were the words. "It is the best meeting we have ever attended." The program was prepared with great care, and every speaker or his substitute was promptly on hand.

"Father" Seccombe, one of the original Christian workers in Minnesota was present, as guest of the Association. His reminiscences of pioneer life, and his encouraging words for the future will long be remembered. Among the promlnent features of the meeting were addresses by the Rev. R. P Herrick on "The Forty years in Minnesota;" "The Importance of the Frontiers," by Rev. W. G. Puddeford, of Boston, and "Citizenship" by Hon. R. D. Russel, of Minneapolis.

The people of Alexandria, especially the business men, brought much credit to themselves for their complete and generous arrangements in preparation for the meetings.

GOT ALL SHE WANTED

Minnesota Pretty Well Satisfied With the Encampment.

COM. TORRANCE IS BACK.

He Says It Was One of the Most Important G. A. R. Events Ever Held.

Minneapolis Evening Journal.

Eli Torrance, commander-in-chief of the Minnesota department of the G. A. R. is back from the Louisville encampment. He is very well pleased with the results of the encampment, which was, on the whole, the most successful that has ever been held.

"It was a very successful encampment," he remarked this morning. "We, of the Minnesota department got all we wanted. Our candidate was elected commander-in-chief, we got the encampment for St. Paul and through our efforts a resolution was passed, and I was instructed to present it for the consideration of the national body.

"In the parade the Minnesota department presented a very fine appearance, being handsomely uniformed, wearing bright badges and flags. The turnout in the parade was larger than usual, and, although the day was very hot, all the boys remained in line. The colors were carried by Serg't. George W. Savage, who was severely wounded at the battle of Missionary Ridge. The color guards were Comrades Burger and Swank, each of whom had lost an arm in the service.

The city was beautifully decorated, the national colors appearing in profusion everywhere, and the hospitality was most generous. As far as the old soldiers were concerned, there were no accidents either in the city or in transit.

"I regard it as one of the most important encampments ever held; not so much on account of the numbers in attendance, as from the good results that will follow from the place where it was held. After that encampment there is no longer a Mason and Dixon's line. Whenever we meet a Confederate soldier we meet a friend. A restored union means a union of hearts, as well as states, and that we are tending that way there is no question.

"I am especially pleased that the encampment is to be held in St. Paul, as it will give a large contiagent of the veterans another opportunity to attend an encampment. There are 100,000 old soldiers in the country tributary to the Twin Cities."

Before returning to Minneapolis, Commander Torrance also visited the national park at Chickamauga and the battle-field it contains, but he did not stay for the dedication exercises. He expresses great regret that there was no Minnesota delegation present to dedicate the monument of the Second Minnesota.

"WOULDN'T THAT KILL YOU?"

A picnic—in the grove—in the night—with the thermometer down to Cairo or thereabouts—and nobody there—but girls. Well, that's just the calamity that happened to Dobson's grove on Saturday evening, when a gay bevy of bright, winsome young ladies repaired to a point below Stone's old residence, built a bonfire and prepared to picnick in due and ancient form. And they do insist that they had oceans of fun!

A Failure.

The trotting match at East Grand Forks, last week, was a conspicuous failure, says the Herald, owing to the rain that rendered the track too heavy for any use. Most of the imported events had to be called off and the owners of fast horses were obliged to leave for home with their flyers. The managers should have consulted Charlie Misner.

Weak Eyes and Stomach Trouble.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla for weak eyes and it has strengthened them. I have also used Hood's Pills and they have cured my stomach difficulty and helped in other ways. These medicines have done me much good." Annie Lang, 1332 Lindal Ave., North, Minneapolis Minn.

DEDICATED THE PARK

UNITED STATES IN POSSESSION OF CHICKAMAUGA

And Chattanooga Battlefields—The Ceremonies Witnessed by Upwards of 75,000 People—Patriotic Addresses by Stevenson, Palmer, Gordon and Longstreet.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Sept. 20.—The government of the United States is now in full possession of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga field. The nation has another public park which, while it may not be as grand from a scenic point of view as that of the Yellowstone, yet it will be far dearer to the hearts of the people. The park dedicated to the nation was consecrated with the blood of 35,000 heroes in 1863. It was consecrated by a battle which, for desperate fighting and carnage, has few if any equals in the world's history. But the unique feature of this dedication is the fact that men who struggled and fought against each other at Chickamauga 32 years ago met again as brothers, and each did his share towards making the dedication a success. They sealed a compact by which the last vestige of venom caused by the civil war was blotted out. Within the limits of this grand historic place of pleasure for the nation there were upwards of 75,000 people, among the throng were some of the nations heroes and there were also some of the highest officials.

On Snodgrass Hill.

The ceremonies took place at Snodgrass Hill, whose sides for a mile were so thickly covered with dead 32 years ago, that the survivors say one could walk all over it from crest to base, stepping from one prostrate body to another.

Hours before the exercises begun the battlefield was alive with those who had come to attend the dedication.

Stephenson Presides.

Vice President A. E. Stevenson presided over the dedicatory exercises. He was introduced by General John S. Fullerton, chairman of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National park. When the vice president came forward he was greeted with loud applause.

The meeting was called to order at 12 o'clock, and at that hour Snodgrass Hill was covered with people. The great natural area selected by the national commission, on Snodgrass Hill, was so arranged that nearly every one of the tens of thousands of auditors could hear the speeches and addresses throughout. By way of beginning there was a national salute of 44 guns by the artillery followed by "The Star Spangled Banner," played by one of the United States infantry bands. It was cheered to the echo by veterans of the blue and of the gray, and in their patriotic enthusiasm, many of the grizzled old veterans shed tears of joy. When the applause had ceased, Vice President Stevenson made a brief address.

All Sang America.

When he had finished, prayer was offered by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Gailor of Tennessee. "America," the beautiful national anthem, was then sung by the audience, accompanied by the band, and every one of the fifty and odd thousand of people assembled, blue and gray, sang it as if inspired. The great volume of sound rolled up as a great tidal wave and long before the song was ended, tears were coursing down the cheeks of thousands of the old veterans. It made the cold chills run up and down the back of even the most hardened of the battle-scarred veterans, and those who shed tears were proud of it. Not one of them were ashamed, nor was any one who would shame them.

Palmer' Great Effort.

General John M. Palmer, the venerable senator from Illinois, who 32 years ago risked his life on the battlefield, made the first dedicatory address. When he came forward, his voice was husky and had a tremulous sound. And never in all his life, unless, perhaps, when he was directing his men at Chickamauga 32 years ago, did he speak so earnestly. He became grandly eloquent as he advanced in his address, and his eloquence was fully appreciated and at frequent intervals he was applauded with a vigor that showed the audience were in touch with him.

General Gordon's Address.

Another patriotic tune followed General Palmer's speech, and then the battle scarred veteran of the Confederacy; whom Lee called his "right arm," John B. Gordon of Georgia, was introduced. He was greeted with no less applause than accorded to General Palmer, and he spoke with fully as much enthusiasm, feeling and patriotism. One may judge by their sentiments and the sentiments of the thousands of Federal and Confederate veterans who heard them now that the sectional line between North and South has been wiped out. Those who have heard General Gordon before, said it was the effort of his life.

The next person introduced was General James Longstreet, who delivered a very stirring and patriotic address, which was frequently interrupted by applause.

The Army of the Tennessee.

In the evening there was a large crowd in the big tent. It was a reunion of the Army of the Tennessee, Union and Confederate. The big tent, which has held many large crowds, never held one greater than this. General Grenville Dodge of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee presided. After music by the band and prayer, he introduced the first speaker of the evening, General O. O. Howard, U. S. A., who was followed by General Warner of Chattanooga and others.

BROKE HIS LEG.

Governor Upham Meets with Misfortune on Lookout Mountain.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Sept. 21.—Governor W. H. Upham of Wisconsin fell while going up Lookout Mountain and broke his leg. He stepped upon the skirt of his daughter's dress, causing him to fall.

ERWIN'S BRIEF FILED.

Argument on Each of Thirty-seven Assignments of Error.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 20.—Attorneys Erwin and Schumaker, for Harry Hayward, have furnished to the supreme court "appellant's brief." It is a printed book of 57 pages. There are 37 assignments of error, and then follows argument on each alleged error, with copious references to authorities and decisions. Counselor Erwin's peculiar bent of mind dominates the argument all through. It is not verbose on any point, and yet every point is seemingly well covered. Special stress is, of course, laid on the allegation of Adry Hayward's insanity and on the exclusion of the testimony of his father and mother to prove insanity had existed among ancestors. Blixt's testimony is also called in question, and allusion is made to the prejudicial effect of improper corroborative testimony thet as alleged, defend. was not allowed to refute.

WILL IGNORE THE OPINION.

Governor Culberson Will Do His Best to Prevent the Fight.

AUSTIN, Tex., Sept. 20.—Governor Culberson was seen in reference to Judge Hurt's opinion at Dallas favorable to prize fighting. He refused to express himself, but it is evident he will ignore the opinion and prevent the fight.

Texas has a ranger force controlled and governed by special laws and they can be ordered anywhere in the state by the governor without military red tape regulations, and their special province is to prevent infractions of laws. Culberson will probably use this force.

INTERNATIONAL ATHLETICS.

Americans Capture Every Event on the Programme.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—The international athletic contests between the London Athletic club and the New York Athletic club at Manhattan field Saturday resulted in a complete victory for the Americans. Of the 11 events on the programme the English failed to carry off first honors in a single one and in several instances even failed to get second place. New world's records were made in the 880-yard run, the 100-yard dash, the running high jump, the 220-yard run and the hurdle contest.

THE WESTERN LEAGUE.

President Johnson Says All the Clubs Made Money.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 24.—President Johnson of the Western League of Baseball clubs has just prepared the following official report of the relative standing of the clubs during the season that closed on Sunday:

Indianapolis	.645	Detroit	.472
St. Paul	.597	Milwaukee	.460
Kansas City	.584	Terre Haute	.419
Minneapolis	.520	Grand Rapids	.306

President Johnson says that on the average the clubs made one-third more money than they did last year; also, not one of the eight clubs failed to make money. He says that there is a prospect of a change in the circuit next year, that Terre Haute will be left out and Columbus, O., accepted instead.

Nobility and Millions to Wed.

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—The engagement of the young Duke of Marlborough to Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, which has been repeatedly affirmed and denied during the past month, has been formally announced. The duke himself is authority for the statement.

MORTON FOR PRESIDENT.

New York Republicans Nominate Him for Chief Executive.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Sept. 20.—The state Republican convention has closed its session here after following very closely the work mapped out by its leaders.

It named the following ticket for presentation to the people of the state in November: Secretary of state, John Palmer of Albany; comptroller, James E. Roberts of Erie; state treasurer, A. S. Colvin of Warren; state engineer, William Adams of Oneida; attorney general, F. E. Hancock of Onondaigua; judge of the court of appeals, C. E. Martin of Broome.

The platform demands enforcement of the Sunday liquor law and preservation of the Sabbath. Governor Morton's administration is indorsed, and his candidacy for the presidency formally launched.

NEW YORK DEMOCRATS.

The Syracuse Convention Largely Attended.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Sept. 24.—The streets of this city, the corridors of the hotels and every place where politicians can gather have turned into meeting places for Democratic statemakers and breakers, and so glutted is every place in the hotels where the leaders stay, that it is difficult to move about.

It is estimated that at least a third more people are here than were at Saratoga at the Republican convention.

AFTER THE AMERICA'S CUP.

Charles D. Rose, Through the Royal Victoria Club, Cables a Challenge.

LONDON, Sept. 24—Mr. J. M. Soper, the yacht designer, came to London and had a conference with Mr. Charles Day Rose, regarding the details of the yacht with which it is proposed to challenge for the America's cup, It was agreed to communicate with the secretary of the Royal Victoria Yacht club who will cable to the New York Yacht club as follows, with formal challenge by mail:

"In behalf of the Royal Victoria Yacht club, and in the name of C. D. Rose, a member, a challenge to sail a series of matches for the America's cup, against any yacht or vessel built in the United States. The following are the particulars:

Challenger owned by C. D. Rose; name of yacht, The Distant Shore; length at load water line, 89 feet; rig, cutter. The challenge will be absolutely unconditional."

MORE CIVIL SERVICE.

The System In Modified Form Extended to Consular Officers.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—The president, by an executive order just issued, but dated Sept. 20, has extended the civil service system in a modified form to all consular officers whose compensation directly, or through fees, range from $1,000 to $2,500. This will include about one half of the total number of consuls, who receive more than $1,000. This change has been gained by reviving in substance an old order of 1873. Vacancies in the service will be filled hereafter by transfer or promotion, by appointment of qualified persons formerly in the employ of the state department, and by appointment of persons selected by the president after passing a non-competitive examination.

WERE SHORT OF FOOD.

The Peary Party Almost Starved When Relief Reached Them.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., Sept. 24.—The steamer Kite has arrived here with Lieutenant Peary and his exploring party on board.

When the Kite reached Whale sound on Aug. 3 Peary and party were found waiting for it, having arrived a few days previous from their overland trip. The expedition to Independence bay, it is learned, was not only not as satisfactory as had been anticipated, but came very near resulting fatally to Peary and the other two on account of lack of food.

ROME OR AVIGNON?

Will Pope Leo's Successor Be Elected in France?

LONDON, Sept. 24.—The Paris correspondent of The Daily News says that the town council of Avignon has agreed to spend £180,000 on the restoration of the pope's palace. A part will be changed into a museum, and the chapel and conclave hall will be ceded to the Vatican. One of the notable personages of Avignon says that the next pope will be elected at Avignon, and will live there.

FOR IRELAND'S FREEDOM.

Chicago Convention Promises to Be Well Attended.

CHICAGO, Sept. 24.—The great national convention of Irish societies will be opened in the Y. M. C. A. hall at 10 a. m. with a large representation of Irish from all parts of the country. Delegates are arriving on every train.

WORK OF AMATEURS.

Hardware Store at Spooner Robbed of a Thousand Dollars.

SHELL LAKE, Wis., Sept. 24.—At Spooner the hardware store of Ed Murphy was broken into, the safe blown open and about $1,000 taken away. It was evidently the work of amateurs.

FILIBUSTERS GO FREE.

Jury Quickly Acquits Those Arrested at Wilmington, Del.

WILMINGTON, Del., Sept. 24.—The jury in the Cuban filibustering case, after being out 50 minutes, returned with a verdict of not guilty.

To Build Japanese Ships.

YOKOHAMA, Sept. 21.—The Japanese parliament has voted a credit of 200,000,000 yen for the building of four ironclad ships, ten coast defence vessels and fifty torpedo boats.

Bank Sold by Sheriff.

SHELL LAKE, Wis., Sept. 24.—The Shell Lake Savings bank, here, which assigned two years ago, and reopened by consent of depositors in March, 1894, was sold by the sheriff under execution.

HALF A CENTURY AGO.

Philadelphia Gentlemen Drank In a Way to Astonish Their Descendants.

Among Americans up to 1855 the use and abuse of strong drink were almost universal, but it certainly affected their health less injuriously than at the present time. The worry and strain of modern business and social life shatter nerves now and lead to dram drinking to repair them. On the contrary, most of the excesses in the old times came after a solid dinner, and three or four hours were spent in rest and conviviality, but the amount drank was enormous. When the exchange was completed, in 1832, a dinner was given, and there was some apprehension that the wine would run out, and a well known broker on the committee expressed his surprise, as the company had not averaged more than three bottles apiece. This would be thought a very large allowance of strong Madeira in these times.

In 1853 the final audit of the accounts of the United States bank was completed, and on behalf of the government James A. Bayard of Delaware, John M. Mason and a Kentucky gentleman named Dukes appeared. It was a mere formality, as the matter had been settled ten years before. John Young acted as clerk. The party met in the northwest chamber of the bank building—now the custom house—at 11 o'clock. A bottle of brandy and six of Madeira were on the table, and after a short inspection of papers the wine was opened, and by 1 o'clock was drank. The day was warm, and a bowl of bishop was ordered, and this was made by the servant with the brandy and a flask of Curacoa.

This was drank, and the three committeemen went to dine with Charles J. Ingersoll about 5 o'clock. They returned, bringing a friend. A dozen Madeira were at hand, and smoking, drinking and whist were in order until 12, when the last bottle was drank, and then Prosser, the cook, brought in cold ducks and a mighty lobster salad. A gallon bowl of brandy punch was made as conducive to digestion. A tumbler of this finished the clerk, who went to sleep and was aroused at daybreak to drink a cup of coffee, and then all went down the steps and walked away in the fresh morning air, none the worse in appearance from the night's potations.

It is apparent that in a life like this it was the survival of the fittest. The steady ones carried off the honors, but gout, gravel and dropsy played havoc with the others, and these complaints were charged to port and Madeira by the doctors, and so the habit of drinking claret and light wines came into fashion.

Gambling was almost universal, and many fortunes of old Philadelphians disappeared in this way.—Philadelphia Times.

INJUNCTION IS OFF.

Judge Sanborn Files His Decision in the Great Northern Case.

ST. PAUL, Sept. [illegible].—The Great Northern Railway company and J. J. Hill, its president, have won the first preliminary battle in the contest precipitated by Thomas W. Pearsall in his application for a preliminary injunction made to Judge Sanborn of the United States circuit court.

The decision has been filed, the court denying the motion of Pearsall the complainant.

The next step will be to hear the case on its merits, for it must be tried according to the procedure vouchsafed to every regular issue that comes before the court.

AUTHORS AND MARRIAGE.

The Single State, It Is Said, Is the Best For Literary Men.

When we compare the restrictions of married men with the opportunities of the bachelor, we see that the latter has well nigh boundless possibilities for going into the social world. He has scores of invitations which will never reach his married friends, and he is generally sought after in society until he is almost threescore and ten. Even married women are more interested in him, whether they have a candidate for his hand or not. They talk with him on a wider range of subjects, in which they know he is surer to be interested than those whose chief thoughts are wrapped up in their families. He may have no more invitations to the most notable gatherings than famous married men, but it is in the less pretentious places that most is learned of human life, and he can call where husbands cannot, and so easily study types denied to them. The world lies open in all directions to him. He is not tethered to a stake. He wishes to study the society of a certain city, to write a novel with a local flavor, and he removes there at his own sweet will. He stays abroad as long as he likes, and if he wishes to study the lower classes there he can live in lodgings among them where he would never take his wife.

When we come to investigate the lives of the greatest authors, we shall find that the majority either did not marry, or they were unhappily mated, and hence thrown on the world for consolation and enlargement of knowledge, or they laid the foundations for greatness before marriage.

Among those we may mention in the class of unmarried authors are Alexander Pope, Thomas Gray, Oliver Goldsmith, Edward Gibbon, Charles Lamb, Lord Macaulay, Washington Irving, Wilkie Collins, Charles Reade. We ought also to add to this list the giant satirist, Dean Swift, for he never lived with his wife, and Lord Byron, who had only about a year's experience of married life.

We find some great names among the list of the unhappily married. The most enthusiastic advocates of matrimony could scarcely have the assurance to say that it aided or was anything else than a clog to Chaucer, Shakespeare, Dickens or Thackeray.

It would be wearisome to give the names of all those authors who laid the foundations of greatness before marriage, and we shall instance only Milton, Goethe and Dante.—Mid-Continent.

Do You Want to Stop Tobacco?

You Can Be Cured While Using it.

The habit of using tobacco grows on a man until grave diseased conditions are produced. Tobacco causes cancer of the mouth and stomach; dyspepsia, loss of memory, nervous affections, congestion of the retina and wasting of the optic nerve; resulting in impairment of the vision, even to the extent of blindness; dizziness, or vertigo; tobacco asthma; nightly suffocation, dull pain in region of the heart, followed later by sharp pains, palpitation and weakened pulse, resulting in fatal heart disease. It also causes loss of vitality.

QUIT BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE.

To quit suddenly is too severe a shock to the system, as tobacco—to an inveterate user, becomes a stimulant that his system continually craves. "BACO-CURO" is a scientific and reliable vegetable remedy, guaranteed to be perfectly harmless, and which has been in use for the last 23 years, having cured thousands of habitual tobacco users—smokers, chewers and snuff-dippers.

You can use all the tobacco you want while taking "Baco-Curo." It will notify you when to stop. We give a written guarantee to permanently cure any case with three boxes, or refund the money with ten per cent interest.

"Baco-Curo" is not a substitute, but a reliable and scientific cure—which absolutely destroys the craving for tobacco without the aid of will power, and with no inconvenience. It leaves the system as pure and free from nicotine as the day you took your first chew or smoke.

Sold by all druggists at $1.00 per box, three boxes (thirty day's treatment and guaranteed cure) $2.50, or sent direct upon receipt of price. Send six two-cent stamps for sample box, booklet and proofs free. Eureka Chemical and Manufacturing Co., Manufacturing Chemists, La Crosse, Wisconsin. [17-24]

A BACHELOR MAID.

Once there lived a bachelor maiden,
  Years and years ago (?),
And her mind with truth was laden,
  But her heart was cold as snow.
For she thought, with good old Plato,
  She could live alone,
So she smiled on many a suitor,
  But her heart was hard as stone.

Came a bachelor man a-suing
  For her friendship true.
This, alas, was her undoing,
  As it might have been with you.
For her friendship still he sued her—
  Such a simple thing—
Till before she knew he wooed her,
  Wooed her with a friendship ring.

Now, although she's fond of Plato,
  Her cold heart's grown warm,
And her theories of living
  Have imbibed a wondrous charm,
For she says: "'Tis human nature,
  Spite of Plato's pen,
Men were made for loving women,
  Women made for loving men."

BUYING SOCIAL POLISH.

An English Couple Who Instruct In the Art of Being Fine.

A new profession for "gentlefolk" has been discovered in London by two impecunious members of the class. They have discovered that there is a livelihood to be obtained by "polishing off" the nouveaux riches and others whose manners "have not that repose which stamps the caste of Vere de Vere." They are a well born, well bred married couple who are still sufficiently young to be adaptable. They have been used to the ways of the leisure class, and they are clever enough to teach them. Anything from the cure of the cockney accent to the proper way to entertain a duke is taught for a "consideration."

The wife describes her share of the work thus: "I generally," she says, "undertake to engage the services of all specialists, such as superior maids, who know what is what and can give judicious and useful hints to their mistress; also manicurists, teachers of deportment and sometimes teachers of elocution. I have cured one very bad case of mere outward vulgarity in three weeks for 10 guineas, and I have corrected a cockney accent in three mornings for 3 guineas, while, on the other hand, a certain city man, who never aspired to anything better than heavy British dinners, Fridays to Mondays at Brighton, and Mansion House balls until he married the daughter of a west end restaurant manager—she knew nothing of life beyond her own narrow sphere—gave us carte blanche to make 'fine folks' of them.

"Not much could be done for him beyond keeping him quiet, but she lent herself to our process. Now they have a very pretty place in Hampshire and entertain some rather nice people in the summer. We ourselves received 100 guineas for our advice, but the husband must have spent over 25,000 in adopting our hints as to mode of living, and he tells us that what he has got for it is worth double as much."—Philadelphia Press.

Twenty-nine nationalities are represented in a New York public grammar school. There are in the primary and grammar departments of this school 1,300 children, and at the last census there were represented among them Hebrews, Italians, Germans, Irish, Greeks, Russians, Poles, French, Scotch, English, Welsh, Swiss, Chinese, Silesians, Assyrians, Tunisians (North Africa), Javanese, Kongo West Indians, Cubans, Norwegians, Swedes, Austrians, Hungarians, Herzegovinians, Wallachians, Moldavians, Egyptians, Danes and Armenians. Not over 10 per cent of these children speak English in their homes, the proportion in the primary being under that in the grammar department over this estimate.

Public Spirited Citizens

Should take a delight in adding anything to our town or county in the educational line which is valuable, unique and is not found in other communities. Our townsman, C. E. Misner, tells us he has an opportunity to place in our city a fine three and a half inch astronomical telescope, which will be for the educational benefit of our citizens. There is not as fine a telescope anywhere in our state, except at Carlton college, Northfield, where they have a fine astronomical observatory. Mr. Misner says that Prof. Hicks' paper, Word and Works, of St. Louis, offers him this fine instrument if he will get up a club of 800 subscribers to the paper. He is willing to put in a considerable part of his time and make a great effort to secure this fine telescope. If our citizens give him proper support it will not be a very hard matter to secure it. Word and Works is a fine monthly magazine and is well worth $1 a year, the subscription price. Mr. Misner will take subscriptions to this paper and every subscriber will have the privilege of looking through the fine telescope, which will be put up at Lynne's photograph gallery, free of charge. You get your money's worth if you do not look through the telescope, for Word and Works is a splendid family monthly and cheap at $1.00, but you have the satisfaction of knowing also that you have contributed toward the addition to our county of a fine instrument, not to be equaled by anything in northwestern Minnesota. Mr. Misner, or his agent, will be around to see the people of the county within the next six weeks and we hope he will receive encouragement wherever he goes. [15-tf]

Notice of Mortgage Sale.

First Publication Aug. 29, 1895.
Last Publication Oct. 10, 1895.

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage made and executed by Henry M. Secord and Mabel A. Secord, his wife, mortgagors, to MINNESOTA SAVING FUND & INVESTMENT COMPANY, mortgagee, dated March first 1890, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the county of Polk, on the 15th day of April, A. D. 1890, at 10:50 o'clock A. M. in Book 52 of Mortgages on Page 110, conveying and mortgaging the following described land and premises, situate in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: Lot Twenty-eight (28) in Block Four (4) Traill's Addition to East Grand Forks according to the plat of said Addition now on file or of record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for said Polk county.

And whereas, by reason of said default, the power in said mortgage has become operative, and the mortgagee has paid out the sum of Thirty and 32-100 Dollars ($30.32) for taxes past due on said premises, and there is now claimed to be due and is due at the date hereof on said mortgage and the debt secured thereby and for taxes, the sum of six hundred and twelve & 97-100 Dollars ($612.97) and no action or proceeding at law has been instituted to recover said mortgage indebtedness or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale therein contained and pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of said above described premises by the sheriff of said Polk county at public auction, at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston, county of Polk, state of Minnesota, on Saturday the 12th day of October A. D. 1895, at ten o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount which will then be due on said mortgage and the debt secured thereby, together with the amount paid for taxes and the costs and charges of foreclosure and Fifty Dollars ($50) attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage.

Dated at Minneapolis, Minn., Aug. 28th A. D. 1895.

WHITTIER'S BOYHOOD.

The Quaker Poet Had but Scant Instruction In His Youth.

In his boyhood Whittier had scant instruction, for the district school was open only a few weeks in winter. He had but few books; there were scarcely 30 in the house. The one book he read and read again until he had it by heart almost was the Bible, and the Bible was always the book which exerted the strongest literary influence upon him. But when he was 14 a teacher came who lent him books of travel and opened a new world to him. It was this teacher who brought to the Whittiers one evening a volume of Burns and read aloud some of the poems, after explaining the Scottish dialect.

Whittier begged to borrow the book, which was almost the first poetry he had ever read. It was this volume of Burns which set Whittier to making verses himself, serving both as the inspiration and the model of his earlier poetic efforts. The Scottish poet, with his homely pictures of a life as bare and as hardy as that of New England then, first revealed to the American poet what poetry really was and how it might be made out of the actual facts of his own life.

That book of Burns' poems had an even stronger influence on Whittier than the odd volume of The Spectator which fell into the hands of Franklin had on the American author whose boyhood is most like Whittier's. Franklin also was born in a humble and hardworking family, doing early his share of the labor and having but a meager education, although always longing for learning. It is true that Irving and Cooper and Bryant did not graduate from college, but they could have done so had they persevered, and Emerson and Longfellow and Hawthorne did get as much of the higher education as was then possible in America. But neither Franklin nor Whittier ever had the chance; it was as much as they could do to pick up the merest elements of an education.—Professor Brander Matthews in St. Nicholas.

OUTNIMRODS OLD NIM.

The Petaluma Pot Hunter Tells a Story of a Wondrous Chase.

Frank Timins, the Petaluma pot hunter, had the floor, and the crowd breathlessly awaited a thrilling story of the chase.

"You want a story of the chase, eh?" repeated Timins. "Well, I'll tell you about the greatest bit of chasin I ever did in my life. I wuz out huntin one day fer quail with my ole muzzle loadin shotgun, when three quail jumped up out of a bush right ahead of me. One flew to the right, one to the left and the other straight ahead, but I got 'em all three."

"Killed three quail going in different directions with a muzzle loading shotgun?" repeated one of his listeners incredulously.

"Yep; that's what I done."

"Your gun must have had three barrels then."

"Nop; only two."

"How did you do it?"

"Well, I killed the one that went to the right with the right barrel; then, quick as a flash, I killed the one that went to the left with the other barrel; then I took after the one that went straight ahead and knocked the stuffin out of it with the ramrod."

"I wouldn't believe that if I told it myself," declared one of the assemblage.

"Huh! That ain't nothin. I killed six quail with one barrel once, and they wuz all flyin in different directions."

"Run 'em all down?"
